WOMAN'S ERROR

By Marion V. Hollis

THEY had been together for three years, and she had never seen him before. He was a young man, about thirty, with dark hair and eyes, and a pleasant smile. She was a young woman, about twenty, with blonde hair and a serious expression. They were standing in a room that was dimly lit, with a single lamp casting a soft glow. She was looking at him, and he was looking at her. There was a moment of silence between them, and then she spoke.

"What is your name?" she asked, her voice steady and clear. He looked at her for a moment, and then he answered. "My name is John," he said, and he smiled at her. She looked at him for a moment, and then she spoke again. "Where do you live?" she asked. He looked at her for a moment, and then he answered. "I live in the city," he said, and he smiled at her. She looked at him for a moment, and then she spoke again.
