TRAIL OF '98 STILL ACTIVE

The Trail of '98, the route which the gold-seekers followed during the world-famous Klondike Rush is still the main highway over which hundreds of tourists annually visit the Yukon, the real land of the Midnight Sun. From Skagway, Alaska, a rail line runs to Whitehorse in the Yukon but from there the trip to Dawson, far in the interior of the Yukon, is by steamboat along the rushing Yukon River. Although remote from other centers of civilization Dawson, capital of the territory, is a modern city in every respect. For hunters and fishermen no section of the continent offers so many prospects as the Yukon whose lakes and rivers teem with game fish and whose mountains and forests yield record-breaking specimens of big game. The photographs show the famous Miles Canyon on the Yukon River: the international boundary near Carcross and a sketch map outlining the route to Dawson.

A Brief Summary of a Few of the Laws Passed by the 1937 Legislature

L. B. 112. By Emil E. Brodecky: Forbids questionnaires on which the applicants for teaching positions are requested to state their religious affiliations.

L. B. 212. By Emil E. Brodecky: The teacher's tenure laws provide that teachers' contracts shall be deemed renewed from year to year unless canceled by a majority of the school board before April 1; teachers must accept contracts by April 15. Does not affect rural schools except that contract may be signed by outgoing board members.

L. B. 445. By W. F. Haycock: Revises the state laws relating to certification of teachers by cutting the certifying agencies from seven to one, by reducing the number of certificates from 29 to 6 and by lowering the requirements for renewals.

All certificates are to be issued by the state superintendent of public instruction. Minimum requirements for town elementary schools will be two years of college work; for junior high schools, three years; and for high schools, four years. The measure becomes effective in September, 1938, and all teachers may renew present certificates once after that date. Present life certificates retain their validity.

History of District 44

District 44, located four miles west of Carroll, is commonly known as the Morris school, perhaps because of the late John R. Morris whose seven sons attended, and their children, and at present two great grandchildren are attending the school. The school is located on the Morris farm.

The school was organized about 1888 with Frank Berry as teacher. Three pupils attended, namely, Cradoc, Lot, and Bonner Morris. Later on, that same winter, John Tucker came.

Some time later, trouble arose in the school two miles west and all the pupils came to this school. In order to provide enough seating room pupils had to sit on boxes, spring seats, etc. They number about forty. Aida Duncan was the teacher.

Church was held in the school house at this time, too. As a matter of fact the teacher, in many cases, taught school during the week, directed Literary Societies on Friday nights, and preached on Sundays. People came to these Literaries from all over.

Milton Eddie was the teacher at the time of the Blizzard of '88. Most of the pupils went home for dinner and on returning they could see the blizzard approaching. John R. Morris came to the school house shortly after the storm began and took the pupils and teacher to his home for the night.

The year Eugene Blakely taught they had the "flag raising." A sixty-foot, crooked native-grown cottonwood was cut down on the late Ellis Owens' farm, for the pole. Someone remarked, "It is better to have a crooked, native-grown pole than to buy a straight one." This was a great day in history and a large crowd attended.

The new school house was built in 1922. This is a lovely, modern school with many up-to-date conveniences. Ten pupils attend at present.

The church was organized about 1871. This is known as the Welsh Congregational church. It was located on the David Rees farm. The new church was built in 1914, the site being changed to its present location.

The oldest settler is Cradoc Morris. Lot Morris has lived a greater number of years but lived in Washington for two years of his life. (Facts gathered from Lot Morris. Written by Ruby Davis, teacher.)

History of District 77

District No. 77 is located in the southeast quarter of section 80, township 26, Garfield precinct of Wayne county. (Two miles west and about five and one-half miles north of Hoskins.)

The school district was founded in 1897. Frankie Stimson was employed as teacher and taught three terms between January, 1897, and March, 1898. The first two terms were two months long, and the last was a four months term. The pupils were arranged in grades A, B, or C, according to their achievement. Only reading, writing, and arithmetic were taught.

John G. Nelhardt, Nebraska's epic poet, taught this school from December, 1898, through the following March. During the first few years, attendance was very irregular. In 1898, during a two months term, one boy attended three days and was tardy each time. In 1900, during an eight months term, forty-nine pupils attended from 5 to 148 days each.

