A Tale of the Early Settlers of Louisiana.

BY AUSTIN C. BURDICK

"Simon Lesley," she said, in a pleasant tone, "leave you from your professed love of John, but they only add to my misery. Your manner was a sufficient question. Where is my husband?"

"Your husband?" Simon seemed startled for the moment, but recovered himself quickly. "What should I know of him?"

"But you can find out, if you wished, my husband, because, slightly, in the city of New Orleans."

"I do not."

"But you know he was robbed by the Indians on the night that I was."

"Why should I know?"

"Simon, it is strange that you have never mentioned the common report of my robbery."

"Indeed—indeed, I had enough to think of without that. My love for you has embittered my every thought and filled me with regression."

"Then you know nothing of him?"

"I say I do not."

"Your voice lacks the ring of truth."

"Nor your eyes the light of love."

"Simon, I know that you have taken my husband from me, and I know that I was a fool to love you."

"Never mind. If you love me, that is enough. Now, forgive me, and I will do anything when you ask."

"I will be back in a day."

"As you will. I—I must leave. I can not further—"

"Simon, I—"

"I must leave you."

"Very good, Jay, so you can, didn't fade away, and I will be back in a day."

"Simon, I—"

IT IS OVER.

Another campaign, with all its turmoil, bombast and strenuous activity, has been relegated to the list of the things that were. In the present instance no great issues were at stake and the results urged by one of personal choice and personal disappointments. Candidates of average morals and ability have been defeated and accused of dishonest actions and motives. It is ever thus. It is regarded by some as one of the necessary features of a campaign. Our partisans are supposed to be upright and intelligent, while the opposition are credited with all the lower instincts. Campaigns, as they are conducted, naturally engender much bitterness of feeling, and the effect is sometimes far-reaching. The present issue of the Republican-Democrat arrived late on the scene, did not affiliate to any great extent and therefore has nothing to smooth over. This is not offered as an evidence of constitutional weakness, for that lacks a great deal of being our forte. On future occasions, as we become acclimated to the political conditions, there will be no complaint that this paper is addicted to outbreaks of temper. It expects to be right in the front ranks, first convinced by analysis of what is right, and then fighting for that right until the last dog is hung.

HOLDING THEIR OWN

For some time past it has been very evident that the losers in South Africa were not been being whipped. Reports which reached here from English resources have, until recently, attempted to convey the impression that the war is over but the shouting. The utter fallacy of these claims is shown by where regiments of English and diers and thousands of horses being calmly taken into the camp by sturdy laughers. The sentiment of the people of this country is overwhelmingly on the side of the South African patriots and each new burst of activity is greeted with the hope that they may yet wrest the rights of liberty from their oppressors. The struggle reminds more than one parallel to one that was taking place on American soil about one hundred and twenty five years ago. The superior resources and numbers of the invading forces, combined against the pluck and patriotism of the colonists, and we have hopes that the latter will again prove triumphant. We do not feel that there is anything about the situation that will warrant American interference or intervention, but at the same time there is nothing to compel us to withhold our good will and best wishes. England is now forced to confront a decided reaction in sentiment at home, brought about by evidence of poor management and enormous expenditure. The war cannot long be continued in the face of the opposition that is being aroused, and they may eventually have to let loose just as they did to America. So mote it be.

PURSUIT VS. POSSESSION.

We observe in our Hoskins correspondence that the literary society at that place will debate to night on the time-honored question, "Resolved that there is more pleasure in pursuit than in possession." Who has been a participant in hymen discussions, and has not grappled with the same question? And who, after all, has any knowledge of which affords the greatest pleasure? Nearly everyone is will ing to take it for granted that possession is the thing to be desired, and this is what gives pleasure to the pursuit. The testimony of those who have reached the goal, either in financial matters or in personal honors, does not, however, bear out the satisfaction supposed to exist in possession. A life is dedicated to the acquirement of riches or glory and reaches a measure of fulfillment only to find the future life a question to be gravely and acutely considered. All the wealth of Jay Gould could not lengthen his career upon earth; all the love and honor bestowed upon McKinley could not combat the certainties of death; all the genius of Edison will avail us nothing when the final summons shall come. This absolute certainty of death would ever loom up as a nightmare to balk the apparent fulfillment of desire. Religious belief and faith in future conditions may alleviate the horror, to a measure, but is it, after all, only a philosophy, if being assigned to the invisible, "Faith is the evidence of things not seen." Faith, which is but a mere wisp of straw, may stand on it.—Boston Advertiser.

suit or possession is largely imaginary, and depends very much upon individual characteristics.

"I told you....."

How would you like to be the bitter fellow?

"Don't criticise boys. They are trying."—Philadelphia.

Queer that it always has to snow just about election time.

