THE Czar says in effect "Our sheep do Russian, while England says "Connemara" to Peter Lumsden.

MR. HARRY A. GARFIELD, son of the late president, is to accept a position as teacher at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H.

IN two lectures recently delivered at New Orleans Mrs. Julia Ward Howe netted $600, all of which she donated to the Sculptors Art Union.

A FEW years ago Kansas was treeless. Now it has 20,000,000 trees and 200,000 acres of forest trees planted by the people of the State.

THE latest and most powerful advocate of cremation in England is Canon Liddon, of St. Paul's who is willing his own saber should be put to an end with the fid on, of course.

LONDON'S Queen is sending pipes and tobacco to the British soldiers in Canada in consideration of the generosity of her royal mother, who sent soap and clean pencils to the soldiers in the Soudan.

BISMARCK'S protege, Dr. Schweninger, has organized a mammoth sick company to care and manage an immense establishment at Brunnfels, where he proposed to treat patients after his own peculiar method.

MARK TWAIN is said to have cleared $25,000 from his reading tour this season. This is doubtless the largest sum ever realized by an author, from readings of his own writings since Dickens made his famous American tour.

SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE has written, with his own hand, a letter dated April 20 to the Rev C. D. Stallion of Boston, thanking him for his congratulations on Sir Moses's attainment of the centennial anniversary of his birthday.

HACHIER KINGLEY, son of Charles Kingsley, the English writer has been long enough in this country to make a fortune in Colorado silver mines and is now about to settle in New Haven for the purpose of educating his children there.

BEN WEIR, a commercial traveler who lost all his money in a Cincinnati gambling house, went crazy and killed himself in a Georgia asylum the other day. If Ben Weir had been wise enough instead of losing he would probably be alive and well to-day.

A SOCIETY correspondent reveals the secret that the Duchess of Sutherland has emblazoned her carriages with a dazed coronet over her initials. A. B. C., and probably she marks her initials in the same way as so to have her A. B. C. at her fingers' ends.

MRS. PHOEBE AUSE, of San Francisco, has the good fortune to be the daughter of Mrs. Charles G. Crocker, who gave her a dowry of $600,000, which she has since supplemented by the gift of a completely furnished house, and yet the young woman married an Ause man.

PROF. TOMS, of Covington, Ky., at the advanced age of eighty-three, is living on a moderate income and the reputation of having composed the air of "The Arkansas Traveller," with the accompanying funny dialogue which negro minstrels used to recite forty years ago.

R. H. NEWELL, better known as Orpheus C. Kerr, who as a writer was once very popular, is now broken down, old and despondent. His family have cast him off and he is obliged to sell his manuscript, ones so eagerly sought for, either coldly rejected or mutilated beyond recognition.

THE Chicago Jay Gould with saying: "My idea of a good breakfast is a piece of steak, a mealy baked potato, some Graham bread and a glass of milk; and I feel I can get along very well should have to. Four complete dishes of high flavors are very good, but they are not business.

A SOCIAL trait in spring costumes is that the sleeves are very much trimmed; the trimming is put on the inside front the shoulder to the bend of the arm, and consists of passementerie and fringe, wooden lace or braid; if the latter, it is put on in several rows close together, and frizzed in loops.

JUST now fashion's whim is a tea jacket, made in soft silk, with lace, gold and silver trimings, as dressy as possible. It is thoroughly open-fronted, so actively surprised, that such enormous honors should be conferred upon an animal by no means white, though perhaps a shade or two lighter than an ordinary elephant.

It is said that some Roman statues were found with movable marble wigs, the reason for which is unknown. The statue of Lucilla, wife of the Emperor Lucius Verus, in the museum of the capitol at Rome, has a wig of black marble; then one for ashes off that is of Parian marble. It is believed to represent Julia Domna, the mother of the Emperor Elagabalus, who was fond of the Roman Elagabalus, who was fond of the Roman.

A match game of base ball will be played at Wayne between the Pierce and Wakefield clubs on the afternoon of the Fourth. This will prove to be a contest of great interest. Everybody invited to come and enjoy the 4th.

