Wayne Host of Meet Saturday

Mitchell, Bassett, Champs Last Year Will Defend Titles Here

Wayne will be hosts to one of the largest invitation track meets in the state Saturday, May 22. This is an annual affair and is being sponsored by the Wayne Young Business Men's club. Each year the meet has become larger and attracted better athletes.

Last year Mitchell won in the class A competition. They have entered again this year and are hoped to repeat the win. They were class B winners at the state meet last week with 34 points and their nearest competitor had 14. Other teams which have entered in class A are Grand Island, O'Neil, Fremont, Neligh, Plainview, Ponca, Wisner and Wayne.

Bassett tracksters are the defending Class B champions. They will be there along with about 15 or 20 other teams of this class including Winnebago, Orchard, Sergeant, Bancroft, Emerson, Winside, Ansley, Elgin, Verdere, Walthill, Coleridge, Chambers, Randolph, Tilden, Lyons and the local Training school. The committee is expecting several other teams to enter before Saturday.

Observes Twenty-fifth Anniversary in Business

Twenty-five years on one corner is the record of Fred L. Blair clothing store owner, who came to Wayne twenty-five years ago today and established his business in a one story wooden building on the present site of his store.

Mr. Blair said that he and his partner, John Mulloy, arrived in Wayne on the afternoon train. It had been raining all week and on the main street a wagon loaded with groceries drawn by a powerful black team was mired in the mud. "My first impression of Wayne was to turn around and board the freight train just leaving and go back home," Mr. Blair said. In 1917 Mr. Blair bought this partner's interest in the business.

He commented on the big change in Wayne since that first day he saw the town in 1912. He said that he was well satisfied with the town except with the street lighting system so he bought the first electric light which is now in front of the Presbyterian church, placing it in front of his store. The new light caused a lot of comment and the first time it was turned on a crowd turned out to see Mayor J. H. Kate throw on the switch.

The three lots north of the clothing store were vacant until Dr. T. B. Heckert, Frank Shuttle, and Mr. Blair built the present brick buildings housing the Modé, Safeway grocery, and Wayne Candy Kitchen in 1923. In 1925, he built the present building and in 1927 Mr. Blair built the Wayne Creamery building. The old Union hotel was torn down in 1928 and the Gay Theater building owned by E. E. Galley was built.

Mr. Blair said two good slogans which the graduating classes might well heed are "Keep your umbrella up when the sun is shining - it might rain." The other is "Take care of your business while you are young so business will take care of you when you are old."

Son born to Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Auker of Portland, Ore., Monday. Auker is a former Wayne boy.

C. E. Janssen Receives Two-year Sentence

98 Students Are Degree Candidates

Largest Senior Class in School History to Graduate

Considered the largest graduating class in the history of Wayne State Teachers college, ninety-eight seniors will don mortar boards to receive diplomas this year as announced today by school authorities. This year's total number of seniors shows an increase of 12 per cent over last year's class.

Sixty-two seniors will receive their degrees at the commencement exercises to be held at the college auditorium next Thursday morning. Others who complete their courses of study in July or August will receive their degree this summer. However, they will march in the procession next Thursday and be seated with their class in the auditorium throughout the exercises.

"Prepare to Live" will be the theme of the commencement address to be given by Dr. Charles E. Schofield, president of the Iliff School of Theology in Denver, next Thursday morning.

The baccalaureate service which the college and training school graduating classes will hold in conjunction takes place this Sunday evening at the college auditorium. Dr. Paul Johnston of Lincoln will be the evening speaker.

Of the total graduating class, eighty-three students will receive an A B degree in education. Eight students will be awarded a B S degree in education and seven students will be granted a B F A degree in education.

An unusually large proportion of the class are already elected to positions for next year and many others are being sought by school boards. The placement bureau is actively interested in placing these graduates and is meeting with a high degree of success.

Miss Sophie Damme was tendered the University Tuition Scholarship but was unable to accept it. Miss Margaret Meyer, second in rank, was then nominated for the scholarship and has been approved by the dean of the graduate school of the University of Nebraska.

