Social Crucifixion.

The subject of going into society together is one of endless discussion between men and their wives; these opposing, and holding on to these opposite, and holding on to these opposite. Women often carry their point by declaring that if their husbands will not go with them, they will go without them. A just or generous man in answer to a woman's declaration that she should go with him, he considers social entertainments of any and every kind stupid and disagreeable. He knows that she delights in them, and that for her to relinquish them is a positive sacrifice. There is no more reason why she should stay away from what she should go, and therefore, he goes, but goes reluctantly, with ill-will, and, as it were, by compulsion. He soon discovers that she does how hateful the thing is. It seems down right selfish in her to insist on her own selfishness, but she believes that she can not afford to release him; that her frequenting society without him is the blighting of their separation, of their leading distinct lives, of their speedy divergence. Her husband may protest that it is sincere. Hence is society not warranted in maintaining her position to the last? A man who is not without great cost, greater often than she realizes. For husband means more to her than she realizes. He never puts on his dress suit, or orders the carriage for that purpose, without a feeling of invitation to his wife's society. He never puts on his dress suit, or orders the carriage for that purpose, without a feeling of invitation to his wife's society. He never puts on his dress suit, or orders the carriage for that purpose, without a feeling of invitation to his wife's society.

Toward the South Pole.

It appears to be probable, says the London Daily News, that Prof. Newmeyer of the Hamburg marine observatory will succeed in getting a polar expedition organized. It might have been supposed that until some greater measure of success had attended similar adventures in the arctic regions the most ardent advocate of such schemes would have doubted the wisdom of exposing human lives and treasure to the risk of antarctic seas. All the best authorities are agreed that the difficulties to be encountered in the south are greater than in the north, and the tedious stories which gained currency after the return of the last arctic expedition might well have sickened the boldest of this generation sufficiently to deter them from any attempt upon the stronghold of King Wate in the south. In comparing the difficulties of arctic and antarctic adventures Sir Wyville Thompson writes: "We can only anticipate disasters, multiplied a hundredfold, should the attempt be made. The risk of rivalry among nations." For various reasons the great lone lands under the southern cross is more difficult of access than the north. It is much colder there than in the Arctic circle. There seem to be no such warm currents as are found in the north—such for instance, as the Labrador current, or that round the south coast of Spitzbergen. Such emanations from the torrid regions of the earth do not mitigate the rigors of the northern seas at certain points and bring about the most striking variations of temperature, breaking up the ice at certain seasons and opening the way to navigation far beyond points otherwise attainable. Any enterprise of this kind will of course be pushed on during the summer months—during January, February, and the early part of March—that is. But even in the height of summer the temperature of the air in antarctic regions is always below the freezing point of sea water, and bitter tempestuous winds and fog and blinding snow-storms are all but incessant. No arctic explorer has ever gone beyond the bounds of vegetation. At least little has been approached in the way where northern navigators have penetrated, but in the awful solitude of the south—Sir James Ross found not the slightest trace of vegetable life, either on the land or in the sea, yet he never came within 700 miles of the south pole. The magnetite pole has been approached within 150 miles, and it seems possible that important scientific results might be obtained by traversing that farthest distance, but even this is doubtful.

Immigration.

We referred on a previous occasion to the decline of the comparative power of the Irish vote in the United States by reason of the growing importance of the English, Scotch, and Canadian elements in the population. Recent statistics rather strikingly illustrate the fact. During the year 1877, during the month of September and October last the number of emigrants from England and Scotland had been approximately 150,000, being three times as great as that from Ireland. Taking a somewhat larger view, it is shown that during the last ten years (1870-1879) the number of emigrants from the United Kingdom, including October 20th, 1879, was 1,193,363 and 1,185,511 respectively. That of Irish immigrants during the same two periods, 662,248 and 634,531. Commenting on the statistics, the British American says: "The evidence of these statistics is very plain. The facts and figures with great satisfaction, and are greatly encouraged in our work of naturalization and organization." "The Week."

The Pope's Dentist.