There are many fine fields of corn in the county, but three fields that we have seen recently are especially worthy of mention: one belonging to J. M. Pulles in Leslie, one to J. G. Hand in Brenna and the other to R. H. Walker in Wayne. It is possible that other fields may be equally as good, but we didn't happen to see them.

There is a fortune in Odo for the man who will invent a non-singing jackass. There is one at Morton's ranch here that shakes night hawks and day scarecrows with his horrible yell. It is said that a donkey will not bray when the sun shines, the cause assigned, perhaps, was that the Chinese take advantage of this and of a heavy storm to get the donkey's ears and tail out of a place where they are not in the way of a good bray.

Four years ago at the present time the place was two miles out in the prairie west of the village of Wayne. In a letter commencing with of that time a great many people are getting it grew in little yards and along the sidewalks to as near this length as it will.

L. L. Smith, the Omaha merchant who has been carry ng on his business for several months on a very extensive style, bringing a speedy revival from all directions, selling some goods at one fourth their cost to attract trade, has failed and skipped away to Canada which is the angry, and does not say hands on him. His failure is simply another illustration of the fact that you can't hunt successfully with a brass hand. The man who does a square business all the time, asking a fair profit on every article sold, is the man who gets to the front. The cutting and shaving business don't pay

Three of the Wayne swarms who went to Wakefield Saturday night went to what they imagined was the Masonic lodge room and donned the regalia preparatory to entering the lodge room. They noticed that the regalia was not exactly like they were accustomed to, but thought as they were minus they ought not to be too critical as to customs. Before they got far they discovered that they lacked the necessary words and tokens and turned to flee. The Old Fellows got out to the door just in time to send the hindmost one down stairs at one jump.

Monday, June 20th, 1892.

Board met.

Present—Mayor Chase, Ellis, Taylor and Wenstrand, trustees, and A. P. Childs, Clerk.

On motion, resolved that as much of section 1 ordinance No. 16 as provides for the erecting of fire cisterns in the business portion of Wayne, be suspended for the ensuing year.

Ayes—Taylor, Wenstrand, Ellis, Chase.

Nays—None.

Carried.

A. P. Childs, Clerk.

The Masonic lodge at Wakefield gave a public installation of officers last Saturday evening and a number of the Wayne members of the fraternity, some of them accompanied by their wives, went down from here to attend the ceremonies. Though to a certain extent taken by surprise by the above news the Wayne members here at the Wakefield lodge made things pleasant for the visitors, and after the installation refreshments were served in the dining room of the Commercial Hotel. The pleasant ride down and back was enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. Ben. Brimson, Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Reeder, Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Leisenring, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. INCIDENTS OF CHILDREN'S LIFE.

How our Children Spend their Hours from the Cradle Upward.

We had no sooner reached Washington on our wedding journey than telegrams came following one another in quick succession, asking Harry to give up the last of his leave of absence and hasten without an hour's delay to the front. I begged or had not to be left behind that I finally prevailed. The result was that I found myself in a few hours on the extreme wing of the army of the Potomac, in an isolated Virginia farm-house, thirteen miles from anyone else. I had no thought him to allow me to come that I did not dare to even to myself the desolation and fright I felt. In the preparation of the horrible raid which my husband had been ordered to make he had sent to cavalry headquarters to provide for my safety. The troops were in reality near, although I could not see them.

The General's old colored servant, Eliza, comforted me, and the Southern family in the house took pity upon my anxiety. It was a sudden change from life of vicissitudes and danger, and I hardly remember the days during the twelve years that followed when I was not in fear of some immediate peril, or in dread of some danger that threatened. After the raid was sailed we spent some delightful weeks together, and when the regular spring campaign began I returned to Washington, where I remained until the surrender of Lee ended the war.

After that we went to Texas for a year, my husband still acting as staff-general in command of volunteers. In Texas we remained in Galveston, the autumn of the same year found us in Kansas, where the General resumed charge of an 8th regular cavalry, of which he had been assigned with the rank of Brevet-major-general in