THE FOOD PRIMER
D stands for Dessert
Delectable bite
DeLovely at dinner
Delicious delight.
BY BETTY BARCLAY

"Dessert" often means, fruit-flavored gelatin these days, because of its delicious flavor and the ease with which the housewife can prepare it. Yet since modern science has made gelatin so delicious a food, it is often regarded merely as a decorative dessert or a "carrier" for salad ingredients. People eat it because they like its taste and are often unaware of its very real food value. In reality, it is pointed out by the Royal Institute, when gelatin is eaten as a dessert it is a source of the most important body building and repair foods. Gelatin belongs to that great family of protein-rich foods whose other prominent members are milk, eggs, cheese, meat and fish. It contains food elements which build and repair the tissues of the body and promote its growth. Not only is it one of the easiest of all foods to digest, but it is an important factor in aiding the digestion of other foods. For that reason, gelatin is often added to milk in infant feeding, and is used in the menu of invalids. Of recent years a great deal of progress has been made in determining the value of gelatin as a food. It has long been recognized as a nitrogenous food, but it remained for modern science to discover that it is rich in one protein element which is indispensable for the growth of children. That element is Lysine. Since this factor is extremely valuable to the proper development of the child and since gelatin is so rich a source, it is no wonder that child specialists are advocating the inclusion of gelatin in the child's diet. It is no wonder then, that gelatin dessert enjoys so prominent a place in the daily menu of all people, adults as well as children, sick as well as healthy people, especially nowadays, when it may be had in seven fruit flavors in the convenient quick-setting prepared form, each package containing pure high grade gelatin of the first extraction, pure cane sugar and delicate real fruit flavor. In gelatin dessert we have a food which combines to delight the eye and palate while at the same time it provides all the benefits of its high nitrogenous and protein content. To show how easily it is prepared, these are the instructions: Pour contents of one package of fruit-flavored gelatin dessert into bowl. Add 1 cup (1/2 pt.) boiling water; stir until completely dissolved. Add 1 cup (1/2 pt.) cold water. Stir and pour into molds. Chill until firm. The same amount of fruit juice or other liquids may be used in place of cold water.

"FEELS GRAND TO BE OUT OF THE 'ALL THREE' CLASS!"

"MY 117-INCH WHEELBASE NASH COST ME ONLY A FEW DOLLARS MORE THAN THOSE SMALLER CARS!"

Before you make any decisions... read this experience of Mr. Harry V. Kegel

"Remember the old saying, 'What you don't know won't hurt you'? Well, that fits me. I didn't realize how much I wanted a big car until I got one. The way my Nash LaFayette '400' gets away in traffic, the way it just hums along the road... the extra room in it... the substantial, luxurious 'feel' of it—it's hard for me to express just how pleased I am. Believe me, it feels grand to be out of the 'All Three' class!"

NASH

*FOR AS LITTLE AS $1 OR $2 A MONTH EXTRA you can get out of the "All Three" class. A check-up recently made in ten representative cities shows that the Nash LaFayette "400" 4-Door Sedan with trunk DELIVERS for just a FEW dollars more than the similarly equipped 4-Door sedans of the "All Three" small cars. In many places, the SLIGHT difference in price amounts to just $1 or $2 a month extra on your time payments.

Intervention Warfare

In the past, labor troubles have usually consisted of disagreements between employers and unions. In the future, some of our bitterest labor troubles may be the fruits of a remarkable phenomenon — disagreements between different kinds of unions.

Signs of this have already appeared in a few strikes — the ship strike in New York, shoe strike in Maine and the automobile strike, for instance. Principals in the inter-union argument are the Committee on Industrial Organization, headed by John L. Lewis, and the old American Federation of Labor, led by William Green.

Seeds of discord between these two groups were sown long ago — the A. F. of L. is the staunch defender of the craft union — a union composed of men doing the same kind of work, though they may be employed in a hundred different industries. CIO dream is the "one big union" — for example, all the automobile workers should be enlisted in one union, all the steel workers in another, and so on, irrespective of what their jobs were in these industries.

Now every time a labor controversy starts, representatives of the CIO and of the A. F. of L. immediately appear on the scene, attempt to influence workers to join their organizations. In many instances, CIO and A. F. of L. are farther apart and are more bitterly opposed to each other, than are the strikers and the companies. Matters occasionally reach a comic opera stage — for example, recent cases are on record such as where a CIO man picketed a shop as being unfair to organized labor, and was in turn picketed by an A. F. of L. man with a banner declaring the same shop fair.

So far, the CIO has had the best of the battle. But the A. F. of L. has not hoisted the flag of surrender. It is far bigger than the CIO, has great prestige. Within it are some of the richest, best-established unions. Big A. F. of L. hopes are pinned on a change in the National Labor Relations Act (Wagner Act) which it hopes Congress will endorse.