The "Pope's dentist" is a monk named Brother Gregorio. His operating room is on the right of the entrance to the convent near the Fabricius bridge. It is a small apartment whose walls are covered with pictures of madonnas and saints. The monk usually stands his patients against the wall, and under pretense of getting a better look at the offending teeth, bends back their heads, and, either with his right or left hand (as he is right-handed) plucks out the cause of their pain. Brother Gregorio is very tall, as strong as an ox, with a white iron. Once he places his fingers on a tooth there is no such sound as fall. In this respect the monk's method resembles that of the Japanese dentist. No instruments are used that could hurt, but the teeth are firmly held in the index finger and thumb. In order to gain the necessary digital strength, the monk practices for years in the use of the finger and thumb on his own teeth. It is an account of Brother Gregorio's work for both

We heard one of our most successful and observant farmers say the other day that this year would see better cultivation of crops in Wayne county than any previous year.

He says the farmers of the county are rapidly coming to the conclusion that there is more money in a small crop well cared for, than in a large crop that must be partially neglected.

Farmers with larger tracts than they can successfully cultivate without employing a number of men, have quite generally rented a portion of their farms and will be able to give the remainder better attention.

Meeting of Railroad Commissioners.

The Nebraska State Railroad Commission met in DeKalb today to consider complaints entered by Senator Sutherland, from this county, and Manning, of Wayne county, in regard to the local freight rates on coal, lumber and stock, also on the delay occasioned in transferring stock to the South Omaha yards. The complaints were entered about the first of the year when a hundred shippers were paying rates by the hundred pounds for the same exorbitant. Since that time the rates have been somewhat reduced but not materially. The railroad company had their attorneys, railroad superintendents, general freight agents, etc. as witnesses in their behalf. They came in their elegant special car and looked anything but the oppressed and indebted corporation they attempted to prove they were.

Senator Manning, of Wayne, was the first witness examined. He testified to disadvantages shippers from that point had labored under. At one time their cattle were driven to Elgin and stock from that point to evade paying the excessive freight tariff. Mr. Phillo, a Wayne coal dealer, testified that rates from Omaha on coal was about $1.40 per ton, a greatly out of proportion to rates he got from other roads when shipping through from the mines. Another witness from Wayne was introduced, who corroborated opinions on freight charges. An expert witness from Wayne, was called on for the U. P., which road operate and own the belt line, and transferring the stock at the terminus of this road—then examined the witness and tried to explain that the delays were no fault of theirs, and that their charge of $1 per car for switching was not exorbitant. His testimony failed to show anything but that they were compelled to pay $1 per car to the Union Stock Yard company for the privilege of the use of the tracks to get to the chutes at the yards and also that each company was compelled to pay fifty cents per car for the unloading of their cars.

Mr. Sutherland introduced J. H. Langford as a witness in behalf of his complaint. Mr. L. said he had bought large numbers of cattle in the south and then to drive them to the north rather, but from Omaha to Tekamah the charges were so high that he was compelled to drive the cattle from there. He thought $10 or $12 would be fair for a driver to take them from Omaha to Tekamah, and that all shippers considered they could ship them at that in preference to driving. As it is now they ask them from $20 to $30 per head. He has testimony from stationery corroborates Mr. Langford's, and he spoke of delays he had experienced in Omaha, of from 3 to 6 hours, it being of great damage to his cattle. H. Lydick, who has testified in the same way, all agreeing that they could drive their cattle from here and have them in better condition on arriving at the yards. Mr. Sutherland introduced considerable evidence to the contrary in the different states, and also in the accommodation—the patrons receive at the hands of the railroad company. He was asked by a representative of the company making enough to pay interest on their bonds and pay running expenses. They claimed that last year there had been over $90,000 deficiency in the revenue in the year. He persuaded the commission that the actual cost of the road was $42,000 per mile. But as a sample of what the arrangements were, they claimed that the cost of the road was $42,000 per mile. All who live on the line know how much that is worth. The plaintiff and defendant were given ten days in which to file their arguments.—Tekamah Bulletin.