As years went by, the old school house became more and more dilapidated. Pupils who attended during the winter months had to wear their coats and overcoats in the school room. Finally, in 1924, the district decided to build a larger and more comfortable building.

Today the school house is in good condition, modern and up-to-date. School is held nine months of the year, and attendance is regular. Thirteen pupils now attend.

Otto Kopke has lived in the district longer than anyone else. He began his education in the old building. His three sons also received their elementary education in this district.

(Written by Leonard Nelson, teacher.)

Standing By

By "The Ink Spots"

The average man never needs to worry much about his summer vacation. His boss tells him when he can go and his wife tells him where he's going.

When it comes to swearing, it is told to us that one Wayne man is so adept he can almost swear in rhyme.

Things were really going round and round in circles for Marlon and Dutch the other day at Crystal. It seems something went wrong with the motor on the boat and it merrily spun around until they stopped the motor and paddled to shore.

Matrimonial bonds are similar to the other kind in one respect—they're not worth much unless the interest is kept up.

We were told that Jinx Wetzel is an ardent advocate of the uncrowded art of walking of late. Just what is there about you, Bill, that makes cars you are riding in sort of roll over and curl up?

One difference between a career and a job is that the salary is more regular when you have a job.

We decided to forego a purchase the other day because we rather hated to bring the clerk out of a sound sleep. Nice to be able to catch up on your back slumbers during working hours.

Read the other day that middle-aged is that period in a man's life when he can look both ways without seeing much.

It seems one Wayne man was reading a settle-down-and-be-good act to one of the young generation. Another business man of more modern views came to the young hopeful's defense, saying "Why live to be seventy if you can live just as long in 30 years."

Among the more exciting games being played right now is to be driving at night, meet another car, and guess which headlight is out.

Same Driving—to the Fore Automobile accidents constitute an increasingly grave social problem.

As a consequence, the problem is gaining the attention of economists as well as humanitarians, and financial journalists as well as highway and automobile engineers.

With few exceptions, each post-war year has witnessed an increase in deaths, injuries and property damage due to automobiles.

Safety authorities and organizations are discouraged by past experiences and future prospects, but they are not dismayed.

The automobile industry is likewise co-operating for a variety of reasons, humane and financial.

To a far lesser extent, there has been similar progress in road building to eliminate the hazards of dangerous turns, hills and narrow surfaces.

Favorable trends included: Advances in law enforcement and engineering; a slight drop in casualties in proportion to miles driven.

The drinking factor is tending to become progressively serious. Over seven per cent of all drivers involved in fatal accidents are under the influence of liquor.

Naturally, the night hours are the most dangerous for car operation. Over a five-year period ending with 1935 automobile deaths at night increased 37 per cent.

The astonishing sales of new cars and the generally boasted volume of traffic, have paved the way for making 1937 an exceedingly bad accident year.

Conservation Than the conservation of the republic's natural resources, than its protection against flood and drought and dust storms.

President Roosevelt's message to congress urging wise and comprehensive action to meet this end will meet, therefore, with universal approval.

province of congress to recognize in the exercise of its patriotic best judgment.

The successful performance of this task, the beginning of a program, is essential to the national welfare and our future security.

It is the president's message is one sentence that is significant: "It is not wise to direct everything from Washington."

We are a numerous and far-flung people, and in our thousands of communities local rights and interests, local authority, are still valuable and cherished.

Bread for the Months of America Those experts in Chicago who make it a business to estimate crop production for the guidance of speculators on the board of trade have computed the prospective winter wheat yield at from 610 to 650 million bushels.

America's bread needs, with more than 12 million people, has been fixed at 625 to 650 millions of bushels. With a normal spring wheat crop it would appear there is ample margin to restore the carryover stocks in terminal elevators and in the farms which had become precariously small.

Talk about romance! One of the very readable books of recent vintage made its appearance under the title of "Oil for the Lamps of China."

And here in America, over hundreds of miles of hillside and valleys, from the great plains of the Texas panhandle to the Canadian border, there are more than a million farm families engaged in the simple but most vital undertaking of providing bread for the mouths of America.

These people live simply and so completely in the rich faith that springs from the soil that the glory which is theirs escapes those who take their daily bread without thought and as a matter of their just and proper due.