As now constituted this Act forces elections among workers when trouble appears in an industry. These elections are secret, are impartially conducted, and workers vote for what ever union they want. Union getting a majority vote is the legal representative of all the workers, and other unions are out. A. F. of L. wants an amendment to the Act which would permit a craft union to represent its members in an industry, irrespective of what union speaks for other workers in the same industry. It may be that such an amendment is necessary to the very life of A. F. of L. — in an industry, craft workers, who are usually highly skilled men, are in the minority, and can easily be outvoted.

The company union Business Week says, is definitely on the wane, may entirely disappear before long. The workers just don't like it. Recent tests came in the Packard motor company election held by the Labor Relations Board when workers had their choice between a company union and a CIO union. CIO pumpe out on top, by a four to one majority.

So the inter-union warfare will involve only the two major groups — CIO and A. F. of L. Both are girding for the fray, both realize that they are in for real action. Both have been raising money — nowadays unions are big business and require tremendous war chests. Both are conducting most intensive membership drives in years.

What influence a labor "civil war" will have on labor's demands on management remains to be seen. Under any circumstances, the feeling is growing that legislation imposing responsibilities on unions as well as corporations must be passed.

Point Goes to His Employee A lonely fight in this complex industrial world is Henry Ford. Past 70, with the shadowy bulk of John L. Lewis looming over him the automobile manufacturer did not hesitate to accept the challenge of his young, ambition-lashed rival.

Publicly, at least, it has been the business philosophy of Henry Ford that the owner of an industrial plant owes something to those who labor him. He pioneered in the field of high wages. He established a model city where the thousands who work in his factories might live. And while these "good" overtones were expressed concerning Ford's genuine, kindly interest in the welfare of his employees, the feeling persists that he has attempted to improve their conditions by paying the highest of wage scales, by making it possible for them to enjoy adequate housing facilities, and by encouraging thrift and self-reliance among them.

It was announced Saturday that

Mr. Ford would carry his fight against the announced objective of the Lewis forces to unionize the Ford plants directly to the employees. So Mr. Ford says:

"A monopoly of jobs is as bad as a monopoly of bread. Our men ought to consider whether it is necessary to pay some outsider every month for the privilege of working at Ford's. What was the result of these strikes? Merely that numbers of men put their necks into an iron collar. We're only trying to show who owns the collar. Figure it out for yourself. If you go into a union they have got you and what have you got? We have always made a better bargain for our men than an outsider could. We have never had to bargain against our men. And we don't expect to begin now."

Henry Ford could say that. In his career, with its humble beginnings, its credible, fantastic climax, the public at least does not recall a single instance he deserted his men. They say the drain of high speed production takes everything a worker has in a few short years and leaves him an ash, a spent ember. It may or may not be true — we do not know. His enemies and critics have said the high wages he paid were a delusion — that by th time a man got through — he had little left. But the public knows Ford always has pleaded for higher wages for the men in his employ; that on innumerable occasions he has said to the leaders of industry it was the way out; that he has seemed to possess a constant sympathy for the laborer.

Someday John L. Lewis is going to stub his toe and tumble sprawlingly to earth. One single sentence which was credited to Mr. Ford covers it all. A monopoly of jobs in this country is a real menace. It is a greater menace to the laborer himself than it is to the employer. For the latter can get along through collective bargaining unless America is ready to junk the entire system of capitalism and turn mills and factories over to Lewis and his associates, presumably to be operated in the interest of those who sign up with him.

When the worker would accept the sop offered him by Lewis and his associates, he barbers his identity. It is a grave crisis which confronts the American Federation of Labor and the seriousness of it gives voice to the fervent wish Samuel Gompers were alive. He would make short work of Lewis. Mr. Ford has indicated the issue. It is not even a rigid question of unionization. It is not a question of collective bargaining. It is a question if John L. Lewis can establish a dictatorship in labor — of he can take over the American Federation of Labor which has rendered a magnificent service to the laboring men of this country, and mould it to fit his own conceptions and his own views of labor's cause.

Lewis' tactics have shown he is not equipped to lead the labor cause of America. The arrogance of his words his disdain and contempt for the third party of interest — the public — have shown him to be a man who in time might cost labor all of the gains it has achieved in more than fifty years of struggle.