GROVES AND WIND-BREAKS.

During a severe and protracted winter, many good resolutions are formed in the way of planting groves and wind-breaks. When the balmy days of spring come and the work of planting begins, many of these good resolutions are forgotten to be re-formed only when the blizzard season opens. We would remind our readers that the only way to avoid breaking good resolutions is to prepare the ground beforehand and procure the trees. They will then find time to plant them.

First, as to the preparation of the ground. This, which depends upon circumstances, is the first one we believe we should thoroughly pulverize the ground without replowing. If it had been subsoiled last fall, it would have been better for trees. For the following reasons: As the birds moisture better than spring plowing, and for that reason we would not re-plant now unless there was opportunity to subsoil as well.

Second, as to the kind of trees. Our correspondent must bear in mind that there is a radical difference between trees for timber and trees for a wind-break. For the first the tall, straight, soft wood is the best value, and for second the low-growing, bushy sorts are the most valuable. In this assortment, the ash, the catalpa and the black walnut are the only kind valuable for timber. As to the young trees of these varieties, we yearning, we would use them very largely. We would add to the collection two varieties of Russian willows—the willow for timber and the laurel-leaved for wind-break and ornament—and possibly some of the better varieties of Russian poplars, on account of their adaptation to that planting.

Third, as to the manner of planting. We would plant four feet by four. This would give 2,700 trees to the acre. We would plant the timber trees in the middle of the plot and the lowgrowing trees on the north and south sides of the plot, and the outside row on north and south side outtings of the laurel-leaved willow. These would be permanent trees. Next to that, soft maple, to be removed in a few years, and that boxelder to remain, at least everywhere. If soft maple was cheap and abundant, we would plant the middle rows with a soft maple, alternating with an catalpa, and removing them in about four or five years to give room. We would plant the elms along our maples so that room could be given as needed by removing the maple. As we do not know the maple, we would use catalpa, which is a native tree, and can make only general suggestions. A timber grove and wind-break combined should have a low-growing, bushy tree, that will stand crowding on the outside, the tall trees on the inside and the tallest-growing in the middle. They should be crowded closely from the start to maintain forest conditions. Thus in the forest grow closely, that is nature's way. The most valuable should be used as tree trees, to be removed when necessary. Applying these suggestions to the case in hand, we would use soft maple, catalpa, boxelder, and laurel-leaved willows, would place it on the extreme outside, the ash and catalpa on the inside, and the tallest-growing in the middle. We would use soft maple as a nurse tree, and remove it when the more valuable trees, and especially the ash and catalpa, as soft maple is cheap, and can in this way be used for nearly half the grove at the start, the outside row or grove of this kind need not be great.

It must be borne in mind that to be profitable a grove must be cultivated the first year with as much care as a corn crop. The ground should be in first-class condition at the start, and the weeds must be kept under. Where it is possible to mow with a mow or mangle in July, in a climate like Dakota, it should be done. In two, or at most, three years, trees planted four feet apart each way shade the ground completely and smaller trees or plants may be planted. Irrigation is unnecessary. A good heavy mulch will then be advisable. After this is exhausted the annual crop of leaves supplies the needed mulch.

A TARTAR BREAKFAST.

What a Traveler Saw During the Preparation of a Morning Meal.
I went into one of the stone-built houses, whose several doors Tartars were reaching round a small square roof fire, and was considerably excited by watching them cooking and dispatching their morning repast. To begin with, a very dirty copper vessel was put on the fire and filled with some grease. The natives busy themselves and water. While one of the men stirred this potage round and round with a wooden ladle, another produced some raw meat—a bit of the dog that had been the progenitor to tear up into small strips and throw them on the fire, every now and then popping a raw lump into his mouth and masticating it with apparent gusto. Even the bits on the fire were quickly disposed of after being merely stipped.
As soon as the potage was considered ready it was ladled out in little wooden cups, like the whisky "quaich" of the Highlands, minus the handles, which each man produced from his pocket. In the first of his dirty wooden cups gulped up from them with a prodigious amount of noise. After being replenished again and again until the pot was emptied, the cups were licked clean and reloaded from whence they had been taken. Another course of food was about to be partaken of after the manner of the first, but a regard for my own appetite for breakfast prevented my waiting to see it discussed. These hearty Tartars are quite independent of any other dishes beyond their little wooden bowls. In those they mix their stoup (meat made from barley) with water and salt and make an expeditious repast of it—Blackwood's Magazine.

