Polite Minstrel's of Death.

There were formerly as many executions in France as there were courts of appeal, and each one was called after the name of the city where his court was located. "M. de Paris," "M. de Lyon," etc. (writes a Paris correspondent). Since 1873 there has been only one chief headman. The license of the last of the four generations of Samsons was revoked in 1847 for putting the guillotine in pawn one day when he was short. His successor was Haindreich, who was transferred from Amiens. While Samson was a stonemason, Haindreich looked like a gentleman. He was six feet tall, with a cold, calm air, a clear eye, and wore his white hair, whiskers and mustache cut close. His "repertoire" of sayings had on a dress suit and a white necktie. After each execution he went to St. Ambrose church and had mass said for the man whom he had just launched into eternity. Haindreich had a strong and an imperative voice, and when he laid his hand on the patient's shoulder there was no possible chance of resistance. Haindreich perfected the guillotine in several points and added the high platform. He died in 1872, after fifty years' service.

Roche, the next headman, was a jovial man. He was the son of an excise-man, and aided his father and uncle, who were the principal agents for all the excise-men before more or less intimately to the same family, marrying and intermarrying among themselves. Roche was of average height, thick set, had gray side-whiskers and wore black goggles to his eyes. When he performed his official duties he wore a frock coat and looked like a workman dressed out in Sunday clothes. It was Roche who discovered the present plan of blinding the criminal. It was for my personal convenience that I invented that fashion, and no one ever complained," he used to say. Roche was very proud of the guillotine, and called it his "jewel." When his duties summoned him away, the Parisian had things he did after the guillotine had been dismantled was to send a telegram to his wife, telling her how the affair had passed off, whether there was a large crowd, and the hour she might expect his return. Miss Roche had a high idea of her husband's professional skill. When he died, she exclaimed: "For work quickly and properly done, they will never replace my dear old husband." Roche died in 1873.

Deibler, the present executioner, is a dark-complexioned man of about fifty years, very gentle in his manners and very uncommunicative. His greatest dread is the journalist. This is probably because he has been frequently criticized for want of cleverness in his work. Although he has been executioner or assistant since 1863, he has never acquired the skill of his predecessors. Deibler married the daughter of the Argentine consul, and has two children. He lives in a modest apartment near the St. Louis hospital, in a house adjoining the police headquarters of the Tuileries ward. The executioner receives a yearly salary of $1,200 and traveling expenses of $1,000. His only other post is exempt from military service.—New York Sun.

The Deadly Cigarette. During a discussion in the American association Prof. W. S. Dudley described some experiments which he had made on the injurious effects of cigarette smoking. He showed that they were principally due to the manner of smoking, and not to the impurities. He is currently supposed. In smoking cigarettes, to get the desired effect, the smoke is inhaled, that is to say, it is simply drawn in to the mouth and then expelled. In experiments on animals, in which they are caused to breathe air containing cigarette smoke, it was found that after a mouse had smoked one and one-fourth cigarette life was extinct. Examinations of its blood showed that it had died from the effects of the carbon monoxide, which was contained in the smoke, and not the nicotine and other volatile products of the tobacco and paper.—New York Graphic.

Excellent Advice. Literary man, one of an eastern school (to wife)—"Marie, I don't like the working of the clock. I am never at home. I wanted to finish my novel this week."

Wife—"Oh, Louis! that too bad? I was so much in hopes that you should have it out by the time the season fairly opens."

Literary Man—"I can do nothing to-day. I assure you. Why, I not only feel bad, but am as stupid as a chloroformed man."

Wife (consequently)—"Well, then, don't attempt to do anything on your next to-day. Stay at home and work on your drama."—Arkansas Traveler.

IN GRASSMERE CHURCH YARD.

Green, Coleridge, Arthur Clough Others Who Lie Buried There.

The grave of Green, the painter, with the beautiful "Worshipful" epitaph, bids us pause, but we return to that tomb of Hartley Coleridge's. Above his dust the oak-leave wreathed upon the cross, the crown of thorns and the legend, "By Thy Cross and Passion," are eloquent of a life of constant effort for better than we are as we gaze. There are figures that haunt his holy spot. A sexton stands, full and spare of body. It is January 1, 1848, and with him are Wordsworth and Hartley Coleridge's brothers. Wordsworth tells the sexton the meaning of the ground for his own and for his wife's grave, and then is third party for the dead Hartley. And "Wordsworth" is much to be seen. The tomb of Doris and William's funeral two years ago in 1847, "When I lifted up my eyes from my grave," he says, "I saw you standing there. Then, turning to the sexton, he said: 'Keep the ground for me, we are old people, it cannot be for long.' It was not for long; a year and a few months passed, and in April, 1850, you gravely 'threw' me into the sea bed. We note the way trees, eight in number, brought by Wordsworth's direction from England and planted with his own hand here.

We listen to the murmur of the bees in the open air, and there, behind the Birch Boths close beneath the low church wall. Our eyes fall on the name of Clough, for this grave is the only one of the kind. It is a well, and in a moment there rises before us the possible form of one who has been a great poet, a great man, a great mind; we leave the poet's name to you.