Now that the world is girding itself for another war—perhaps this year; perhaps not—but across the seas where the earth is old to the touch of civilization the great romance of a harvest in the years of relatively new earth lies buried with its countless generations who lived their day and then died.

It may happen here. The other day Earl Marvin was giving himself the luxury of peering back into the early years of southeastern Nebraska when sod was giving way to plow.

Twenty-five or fifty years from now, if in tempestuous, unthinking ambition America's granary is destroyed, what then? What heritage shall be left for that generation or generations? For soil destroyed is slow to resurrect itself.

We cannot scare young people into being good drivers. They must be taught good driving tactics, must practice habits, and build up attitudes that will make them safe drivers.

Nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm.—Emerson. What is difficult? Only a word indicating the degree of strength requisite for accomplishing particular objects; a mere notice of the necessity for exertion; a bugbear to children and fools; only a mere stimulus to men.—Samuel Warren.

The catastrophe in East River, New York, when some 1200 people mostly women and children, were burned or drowned by the burning of the General Slocum is the most terrible thing that ever occurred in this country in the way of accidents.

Here too was the glitter of the "big wheels," glaring with a maze of electric lamps, charged by the pride of Around the World Annie's establishment—a gasoline motor light plant, which had formed an entire load for Timmy Moon's plane.

Jack was tempted to ask him if he had seen McKenzie Joe. But the very detachment of the man, the look of exquisite agony with which he watched the trepidation of the little ivory ball, clicking against the interstices, bounding out, hesitating, then rolling on again before it should finally sink into its final socket, withheld him. He turned away, while from behind him the call of the croaking blended with the queer, rousing voice of Kenning, proclaiming his joy as he clawed for his chips. Jack went on, at last to corner the wandering Florine.

"Listen!" he commanded. "Have you seen that partner of mine?" "Baby," she exclaimed. "I ain't stolen him."

"I didn't say you stole him. I asked if you'd seen him. You helped him out with some liquor, didn't you?" "Only five corks," said Florine innocently. "Only five!" asked Jack, with his hand to his forehead. "Which way did he go?" Florine pointed to the entire North. Hammond hurried out the door, mumbling to himself.

but wait and watch. The dance hall had become steamy, the clatter from the bar louder, the music of the orchestra more raucous. Jack Hammond wandered ceaselessly, watching every entrance. An hour passed. Then the younger partner shot forward. McKenzie Joe had appeared in a doorway, his hat crooked on his head, his sleeves rolled back, and his electric blue suit grimy from contact with the forest.

Jack stepped aside. At this point in Joe's progress of inebriation, it was best to humor him. Hammond even allowed him to plod to the bar, where methodically he ordered drinks for the house.

The noise caused celebrants to assemble from every part of the rambling structure; it even halted the play in the gaming rooms, the players crowding in the doorway. It was just as they began to flood through that McKenzie Joe turned from the bar and his smile vanished.

A queer gleam came into his hitherto vacant eyes. His fingers widened until they were muscular half arcs. His tremendous shoulders hunched and his round, beaverlike head shot forward. Jack had been cut off by the sudden insurge of the gaming room crowd. Desperately he attempted to break through.

It availed nothing. McKenzie Joe was moving forward; Bruce Kenning attempted to run. A drunken miner shoved him back into the open. Then Joe shouted: "You double-crossing hound!"

With a lunge, he shot forward. Wildly Bruce Kenning struck out and then, with a cry, strove to dodge him. It was impossible; McKenzie Joe had caught him, one huge arm around his neck, blocking off all resistance save short arm blows, which struck the prospector's huge chest and iron-muscled torso with no more result than if they had been pounding against the trunk of a giant fir. Suddenly the geologist was spun about, impelled by the force of McKenzie Joe's giant muscles. Jack Hammond, now literally throwing celebrants out of his way as he fought to get to his partner, saw the face of the man, green-gray with horror. Then McKenzie Joe began to beat at Kenning's features—almost instantly they seemed to become misshapen, swollen, spurting red from a dozen lacerations as the triphammer blows cut deep into his flesh. Bruce Kenning cried out, an agonized appeal. (TO BE CONTINUED)

Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

Advice from Expert Sources

By IRVIN S. COBB

THERE used to be a ticket seller with the old Yankee Robertson circus who owned a big green parrot. The parrot's perch swung from the roof of the ticket wagon and there the bird would sit just above her owner's head.