Faults of Many Mothers.

American women of all classes are, as a rule, kindly negligent of some of the duties which pertain to health, especially as regards the open air. The cause of their many errors engages them, and that they, in consequence, have but little opportunity for leaving their homes, is scarcely sufficient. The number who actually can not enjoy each day an hour's outing must be small indeed, even though the climate forced to work the hardest. Not only do many women fall in this respect in their duty to themselves, but their young children suffer in consequence of the same neglect. From one week's end to another during the winter months a few of them keep their little ones in overheated rooms, if not huddled around the kitchen stove, and the result is we find them as spring approaches weak, puffy and ailing. In such families, colds, coughs, sore throats and the like are common afflictions. There is scarcely a day during the coldest season when even the baby can not be taken out of doors. Mothers who understand that upon the daily enjoyment of fresh and open air depends in a great degree, the health of their little ones, as well as themselves; if it is, in fact, absolutely indispensable to the well being of all.—Boston Journal of Health.

Animals Disappearing.

Fifty years ago the United States was the home of a large number of peculiar wild animals. Unless a nation preserve comes to the rescue very soon, another flock will see them nearly all extinct. The grizzlies are disappearing from the Rockies. Live buffalo are now worth from $500 to $1,000 apiece, which three years ago cost scarcely one-fifth that amount, and they are fast disappearing from the corner of Texas and in the Yellowstone Park. The caribou has been hunted almost out of existence. The mountain sheep, the moose, the beaver, the geese are all disappearing.

Improving a Proverb.

"I've always admired proverbs, my dear," Mr. Dusenberry said, as he rubbed his chin in a contemplative way. "They are concise and 'logical.' Now, for instance, there is the saying, 'Straws show which way the wind blows.' What could more tersely
"Yes," interrupted Mrs. Dusenberry, with a twinkle in her sparkling eye. "If you'd add the straws every morning, instead of letting 'em sift them, you'd know more about the direction of the wind than all the straws in creation would show you."—Detroit Free Press.

Extra Polish Applied.

There are some persons so "refined" that they are so officiously enmeshed from contact with their fellow-beings as if actually boxed in by glass and wood. A mispronounced word, an ungrammatical expression is sufficient to outweigh any degree of moral worth. To be sure, it is pleasant to an educated person to meet both refinement and worth; but he who accepts the former at the price of the latter becomes a fraud in the former. It is always a sufficient guarantee of a man's milk verdict of approbation is better lost than won.

Mad Wolves in Hungary.

Thirty persons belonging to a village near Orsova, in south-eastern Hungary, were recently bitten by mad wolves. Most of them have already died after excruciating sufferings.—Fairfield Gazette.

Women as Wage Earners.