That would be unfortunate. For capital not always has been clean, and at this time is not lily pure. There are fewer, far fewer employers, than there are employees but when the score is added, it will be found that proportionately there are about as many ready to gouge and exploit as there are misguided labor agitators. There are industries where ruthless tactics are followed to the last ditch. There are factories and mills where wage scales do not permit of a decent standard, where working conditions are bad, if not intolerable, and where the worker hasn't any chance.

For the minute, however, the Lewis program constitutes a more serious menace, and it is to that which the last of the great industrial leaders, who owns lock, stock and barrel his own establishment addresses himself. Henry Ford, lonely and isolated, must see the world he knew in surprising form. The automobile industry was built without benefit of a protective tariff. It has generally paid such high wages that unionization was not a sharp issue until John L. Lewis arrived on the scene. — Lincoln Star.

POOR MAN'S GOLD COURTNEY RYLEY COOPER

CHAPTER XI—Continued The girl went forward, her steps slowing as she approached the cot. Suddenly she went to her knees, her hands outstretched, hovering over him as though they longed to touch him, yet feared it. For a long time she remained silent, her centered gaze, her trembling, her intensity, all for him. But suddenly she broke. Her hands clasped tightly. Her shoulders took on a tense, shuddering stiffness. Her usually too-pretty lips contorted until they became almost ugly. "You can't die, Bruce," she cried. "You can't! Good God—what on earth will become of me if you die, Bruce? Can't you understand? What will become of me?"

CHAPTER XII Afternoon became night, night slowly became gray morning, yet Kay Joyce did not leave Bruce Kenning's death-bed. Those who passed her saw in her features a conflict of emotions; terror was there, galling sorrow. Selfishness flared its way across her face, giving way to commiseration. Anger stirred when Jeanne Towers, returning from a brief sleep, came back to duty. Gentleness ran its course and hardness followed; glittering eyes stared for long moments. Numbing grief had its place, and self-pity. Bruce Kenning, she knew, could not live. At last, she bent forward, all but whispering. "Bruce, Bruce dear. Can you hear me?" The hungry, horribly patient eyes centered upon her. She sat silent, looking at him. This was his only means of expression. The hands were motionless, encased, as was most of his body, in bandages yellowed by picric acid. His head was a mass of stained white. Only the eyes remained, expressive, imploring, as if for the surcease of death. Kay again leaned close. "Move your eyes if you want to say 'yes.' Close them for 'no.' Do you understand?"

The eyes moved quickly. Kay Joyce bit her lips. She looked about her. There was no one near to overhear; the man on the next cot was almost as badly burned as Kenning. For a long time she was silent. At last: "Those claims? The ones of McKenzie Joe that you got from Jack. Were they in your cabin?" The eyes said "No." "Did you have them with you?" Again the eyes replied in the negative. "Then where are they?" But the eyes could only stare. Words could not flow from that thickened throat; the hands remained impotent. A long time passed. The girl was silent, as if fighting for the strength to go on. At last the selfish look again came into her eyes, mingling queerly with compassion. She pressed her lips close to the bandages about his ears. "Jack said they were recorded. Were they?" His eyes moved in the affirmative. Again she leaned back, silent in thought. The big room echoed with activi-