Keep green the grass upon his grave, O Bothe, with thy living ways, and when the grass is green, O Bothe, our dear old right one is gone. Hence to the grave we go, and pass the monument, and there, behind Arthur Clough's monument, we realize that we are standing over the remains of a family whose name was honored by the name of the pattern parson of the date in the seventh book of the "Excursion." These grassy heaps that lie so unobtrusively close to the graves of the family of Symonds and on the low stone we read: "Here lies the remains of the Rev. Jos. Symonds, Minister of Wyburn for more than fifty years." We leave the churchyard, expecting to find the epitaph of Arthur Clough's grave. Here, where the old vicar and his friends are represented in the sixth of their high discourses.—Cornhill Magazine.

The Invalid's View of Things. The invalid, like the poet, and like all acute, sensitive beings, is remarkable not for seeing differently, but for seeing more to do the rest of the world. He is a man of a high standard with personality. Cold, hard substances are his avowed enemies. The soft, the yielding, the cozy, fill him with gratitude and delight. The arm chair invites and embraces him. The tiny teapot and sugar-sipper to do him service and the great bowl of soup and a fairly maternal solicitude. His cane is a Fidus Aeneas, his pet pillow a "Nancy" and his bed his bed. The nurse was named. As to the bottles arranged on his table, only the doctors who prescribed them are responsible for him. Sly little Morphine, hiding behind the rear, has a sinister, suggestive, Mephistophelean look, which at once attracts and repels.—Harper's Magazine.

Lady Guides for London. The Aileen, whose scheme for acting as a guide to ladies in New York has been published, has friends or imitators over here. Miss Edith Davis has organized a Lady's Guide association. Ladies must pass an examination, and, if accepted, will be supplied with an engraved bracelet to use as a badge. They will be examined as to the geography of London, cab, omnibus and street names, and to the names of children, needlework and painting, anyone objecting to these duties cannot join the association. A scheme has been proposed by a group of young women to form an association for the same purpose, on the ground that the ladies' guides are not only conducted by the opposite sex but they could not mind boys or sew, and, besides, Miss Davis claims originality, and has published an intention of prosecuting anyone who attempts to organize a rival affair.—Boston Herald's Letter.

Johnny Deman's the Best. The best little boy in a china shop, and to keep him quiet while his elders were examining dinner sets somebody showed him a collection of statuettes of little boys. "I'm glad," said Johnny, ungraciously, after a while: "Boys is nothing! Show us some little girls!"

Ex-congressman Hepburn, of Iowa, has been appointed solicitor of the treasury department.

When the bids for the Pacific Short Line were opened Monday they were found to number one hundred and twenty-five.

A big premium has been offered by Thurston county for the discovery of a man who is not a candidate for an office.

The agricultural implement that will probably be most generally used in Oklahoma next Monday is the Winchester rifle.

For a town of its size Blair will be pretty well salooned next year. Ten applications for licenses have been made, and they will all be granted.

The Pierce county court house proposition was again defeated. The possible removal of the county seat had more to do with its defeat than anything else.

"Pigs in Clover" are made at the rate of fifty thousand a day, and the demand is greatly in excess of the supply. The manufacturers are making a fortune out of a lucky hit.

The steamship Danmark was discovered drifting and abandoned in mid ocean last week, and no tidings of the passengers and crew, numbering seven hundred, have yet been received.

The organization of Thurston county was the work of would-be office holders. Seven aspirants for the office of the sheriff are already in the field, and all the back precincts to hear from.

Russell Harrison, son of the President, has been arrested on a charge of criminal libel, on account of the publication of an item from an eastern paper in a Montana paper owned by a company of which Harrison was the president.

According to the Railway Age, a recognized authority, the present year will be one the greatest in the history of railroad building. Very little of the construction will be in paralleling existing lines, the extensions being into unoccupied territory, now destitute of railroad facilities.

The Michigan legislature has taken the field against the cigarette, and passed a law prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or keeping for sale of cigarettes or the paper used in making them. The cigarette is injuring the medical men agree, but this is carrying the paternal idea of government a little too far.

The Omaha Republican states that John M. Thurston is to be rewarded for his political services by receiving a section of land in the best location for a city in Oklahoma, and that the appointment of J. C. Roberts of this state as register of one of the land offices was made for the purpose of helping him secure it. The story has a decidedly fishy flavor.

With the opening and settlement of the lands in the Indian Territory and the Sioux reservation in Dakota, the large tracts of public lands that are desirable for agricultural purposes will be exhausted, and the tracts of unimproved land in the older portion of the county west of the Missouri will attract more attention than they have done heretofore. The great majority of immigrants, intent on securing free government land, have passed by these lands with no investigation of their superior qualities or market facilities. A very few years will see all this changed. The home seeker, with no good government land beyond will of necessity buy his land instead of homesteading it. When that time comes northeastern Nebraska will be rapidly settled up, for there is no other section containing a large percentage of unimproved land, where lands of good quality can be bought as cheaply or on as favorable terms as here.

