

The 2 Johns Celebrate the 4th!

We celebrated in that interesting town of Carroll in the afternoon and had a grand time and a fine dinner at the hotel. We took with us our own Japanese fans, intending to give one to every good-looking woman we would meet. We were sorry to find that did not give out, the reason they failed to get a fan was that we ran out of fans. We came home from the party in the morning and thought we would spend the balance of the day in Wayne. But when we tried to find a fan, we found that the Japanese fans were all used up. We were sorry that we did not bring more with us. We will be sure to have a few more with us next time and we will be sure to give one to every good-looking woman we meet.

CHAPTER X

THE first thing that struck my attention when I stepped out of the train at the little station in the heart of the country, was the silence. It was a strange, oppressive silence, a silence that seemed to be holding its breath. The only sounds I could hear were the distant, muffled notes of a church bell, and the occasional rustle of leaves in the wind.

I had heard that the country was beautiful, that the people were kind and hospitable. But this silence, this stillness, was not what I had expected. It was a silence that felt like a heavy blanket, one that was meant to keep me from seeing, from hearing, from knowing anything about the people and the place I had just arrived in.

I looked around me. The houses were simple, one-story affairs with gabled roofs and small windows. There were no signs of wealth or luxury. The streets were dirt roads, and the only vehicles I saw were a few old-fashioned wagons pulled by mules or horses. It was a picture of a remote, isolated community.

As I walked towards the town, I felt a sense of unease. The silence was not just a passive state; it felt like an active force, a force that was watching me, that was waiting for an opportunity to reveal itself. I knew that there was something going on here, something that was being kept hidden from the world.

The sun was setting, and the sky was a deep, dark blue. The silence was still there, still as death. I knew that I was about to uncover a secret, a secret that would change everything I had ever known.

It was a quiet, unassuming town, but the atmosphere was thick with mystery. The people seemed to be of a different breed, their eyes holding a depth of knowledge that was not open to all. I had heard rumors of strange disappearances, of people who had been seen in places where they had never been before. The rumors spoke of a hidden world, a world that existed just beneath the surface of the ordinary life.

I had a feeling that I was about to be drawn into a web of secrets and lies. The silence was a trap, a trap that was designed to keep me from seeing the truth. I knew that I had to be careful, that I had to be smart. I had to learn the rules of this town, the rules of this game.

The night was dark, and the stars were out. I had a sense of being watched, of being followed. I knew that I was not alone, that there were other people out there who were just as curious as I was. I had a feeling that I was about to be drawn into a game, a game that would test my wits and my courage.

I had heard that the town was a place of secrets, a place where the truth was hidden from the world. I had a feeling that I was about to uncover a secret, a secret that would change everything I had ever known.

One Woman's Letter

"I suffered with two of the most distressing diseases for two years before I found relief until I used the Pinkham remedies."

"My trouble was enlargement of the uterus. I suffered terribly, could not sleep nights and thought sometimes that death would be such a relief."

"To-day I am a well woman and do my own work and have no pain."

"I used four bottles of Lydia's Pinkham Vegetable Compound and three packages of Sanative Wash and cannot praise the medicine enough."

What makes you look that way? There certainly must be some good reason for it. If your tongue is coated, if you are bilious, if your head aches, if your food rests heavy on your stomach, and if you are constipated, then the whole trouble is with your liver.

What you need is a good liver pill, an easy liver pill, a purely vegetable liver pill: You need a box of Ayer's Pills, that's what you need. These pills cure constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, and sick headache.
