MEETING OF GENERALS SHAFTER AND MORAL AT THE CAPTUALTION OF SANTIAGO.

General Shafter and General Morfi met at the capture of Santiago, and the meeting was a most interesting one. The two generals discussed the details of the campaign and the capture of the city. General Shafter was in excellent health, but General Morfi was suffering from a severe illness. The meeting was held in a tent and was attended by several other officers. The capture of Santiago was a decisive victory for the United States Army and marked the end of the Spanish-American War.

The meeting of Generals Shafter and Morfi at the capture of Santiago was a significant event in the history of the United States Army. General Shafter's leadership during the campaign was widely praised, and his capture of Santiago was a major achievement. General Morfi's illness during the campaign was a serious setback for the Spanish forces. The meeting provided an opportunity for the two generals to discuss the campaign and the capture of the city in detail.

FOR THE LARGEST NUMBER.

General Shafter's army was the largest of the two armies. It consisted of approximately 15,000 men, while General Morfi's army consisted of approximately 10,000 men. The larger size of Shafter's army was a significant advantage during the campaign. The army was well-trained and equipped, and it was able to overcome the Spanish forces in a decisive battle.

THEIR OWN HEALTH.

General Shafter's health was in excellent condition during the campaign. He was able to lead his army in person and was instrumental in the capture of Santiago. General Morfi's health, on the other hand, was in poor condition. He was suffering from a severe illness and was unable to lead his army in person. This was a major disadvantage for the Spanish forces.

WHOLE ARMY IS SICK.

The capture of Santiago was a major victory for the United States Army, but it was also a major setback for the Spanish forces. The Spanish army was in poor health and was unable to mount a successful defense. The capture of the city was a decisive blow to the Spanish army and marked the end of the Spanish-American War.

NOT A PERFECTLY WELL MAN.

General Morfi was not a perfectly well man during the campaign. He was suffering from a severe illness and was unable to lead his army in person. This was a major disadvantage for the Spanish forces. The capture of Santiago was a major setback for the Spanish army and marked the end of the Spanish-American War.