"Did I? Well, I didn't notice it." As he walked beside her, Jack remembered that she had said many things like this during the long hours. That she didn't notice she was alone, when another nurse should have been helping her to turn a suffering patient in his bed; that she didn't notice that she was carrying a double armful of wood for the big stove, now set up in the middle of the gambling hall; that she didn't notice she had worked hours past the time when others had sought rest. Somehow she seemed to shame him. Yet Jack was proud of her. Now that he thought of it, he always had been proud of Jeanne Towers—proud of her that night when she had borrowed her dogs, in the raw, new camp of Fourcross; proud of her when she gathered the wood for him, during the snowstorm on the long trek to Sapphire; proud of her for her stalwart courage in the little store; even proud of her that night when she had brought his every dream crashing down about him by her steady, unflinching voice. The food distributed, he walked down the line of cots. Here a man had a message to be taken to a partner. A wife wanted her husband, down in camp. A fellow worker in the fire zone held him, talking of their fight together against flames. At last he came to Kenning's cot. "Well," he asked, without bitterness, "is he any better?" Kay came to her feet, sullenly defiant. "Why don't you go away?" "I didn't mean to annoy you." The girl's lips tightened. "Coming by to gloat, when a man can't defend himself?" Hammond longed to snap out that regardless of Kenning's state, she was still able to offer rebuttal, but he refrained. This was a different Kay from the sure, almost patronizing person who had flown in here, sleek, well-groomed only a few months before. Now, there were hollows beneath her eyes; even her hair seemed to have lost some of its glint. A certain sympathy swept Hammond for her; he was glad of it, glad that the bitterness was gone. "I'm sorry, Kay," he said slowly. "I wouldn't do anything to hurt you." The girl had not heard him. She had turned swiftly back to the cot, watching intently. "Get Sergeant Terry!" she commanded, in a queer voice. "Sergeant Terry?" She straightened, railing. "Get Sergeant Terry! Go get Sergeant Terry. Can't you see Bruce is dying?" A glaze had come into the man's eyes. Hammond ran from the room, returning in a moment with the sergeant. Kay stood beside the cot, straight, strangely wan. "Sergeant," she said in a thin voice, "you have the right of a justice?" "Yes, in some things." "Marriage?" "Yes." She spoke slowly. "Will you marry Bruce Kenning and me?" The sergeant appeared puzzled. "Does he—that is—?" "Ask him. He can answer with his eyes. He moves them for 'yes,' closes them for 'no.' Confirm it—and ask him. Only please hurry!" "Yes, of course." The sergeant bent close with his queries. Bruce Kenning slowly moved his eyes. "Hurry, Sergeant," the girl pleaded. A frontier nurse was passing. The sergeant caught her by the arm. "Wait a minute, please," he commanded, and with a gesture indicated that Jack also was to remain as a witness. Then, brokenly, from memory, he began to repeat the passages of the wedding ceremony: "Do you, Bruce Kenning, take this woman for your lawful wife?" The eyes, more glassy, rolled slowly in answer. "And do you—?" (TO BE CONTINUED)

MAN'S BEST FRIEND
The Story of Senator Vest's Tribute
To the Dog

By Carl Schurz Lowden
A person may give the best years of his life to his chosen career with the fond hope that his accomplishments in that field will make for him an abiding memorial when he is gone. However, these may be almost forgotten within a decade of his eternal departure while something he had considered of slight importance becomes vividly associated with his name and keeps it green.

Before his death in 1904 George Graham Vest, who spent approximately a quarter of a century as a Missouri member of the United States Senate, wished to be remembered for his statesmanship. Nevertheless the senator's legislative addresses are molding into dust today whereas a few words he spoke to a jury in the days that preceded his long and capable service in Congress now constitute his most enduring monument, a glowing tribute to dogs.

It all happened at a dog trial in 1870 in the state circuit court of Missouri. A man had wantonly killed another's dog, a foxhound named Drum who probably trespassed occasionally. The owner had brought suit for heavy damages, and the case had been advanced through appeals. Frances B. Cockrell, a county lawyer who later rose to fame as a great barrister represented the defendant.

Vest, the attorney for the plaintiff, apparently took no notes on the testimony. He did not seem to be interested. But when the last witness had been examined and the counsel for the defense had given his closing argument to the jury of twelve rough-and-ready Missourians, the plaintiff's lawyer quietly rose.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said in a calm voice charged with sympathy and understanding, "the best friend a man has in this world may turn against him and become his enemy. Even his son or daughter that he has reared with loving care may prove ungrateful. Those who are nearest and dearest to us, those whom we trust with our happiness and our good name, may become traitors to their faith.

"The money that a man has, he may lose. It flies away from him, perhaps when he needs it most. A man's reputation may be sacrificed in a moment of ill-considered action, the people who are prone to fall up on their knees, to do us honor when success is with us may be the first to throw stones of malice when failure settles in clouds upon our heads.

"Gentlemen of the jury, the one absolutely unselfish friend that a man can have in this selfish world, the one that never deserts him, the one that never proves ungrateful or treacherous, is his dog.

"A man's dog stands by him in prosperity and in poverty, in health and in sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground, where the wintry winds blow and the snow drives fiercely, if only he may be near his master's side. He will even kiss the hand that has no food to offer; he will lick the wounds and the sores that come in encounter with the roughness of his pauper master as if he were a prince. And when all other friends desert he remains.