Now we can talk it over and tell just how it happened.

The history of politics shows that some one is defeated about every time there is a contest.

There is said to be glory even in defeat, but very few men are philosophers enough to bring it into immediate use.

First man on an outlooking: "I wish I had declined that little bet."

Second man in solitude: "I wish I had not been so foolish as to make that bet."

Always Willing to Oblige.

"It was a dreary town and a long limbed Texan was loafing across the public square toward the courthouse with a revolver in his hand when he was accosted by a man who asked:

"Can you do you way to the court house?"

"Yes, sir; I can," was the reply.

"Going to shoot anybody?"

"Yes, sir; Lawyer Johnson. If it hadn't been for him, I shouldn't have lost my case yesterday. Yes, sir; going to fill a man full of lead."

"Are you in any great hurry about it?"

"No special hurry, but when I have shooting on hand I like to get it off my mind as soon as possible."

"Of course; but, you see, Lawyer Johnson is now arguing a case for me and won't be through for 40 minutes. He's going to win it for sure if not interrupted, and if you will only hold on for a while you will do me a great favor."

"Why, certainly; glad you mentioned it; no hurry about the shooting so as it comes off today. Why, you can wait on me. Have a drink with you? With the greatest of pleasure, and if Johnson is a particular friend of yours I'll shoot him as softly as I can and give him every show to die like a gentleman."—Boston Globe.

The Useful Telephone.

Two young ladies on St. Paul street went to the theater the other evening, and their father thinking they had a lotsleep, went to bed at the usual hour, and the servants all left. When the ladies returned, they rang the bell repeatedly and beat on the door, but got no answer. Finally they began to fear mobs, when a neighbor who had been awakened by the din appeared to relate as his window opposite and asked what was the matter.

"We are locked out and cannot awake anyone," came the reply in duet.

"Wait a minute," said the quick witted man on the other side of the street. "Your father has a telephone in his room, and I will call him up." So the control was called.

"Give me number —," said the neighbor.

As soon as the bell sounded in the room of the sleeping father he awoke with a start and ran to the telephone.

"Hello, what is the matter?"

"Is that you, Johnson?"

"Yes; what is wanted?"

"Your daughters are at the front door trying to get in. Open the door. Good night."—Baltimore Sun.

A Suggestion.

"What is a skeleton? Can you tell me, children?" asked a teacher of her Sunday school class.

The infant class looked troubled. Their ideas on the subject were of the most vague description, and, strange to tell, hardly worth mentioning. The question jumped down the class aisle to the very last, meeting only a blank look or a shake of the head, until at last the smallest, lot of all, ventured a reply. "I guess, Mis' Teacher, it's a man without any meat on it."—Boston Advertiser.

"HEAP SMELL."

The Indian Knew What He Wanted and Where to Get It.

Some Indians from Buffalo Bill's Wild West, arrived in Indian costume and attracted an exceptional amount of free press, were taking in the sights of the city one afternoon. They strolled down Walnut street, single file, and, impelled by a desire to see some and then keep a good "medicine" when something that pleased him caught his eye. They halted in front of a drug store and gazed at the window display for a moment. Then the Sioux filed into the establishment and began to look around.

The clerk thought the place was go ing to be besieged and that he must hurry to lose no time in waiting on the "first chief," who stood an imposing, if dressed long with the customary Indian greeting of "How!" the clerk emptied his cornucopia enough to ask the Indian what he wanted.

"Heap smell," was the reply.

Directing to the Indian's desire to a showcase, the clerk produced a bottle of some. The brave took it eagerly, removed the wrapper, opened it and put into the nostrils of the Indian. With a deep grunt of displeasure he handed it back to the drug clerk. With a disappointed look he remarked, "Heap peek."

The clerk began to tremble, and the Indian pointed to a roof, muttering in the showcase. The bottle of perfume was handed to him. The Indian held it to both bowls for a moment, slowly sniffing it. He slowly replaced the stopper, emptied the bottle in his pocket, and with a long grin at the hostile gave a grunt of satisfaction, handed the clerk some money and left his band and drove out of the store to the delight of the frightened clerk, who had not been in the practice of waiting on real Indians.—Kansas City Journal.

ANECDOTES OF FORREST.

Why the Confederate Leader Declined to Correct His Spelling.

"General Forrest of the Confederate army," said an ex Confederate officer, "was a military genius of the first rank. Without previous training or any developed taste in that direction he went into the army from a place as overseer and attained commanding rank absolutely by merit. Rough and uncouth at first, he became in time the country gentleman which it was a pleasure to meet and to know. I remember on one occasion some time after the war coming up the Potomac with him. I wanted to introduce a young woman who was under my escort. He said he was flattered by the request, but that he could not meet her unless she knew perfectly well that he was and that he was not held in high esteem by the northern people chiefly on account of the Fort Pillow affair. I assured him that she was fully apprised of his record, and then he went with me to meet her. And she told me later she had never met a more attractive man.

