Nebraska Windmills Pump Water in India

Natives of Balasore, India, were curious when a long steel frame and a strange looking circle of fans were unloaded at the boys' industrial school, a government institution. They were astonished and shook their heads in disapproval when they were told the wheel mounted on the tower would change wind into power and draw water from the ground. They watched the erection of the strange contrivance with eager curiosity. When later the erection was completed under the direction of the superintendent of the school, an American, the wind began to turn the wheel and water flowed from the pump spout. The astonished natives hurried off to tell their neighbors a miracle had happened.

The incident was related in a letter that recently came to a Beatrice windmill company. The correspondent is the head of the boys' school, whom the government of India recently employed to give a series of lectures and demonstrations on rural water supply and sewer disposal plants for India at a special conference of public works engineers at Patna. "Pumps and windmills are simple and thoroughly understood in the United States," he wrote, "but in India they are new and complicated. Much tube and tubular well equipment has been carelessly installed in India in such a way that repeated

AN EASTER BUTTERFLY PARTY

ITS bunnies and eggs, Easter lilies and Easter togs again, for April 5th is already showing up on the calendar. And since this is the season when we all emerge from our winter cocoons and begin to flit about, why not open the social season with an Easter Butterfly party.
Your house, of course, is already in its spring-time dress, your bulbs are beginning to bloom in joyous mood, and you may add to the spring-like spirit by adding sprays of blossoms, real or artificial, to your decorations. The color-scheme may be that of the butterfly, which includes a bewildering assortment of delicate shades, with here and there a touch of deep gold and black. Narrow streamers of blue, pink, violet and yellow crepe-paper may be draped from the four corners of the room to the center light. The light, itself, may be covered with a soft, graceful fringe of pink crepe-paper banded at the top with a butterfly border.
Butterflies, Blossoms and Bridge
Wire some natural branches, profusely covered with pink blossoms cut from decorated crepe-paper, to the chain above the light, and suspend butterflies from the branches by means of black threads, which are almost invisible.
If your entertainment is to be cards, make tallies of violet or yellow mounting-board cut into the shape of butterflies; outline them with black and gold water-color and tie with narrow black satin ribbon. The prizes may be dainty handkerchiefs gathered into the shape of butterflies using a slender vial of perfume for the body of the butterfly.
Spring flowers make the most charming centerpiece, for either the dining-room table or for the individual card tables. Cut a few butterflies from crepe-paper napkins and attach them to slender wires so that they seem to hover over the flowers. If you prefer an artificial centerpiece you may make a pretty pink rose from crepe-paper and decorate in the same manner with butterflies.
An attractive and original favor is a small butterfly net, made of gauze attached to a slender stick. A tulip bow is tied to the stick and the net itself filled with assorted sunshine candies.

Butterflies Must Eat
Your refreshments, of course, should be as dainty and colorful as your decorations—and they must taste very spring-like and delectable. Here is a menu that is simple to prepare—the tested recipes are designed to serve eight persons.
Menu
Butterfly Salad
Toasted Buttered Crackers
Stuffed Olives
Peach Whipped Cream in Butter-ly Baskets
Coffee
Salted Nuts
Butterfly Salad: Cut Hawaiian sliced pineapple in halves, and place the two halves reversed on a salad plate garnished with crisp lettuce hearts, so that the halves form the wings of the butterfly. Mold cream cheese to which butter-coloring and cayenne pepper have been added, into a slender pointed roll to form the body of the butterfly. A very small stuffed olive may be used for the head. Garnish with mayonnaise.*

Traded Capitol Site for Yoke of Oxen
A man by the names of Giles, who once owned the land on which the ten million dollar Nebraska capitol now stands, traded it for a yoke of oxen. The fact is attested by D. Rutherford of Holt county whose grandmother married Giles.
The statement is acceptable when it is remembered that there was no Lincoln when the capital city was located. A long struggle ensued in the legislature over the location of the capital. The North Platte section was arrayed against the South Platte. Omaha was the choice of the North Platte country, Nebraska City of the South Platte. When it was seen neither could win, though the South Platte had the most votes, Omaha threw its strength to a new location somewhere in the Salt Creek valley to be called Lincoln. They thought that the name would be repugnant to many of the residents of the South Platte section who were known to be friendly to Douglas and hostile to Lincoln. But to the surprise of Omaha, Nebraska City accepted the compromise and a committee was named by the legislature to go out and select a location for the capital.
The Salt Creek valley was noted for its deposits of salt. Many believed a great salt industry would be developed there. Settlers and Indians came long distances to get the salt in its unrefined form. The site was selected and the first capitol building was erected in 1869, two years after Nebraska became a state. In 1889 the way to a new building which also bowed in time to progress. On February 20, 1919, Governor McKelvie signed the bill for a new state capitol. Ground was broken on Arbor Day, 1922. The new building was built around the old and the old one used in part until space in the new building became available.

Nebraska Is Eleventh for Irrigated Lands

Only ten states of the union have more irrigation than Nebraska. In order of acres under irrigation they are: California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Oregon, Texas, Arizona and New Mexico. Nebraska comes eleventh, with 528,680 acres.
Development of irrigation in the state has been steady and constant. In 1920 the census bureau reported 42,690 acres of Nebraska land under irrigation.
The number of irrigation enterprises in Nebraska increased from 470 in 1920 to 716 in 1930, a 52.3 per cent increase. This increase is due largely to interest in pump irrigation. In the lower Platte valley, and especially in Buffalo county where there are over 300 such plants in operation, there is sustained interest in pump irrigation. Plants are installed and operated at a moderate cost and practically assure a crop.
The upper Platte valley is assured sufficient water from Pathfinder dam in Wyoming, and this water supply has created a condition exceptionally favorable to production of sugar beets. A seven million dollar beet crop in that section in 1920 justified