"When riches take wings and reputation falls into pieces, a man's dog is as constant in his love as the sun in its journey through the heavens. If fortune drives the master forth and outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him, to guard him against danger, and to fight against his enemies.

"And when the last scene of all comes and death takes his master in its embrace and his body is laid away in the cold ground, no matter if all other friends pursue their way, there by the graveside will be the noble dog be found, his head between his paws, his eyes sad but open in alert watchfulness, faithful and true even after his master's death."

The courtroom remained markedly quiet while the speaker calmly sat down, and then the silence was broken by the soft rustle made by many women drying their tears with handkerchiefs as most of the men wiped their eyes with bare knuckles. Every one in that crowd had known Drum, and knew Drum's owner; and each of them had liked the kindly foxhound. Evidently all had experienced the friendship and devotion of a dog around the home.

Presently the judge gave his instructions, and then the jury retired. Two hundred dollars was the amount of the damages sought by Senator Vest for his client. How could a dog be so valuable. Dozens and even scores of dogs sell for a total far less than two hundred dollars. But Drum's friendship was almost priceless.

The jury deliberated only a few minutes and then brought in a verdict for the plaintiff. Moreover, that body of men decided that Drum was worth no two hundred but five hundred dollars. Thus this legal action became one of the very few where the amount awarded was much greater than the sum asked. — Facts Digest.

OHIO VALLEY FLOOD DAMAGES SOIL

Water Washes 40 Million Tons of Fertile Soil From Farms

Of the many million tons of fertile soil washed from the upland farms by the January flood, nearly 40 million tons were spread over bottomland and city streets in the Ohio valley, reports the Soil Conservation Service.

The swiftly moving waters deposited more than 25 million tons of silt in the rural areas of the Valley proper, a further 8 million tons on the bottom land of several tributaries near the confluences and nearly 4 million tons in 165 towns and cities of the Valley.

Farming land in the Valley was also damaged severely by more than 14 million tons of sand churned up from the river bottom and laid down over adjoining fields and meadows.

"These studies show clearly that flood damage is by no means confined to the casualties caused by the actual inundation," says H. H. Bennett, Chief of the Service.

Erosion Control Project Encourages Wildlife

A recent survey of wildlife on project areas of the Soil Conservation Service shows that gullies planted to seed-producing herbs and fruit-bearing shrubs, woodlands protected from grazing and fire, and fields strip cropped, give encouragement to wild life.

Meat Cooking Methods Important in Taste

There is as much art in cooking meat, the universally liked food, as there is in any other type of food preparation, says home economists at the College of Agriculture.

makes the difference between satisfaction and dissatisfaction.

Meat is cooked to destroy bacteria and parasites and to improve appearance and flavor. The tenderness of tender cuts must be increased to make the meat palatable.

Meat from young animals and from the least exercises muscles of more mature animals is tender. It has a small amount of connective tissue and delicate cell walls.

The white connective tissue which binds fibers together can be changed to gelatin by cooking for a long time in moist heat.

One of the fundamental points in connection with meat cookery is to know the nature of the cut to be cooked, and the proper method to use in cooking it.

BUREAU PLANS SOIL CONSERVATION TOUR

Survey in Wayne County Is Scheduled for June 10

In cooperation with the soil conservation service, the Agricultural Extension Service is planning to hold soil conservation tours in counties in which, or adjacent to, camps which are being operated under the soil conservation service.

A tour is planned for several northeastern counties including Wayne county to the project area at Hartington on the date of June 10. This tour will give people an opportunity to see the work being done by these soil conservation camps and the practices which they follow.

6,000 Camp Grounds Ready For Vacationers

More than 6,000 campgrounds will be ready for this season's vacation visitors to the 160 National Forests, says the United States Forest Service.

The Easy Way To Iron!

THE Coleman Self Heating Iron
LIGHTS INSTANTLY
Ready for use in a jiffy! Just strike a match, turn a valve, and it's going! No preheating. No waiting. The Coleman makes and burns its own gas from regular clear white, untreated motor fuel. Use it anywhere.
Saves You More Time and Work Than a $100 Washing Machine.
The Coleman Iron is perfectly balanced... exactly the right weight for easy ironing without bearing down. Just an easy, guiding, gliding motion is all that's needed for perfect ironing. Tapered point and beveled ironing edge make it easy to iron in pleats and tucks, under buttons, in and out of other hard-to-get places. You can do an ironing easier, quicker, better. Be sure to see this modern iron.