The ticket man had a line of patter which he constantly chanted as the patrons surged in front of his wicket twice on each week day of the season—before the afternoon performance and again before the evening performance.

"Don't shove, friends!" he would say. "Don't crowd! Take your time. Give everybody a chance!"

The parrot memorized this speech. She even learned to mimic her master's exact tone. Repeating his admonition was a favorite part of her repertoire.

One afternoon when business was over he went away forgetting to close the slide on his window. When he returned a little later his pet was gone. Immediately he organized a search party to find the truant bird.

Half a mile distant from the show lot, in a field, they found Polly. She was reared back on the ground practically featherless. About her circled and swirled a great flock of crows cawing joyously. Every instant, neatly, one of the crows, twisting out of the circle, would dart down and pluck a section of green plumage from the disheveled avian.

And each time this happened poor Polly, in a beautiful imitation of her owner's voice and accent would shriek out: "Don't shove, friends! Don't crowd! Take your time! Give everybody a chance!"

Crop Prospects Are Fine in South Sioux City Farmstead Project

Regular spring farm work, landscaping and development of recreation facilities have been the major activities of the residents of the South Sioux City farmstead project, according to William Von Seggern, community manager. Crop prospects are fine, the farmstead in shipshape condition and the clients are very well satisfied with their prospects.

The South Sioux City farmstead is one of eight in Nebraska operated under the supervision of the Resettlement Administration. It is composed of 21 units with approximately seven acres each, planted to whatever crops the farmsteaders desire. In addition, there is a cooperative farm of 145 acres.

"Crops are practically all planted," Von Seggern stated, "and with sufficient moisture we should have a bumper crop this year."

Average crop acreage on the individual units is as follows: Two acres potatoes, one acre sweet corn, one-half acre tomatoes, one-fourth acre cabbage, one acre cucumbers and melons. A land building program has been started this year on the individual units, the plan being to rotate a half acre to an acre of sweet clover over the seven acres through a period of years. This rotation will solve the dual purpose of providing feed and fertilizing the soil.

On the cooperative farm we find 25 acres of oats and sweet clover, 5 acres of new alfalfa, 72 acres corn, 10 acres barley and sweet clover, 10 acres of potatoes, 4 acres soy beans, and 11 acres of cane. The cooperative farm maintains a complete line of machinery and horses, which are rented to the clients at reasonable rates. Six families are to be selected to live on the project, Mr. Von Seggern states. Three of these have already been approved and will move on the project shortly.

A great many applications are on hand and family selection will be completed as soon as possible. Careful consideration is given before a family is approved, he stated, as they must qualify from the standpoint of ambition, character, health, and willingness to cooperate.

Early this spring a landscaping program was started and individual yards were seeded to permanent grasses and 1,100 Chinese elms were set out. The women started a flower bed project to beautify the entrance of the farmstead. The bed is triangular in shape, with a drive on each side, hedged with dwarf ginnias on the side and a rectangular bed of petunias in front. Other beds of various shapes will be comprised of four o'clocks, nasturtiums, California poppies, etc. An old-fashioned flower garden, made up of different flowers donated by the women, is also being planted.

A recreational supervisor has been obtained for the farmstead and under her direction recreational activities are being rapidly developed. A plot has been seeded for a playground and equipment will be set up in a short time. It is planned to have a baseball diamond also. Classes for the different groups are held at different intervals throughout the week and set-togethers for farmsteaders have been planned throughout the summer months.

NYA Project Plan Helps Youth Obtain Private Jobs

With 121 Nebraska NYA youths securing jobs in private industry during April, the National Youth Administration's program for out-of-school young people continued to reflect a greater monthly turnover, according to Gladys J. Shamp, NYA state director.

"This is a 100 per cent gain over the number of youths relinquishing their NYA jobs to accept private employment during March," Miss Shamp explained.

An important factor in the increasing number of young people, who are able to obtain private jobs, has been the development of occupational training and vocational guidance for the project youths. These activities vary from career conferences at which occupational opportunities and requirements are discussed to practical training and work experiences in construction, clerical tasks and other fields.

