Dewey.

When tales of heroes are repeated,
Of deeds which will forever live,
What tribute may nation give
To him who held his duty first?

To him who won a deathless name
By doing what before him lay,
What homage may a people pay
And add an instant to his fame?

For him no glory it imparts
To hat his victory with acclaim;
Enough for him to know his name
Is written on the people's hearts.