The steady increase in the number of women finding employment in the different branches of business activity has resolved itself into a serious problem, which is morning more and less attention from time to time as circumstances bring the facts to public notice. There can be no denying the fact that the number of female wage-earners is steadily increasing, and this number is considered without regard to the past or present it may prove less extraordinary or alarming than some are willing to consider it.
No one will deny that the home circle and the domestic duties form the natural sphere of woman, and therefore she appears to better advantage and is so thoroughly a success as in the pursuit of this her logical vocation. While every one is thoroughly agreed on this point, it is not to be overlooked that its very existence presupposes a privilege of dependence upon others, while fate has not meted out impartially to all women, while to many it has been utterly denied.
The numerical excess of women over our male population may be largely accounted for the number of the weaker sex dependent altogether on their own exertions for their very existence, or it may be due to other less apparent reasons. But whatever the cause, the fact nevertheless remains that the number of women wage-earners is steadily increasing.
That the average woman prefers the hard struggle for existence that characterize the world's common standard to the quiet and seclusion of the home circle is not proven by the fact of her presence as a factor in the industrial problem. Quite the contrary is established by the readiness with which the former class is abandoned for the latter whenever circumstances permit.
It is therefore unreasonable for men to complain that equally intelligent beings, laboring under the same necessity of self-support, should be permitted to compete with them in an arena hitherto exclusively restricted to the stronger sex. That women receive smaller pay for equal work, which is one of the arguments used against them with singular inconsistency, is rather the outcome of the prejudice that has for ages kept the sex in an inferior position rather than to pay any amount on their own part.
As happens with all problems, this one is slowly but surely settling itself. The large number of women that have been compelled to earn their livelihood has opened up new avocations more peculiarly fitted to their capabilities.
For instance, great numbers of women are found employed as correspondents, clerks, stenographers, and so forth, who were formerly but a few years ago engaged in like capacities. Again, thousands of young women have been found suited to clerks in retail stores where women are the principal customers.
In like manner in many other lines of work women have shown themselves capable of carrying out their own destinies, hence the complaint that they have taken an undue advantage of their masculine competitors is not borne out by facts.
Instead, therefore, of complaining of the position of women in business life, the sterner sex should do everything to encourage them and better their condition. The world owes everyone a living, and the outcome of the prejudice, if there here can be any, is not to complain of overworking. Cavalry and manhood both demand that woman's position as a wage-earner should be recognized as a matter of justice, and with this has "riches" been customary.—New Orleans Posture.

Bill of Particulars.

"Good Master (to married man).
"Do you wish to marry this woman?"
Man—"I do."
Minister—"Do you wish to marry this man?"
Woman—"I do."
Minister—"Do you like the city as a place of residence?"
Man—"No, I prefer the suburbs."
Minister—"Do you like the suburbs?"
Woman—"No, indeed, I prefer the city."
Minister—"Are you a vegetarian in diet?"
Man—"No; I hate vegetables. I live on beef."
Woman—"I can't bear meat. I am a vegetarian."
Minister—"Do you like a sleeping room well ventilated?"
Man—"Yes; I want the window way down, summer and winter."
Minister—"Do you like so much fresh air?"
Woman—"No; it would kill me. I want all windows closed."
Minister—"Do you like to sit in the room?"
Man—"No; can't sleep with a light wain the room dark."
Minister—"Are you afraid in the dark?"
Woman—"Indeed I am. I have always had a bright light in my room."
Minister—"Do you like many bed-clothes?"
Man—"All I can pile on."
Minister—"Do you?"
Woman—"No; they suffocate me."
Minister—"I hereby pronounce you man and wife, and you the Lord have mercy on your souls."—New York Weekly.

THIS GOOD OLD STAND-BY accomplishes for every body exactly what is desired for. One of the reasons for the great popularity of the Mustang Liniment is found in its universal applicability. Everybody needs such a medicine. The Lumberman needs it in case of accident. The Housewife needs it for general family use. The Farmer needs it for his horses and team. The Mechanic needs it always on his work bench. The Miner needs it in case of emergency. The Pioneer needs it on his outfit without it. The Hunter needs it for his horses, his dogs, and his stock yard. The Health-Workman needs it. There is nothing like it to liberal supply of stock and labor. The Horse-fancier needs it—it is his best friend and sure reliance. The Stock-grower needs it—he will never lose his thousands of dollars and a world of trouble. The Railroad-man needs it and will need it as long as his life is a round of accidents and dangers. The Health-Workman needs it. There is nothing like it as an antidote for the dangers to life, limb and comfort which attend the pioneer. The Mechanic needs it about his shop among his employees. Accidents will happen, and when these come the Mustang Liniment is what is wanted. Keep a Bottle in the House. 'Tis the best of common sense. A case of accident may pain and loss of wages. Keep a Bottle always in the cabinet for use when wanted.