"A Wonderful Bird Is the Pelican"

Mistaken notions still prevail about the function of the pelican's beak. Even now, probably, a majority of people accept the ancient dictum of the profane Iliad, that "he can store in that beak enough food for a week." Actually, the pelican stores nothing in that capacious pouch. What he catches he swallows. At the home nest, the young pelicans are regaled with fish regurgitated from the parental stomach. Messy, no doubt; but the pelicans don't seem to mind.—Science News Letter.

KILLS BINDWEED BY SUMMER TILLAGE

Cost of Eradication Shows 85 Per Cent Reduction

Bindweed, Nebraska's Public Enemy No. 1 when it comes to weeds, can be killed by summer tillage at a lower cost than originally deemed necessary.

Dr. F. D. Keim, chairman of the agronomy department of the Nebraska College of Agriculture, this week reported on experimental work showing the decreased costs. This study showed the cost of eradication by summer tillage did not run over $10 per acre.

Using a seven-foot duck foot cultivator and cultivating from three to four inches deep, the following conclusions were reached in the experiment:

- "Average of intervals between cultivations on ten fields for the first year of tillage was 8.2 days and for the second year 10.2 days.
- "Number of cultivations during the first year on the different fields ranged from 10 to 19 with an average of 12.5. During the second year of tillage, the number of operations ranged from 1 to 14 with an average of 9.14.
- "Plowing the fields to a depth of seven inches checked bindweed from 9 to 19 days with an average of 14.3 days. One plowing was equivalent to about two cultivations.
- The average acreage cultivated per hour on all fields was 1.86 acres.
- "The average cost of operating tractor and duck foot cultivator per hour was 70 cents.

"The average cost of cultivation on ten fields per acre over a period of two years was $0.446.

"Tillage results over a period of two years ranged from complete eradication to about 85 per cent reduction."

Project Club Includes Home Reading

With Wayne county home demonstration project club women planning to "brush up" on their home reading this summer as an extra part of their project work, interest in discussions concerning reading at the meeting of the Nebraska Council of Home Demonstration clubs is increasing.

Miss Nellie Carey, executive secretary of the state public library, is to address the convention scheduled for North Platte June 15-16.

"Read for facts and fun," is the title of Miss Carey's address. She will make suggestions probably concerning summer home reading and recommend books for project reading.

A new department in home demonstration project work this year is the reading suggestion which will be passed on to club members. There were 176 women enrolled in the work this past year and the majority of them will participate in the reading work this summer, it is thought.

Sudan Grass Helps Control Erosion

Sudan grass has more than one use. In addition to furnishing pasturage for livestock, it has been discovered to be very efficient in controlling soil erosion when growing and covering the ground.

Dr. J. E. Weaver of the University of Nebraska recently discovered in an experiment that erosion on a bare field was 40 times as rapid as on a field covered with a 5 1/2 inch growth of sudan grass. After the sudan was cut for hay, the soil eroded only one-tenth as rapidly as on a plot similar to a field just planted to corn.

Thus Wayne county farmers seeding sudan grass will not only be providing pasture but also will aid in controlling erosion. Some producers will use sudan to check gullies in their cornfields. After the corn is planted, a strip of sudan will be seeded on the banks and bottoms of draws to catch silt during the summer and fall months and heal up the gullies.

Extension conservationists at the College of Agriculture recommend the seeding of draws in cultivated fields to brome grass and alfalfa where moisture conditions are favorable. Where oats was seeded on gully banks the stubble will be free from weeds so brome and alfalfa can be seeded in August by rolling and harrowing. The stubble should be disked if necessary if the ground is hard.

BUREAU LISTS POINT-ROW SOLUTIONS

Contour Farming Checks Soil Erosion, Conserves Moisture

Increased use of contour farming to check soil losses and conserve moisture on Wayne county farms has led to many solutions of the point-row problem, Wayne county officials pointed out this week. The most widely used methods of eliminating point-rows include: Relocation of field boundary fences, placing them on the contour, use of sown patches of feed crops to take up odd shaped areas between contour lines and strip cropping.