"Earlier in his career—that is, before he had learned to spell—he was asked by a young lady to put his autograph in her album. He wrote his name as requested and added to it his title, 'major general of cavalry,' as he spelled it. The lady called his attention to it in a very delicate way, and he looked at it a moment, and with a full consciousness that he was breaking to that regard and with a beautiful and scarcely to be expected humility he said, 'Let it stand to show how ignorant General Forrest was.' There are not many men who would have done that, I imagine, and it was the little things that showed the man's true greatness."—New York Sun.

BALLOON FLIES AWAY

NINE PEOPLE LAND SAFELY NEAR HESCADERO, CAL.

Passengers Give Description of the Perilous Trip—Says the World Not Yielding Much Adventure Again for Any Consideration.

The alone occupants of the car in the balloon which swept from San Francisco Saturday landed safely Sunday in this city. The balloon was hundred miles Southeast, fifty miles from the city, and had a short distance from the Southern Pacific line. The aeronauts were all safe and in no time was seen of an hour the balloon was after filled with free on the prospect of being dragged across rough country from the car. Nine men were in the car, besides the balloon's crew, in the balloon dropped close to the earth at the south, but some seems each time to rise again after. Finally a strong gust of wind set the balloon and carried it back over the land and after dragging the car through the tops of a small wood it settled down gently in the open Hercadero.

"It was a terrible experience," said Dolge, "and I would not undergo the same adventure again for any consideration. Everybody was more or less sick. We were wrecked in the woods. One or two men were so much sick that all in the bottom of the basket fainted, one got into

The actual execution of the entire was over within the space of a minute. Czolgosz should take place among the were expecting Oct. 28, but Tuesday was fixed for Tuesday, the date set in the law for the time a criminal should be executed.

On the morning of the execution no one except the officials was allowed to enter the prison gate, and even the presence of the officials was not sufficient to open the heavy doors to other persons. There had been rumors in Auburn that a mob would attempt to lynch the murderer. The idea of mob violence was discussed and certain precautions were taken to prevent it. But there was no need of the Auburn authorities to apprehend any violence. Czolgosz was quietly executed and the end came without any demonstration. The news of the execution did not reach the city of Auburn for some time after the event. The bulletins were posted in the city from time to time, and the news reached the city of Auburn at 7:30 o'clock. Even then there was no excitement. The news was received with a sigh of relief by the people of Auburn, who felt that the city had been disgraced by the presence of the assassin of the president. Czolgosz was executed in the electric chair in the death house of the Auburn prison. The death house is a small structure, which formerly was used as a dissecting room. It is located in the yard of the prison, and is a short distance from the main building. The execution was witnessed by about 50 persons, all of whom were officials or physicians. The execution was performed by Superintendent Edward Davis, who was assisted by Dr. Charles Gerry, the prison physician, and by Dr. Carlo Matteo, a physician of Auburn.

Czolgosz was pronounced dead at 7:18 o'clock, and his body was cut down from the chair and placed on a table in the death house. The body was then placed in a coffin and taken to the morgue, where it was prepared for burial. The coffin was then taken to the prison cemetery and buried in a plot of ground in the rear of the prison. The grave was then filled in and the place where the body of the assassin of our president was buried was made level with the surrounding ground. The place where the body of Czolgosz was buried is not marked by any stone or other mark, and it will be impossible for any one to find the place where the body of the assassin of our president was buried.

A Visiting Woman, Callous Sense.

There is an F street real estate man whose pretty house is in one of the pleasantest streets in the older part of town. He is just an ordinary man, with no particular sympathy for the foibles of nervous women; he has been married 18 years, and his wife is one of those women who daily feed in all sorts of painful knickknacks and frightful forebodings. She always makes her will when she starts on a journey, and she never fails to forgive all her enemies before she trusts herself behind any kind of a horse. There has not been a night in all the 18 years of her married life that she haven't either smelled smoke or heard burglars. Last week, in the middle of one night, the husband felt the familiar pinch which for 18 years has children his arm. He heard the familiar voice say the same old words:

"Sh, Charles! Do get up! I smell smoke!"

As usual, for after 18 years of that sort of thing even an ordinary man learns not to argue with a woman, he climbed obediently out of bed and looked to the window. The street below was full of people, and a fire engine was pulling away at the corner.

"Oh, Charles!" called the wife, "is the house on fire?"

Fifteen years have made Charles' feelings on politics or his love.

"No," said he brutally; "street goods; only the house is on fire at least." Now perhaps you'll stop worrying."—Washington Star.