Locating field boundary fences on the contour eliminates corners that cause short rows and at the same time provides permanent guide lines for contour farming. On many farms this practice works out advantageously by making it possible to get cultivated land subject to erosion into pasture and pasture land suitable for cultivation into fields where it can be tilled. Farmers who have relocated their cross fences report that little, if any, more fencing material is required where the fences are on the contours than where they are straight.

On fields where it is not practical to relocate fences on the contour, the corners and odd shaped areas can be eliminated by sowing them to feed crops. The feed can be harvested for livestock.

Most important of all in the elimination of point rows, it is pointed out is strip cropping. This method of point row elimination is also a soil and moisture conservation method. The uneven width strips of closely growing feed crops planted in alternation with even width strips of row crops slow up the speed of water that flows from the cultivated crops, filter out soil particles and causes more of the water to be absorbed.

To Discuss Farm Laws At Field Day

Wayne county farmers interested in forming either a soil conservation or bindweed district or both under the newly passed legislation will have the opportunity to learn the necessary steps if they attend the annual Agronomy Field Day at the Nebraska College of Agriculture on June 15.

Receiving a copy of the completed program for the day's activities, Agricultural Agent Walter L. Moller this week called local farmers' attention to the discussion of D. L. Gross, extension agronomist, on the legislation. In addition the agronomist will tell about the hybrid corn law which seeks to protect buyers of hybrid seed.

Dr. F. D. Keim, chairman of the agronomy department at the college, is scheduled also to tell about progress in bindweed experimental work. New and so-called crops including artichokes, soybeans, atlas sorgo, hemp and brome grass will all be discussed by Dr. T. A. Kieselbach.

FORTY-FOUR 4-H BOYS ARE FEEDING BEEVES

Members Are Preparing Calves for Exhibition This Fall

Getting their baby bees ready for the county fair, the Nebraska state fair and the Ak-Sar-Ben livestock show are forty-four 4-H club members in Wayne county. Despite the unfavorable feeding situation, these bees are expected to be ready for exhibition this fall.

Many boys feeding bees are reporting gains of 70 to 100 pounds per month on 6 calves this spring. These gains though will decrease as flies begin to bother and hot weather arrives. Calves stay on feed better if their ration contains some bulk such as 10 to 25 per cent ground oats, ground barley or bran. A limited amount of molasses, from 1 to 3 pounds, daily, cheapens the ration and stimulates the appetite.

With protein feeds very low priced in relation to grains, Walter Tolman of the Nebraska College of Agriculture recommends generous feeding of these feeds. They stimulate appetites and improve the finish of the animals. From 2 1/2 to 3 pounds daily is recommended with low protein roughages such as wild hay or silage and from 1 1/2 to 2 pounds daily when alfalfa is used.

Grass has many uses for animals but it has no place in the 4-H baby beef ration, Wayne county club members are warned by Tolman. Young calves like grass but will not eat enough grain to get fat for the fall shows if they have even a little grass to get the taste. Too much alfalfa will also keep them from getting enough grain. Most feeders limit hay to about four pounds and avoid that which is too fine and leafy.

To Stage Best Jersey Cattle Show June 25

From all sections of Nebraska will go the best Jersey cattle to Lincoln for a state-wide "parish" show Friday, June 25, according to word received here by Agricultural Agent Walter L. Moller. District exhibitions have been eliminated this year to make the state event the largest Jersey show ever held in Nebraska.

The dairy cattle exposition will attract the leading dairy authorities in the United States who at the same time will be concluding their annual convention of the American Dairy Science association at the Nebraska college of agriculture.

The dairy show is sponsored by the Nebraska Jersey Cattle club which is headed by Don Morton of Beatrice.

Hook Outlines Insurance Program at Luncheon

T. S. Hook talked on the value and benefits of life insurance at the luncheon meeting of the Wayne Kiwanis club held at Hotel Stratton Monday noon. He outlined a 5-point program of life insurance for a married man.

Hook stressed the following factors of a life insurance program including a clean-up fund, an income for his family, an educational fund for his children, a permanent income for his wife, and an income for himself.

He stated that many years of experience in planning hundreds of Life Insurance programs have convinced agents that each case can be broken down into two to five major needs thus simplifying the otherwise complexity of life insurance with its many technical terms.