The Biechler trial, as all such trials do, brought out strongly one of the curious phases of human nature. By her own confession the woman was a courtesan, and her character was, to say the best of it, no better than that of the man she murdered. But when to her offense against the law of social purity she added the murder of the man she professed to love so madly, pure and refined women, who before would have regarded her touch as pollution, and themselves disgraced to have visited her, sent her flung and deluged in prison, and mourned and sympathized with her. Such is the purifying effect of a great crime. At the trial they crowded the court room, and their presence and their tears were a strong influence in her behalf. Even the minister in the pulpit, for a moment, sympathized, and called for an acquittal. When the verdict was returned the women were in hysterics and the men in sympathy. Hotel proprietors and sympathetic dames vied with each other in offering her a home as long as she could consent to stay in the city. All Omaha dissolved in a sea of tears, and with unbounded good thanked heaven that a harlot and a murderer had escaped punishment. Humanity is a queer, a very queer, compound.

Julius Tower, who lives just over the line in Cedar, sends the following butter report to the Concord Eagle:—Inclosed find Butter Record of 4 cows, from Jan. 31st, 1888 to Dec. 31st, 1888, 365 days. Made 90 lbs. butter, sold 700 lbs. for $192.28 used in family 280 lbs, or $46.67 per cow. No account is here included of calves and pigs raised on the new and skim milk, and yet who says cows "don't pay". Yours Resp. J. Tower.

The Dakota City Eagle closes an account of the Sieverston trial as follows: "Never has there been a murderer convicted in Dakota county except Holly Scott, a poor, unfortunate iceman. Winnebago Indian, who pleaded guilty to the crime charged. He is well known enough to stand trial his friends were favorable for an acquittal. Any man in Dakota county with a little money, is much safer killing a neighbor for a blood than he would be in a spring ten dollars. In all circumstances the past records of the courts tell that. This was about as close a call as John Sieverston could wish from the penitentiary and he is a man who has a very sum of money his friends hope that the lesson will be one that he will always remember and that his actions in the future will be changed. It was not Sieverston's reputation that he had by any means, nor the flattery plea made by his able attorneys; but it was something else that accomplished the desired end. Let us all hope that the little John Sieverston is again a free man, that we may never see his name appear connected with civil or criminal court proceedings and that he will endeavor hereafter to be an upright and respectable citizen.

Railroads and the Public.

The mileage of railroads in the United States has more than doubled in fifteen years. This fact is taken as evidence of the marvelous development of the country, and such it is, although the object of many of the roads and agriculture are quite sufficient on that point. The great growth of railway property yield profits, but it does not demonstrate that there are large profits from actual earnings. The returns of the roads tell a different story. A considerable part of the railroad construction of the last ten years has been undertaken for speculative purposes, and as Mr. Roberts, a member of the Pennsylvania system, stated in a recently published letter, these speculative enterprises have had the effect "to promote the building of new and often unnecessary lines, which at once divide with the established lines the traffic already fully served." While speculators may have in some instances piled up fortunes by the manipulation of stocks, the net earnings of the roads as a rule have not been equal to a few percent on the money invested. There are, therefore, good grounds, except in special cases, for a hue and cry against the roads on the matter of rates. Prompted by real or fancied grievances, the more radical shunters break out in advocacy of government ownership of railroads. This, they say, would put an end to "monopolistic extortion." But president Roberts asserts—and a man in his position would scarcely venture to give such testimony on a question of fact—that "to-day both freight and passenger traffic are carried at less than half the average rates that prevail abroad." Undoubtedly, the regulation of railroads by law, to prevent grossly unjust discrimination, is a good thing, but there can be a reason found for a general raid on the roads, or for government ownership or government control—Cincinnati Times.

Where Day Begins.

According to the way in which this arrangement is now carried out, the first land that the new day dawns upon is Easter Island, about 230 miles west of the coast of Chili, South America. That is to say, the 24th of July breaks here within a few hours of the last, having broken on the American coast to the east, and the two days run on alternately—the 23rd in Easter Island and places west, and in all places on the American continent. We may, therefore, realize this idea—that at 7:30 o'clock any morning of our lives in Great Britain the next day is commencing in the world—and to be found at this little island in the Pacific ocean, whence, in due course, it will travel round to us. But to have this the start of the world is not an unmitigated advantage to these islanders.

Suppose one of them sails east to America, which is his result? He will find that they keep the day there under a different date, and he will have to reckon one day in his calendar twice over to put himself right with their notions. "On the other hand," if an American crosses from east to west this wonderful magic line where the day begins, he will find the dates in this fresh part of the world are one in advance of him, and he must—strike a day out of his calendar to keep up with the times.

This was illustrated in the case of Magellan, the Portuguese captain, who sailed around the world from east to west in 1522, and having crossed the magic line of "day's birth" in his rounding, his calendar was, of course, a day in arrear. The sailors were completely ignorant of this, and finding, on landing at home, that their Sabbath was falling on Monday, they accused one another with tampering with the reckoning. It was not for some time that the true and simple explanation of the wonderful loss of time was discovered.—Ex.

Aphorisms from the Study.

The philosopher's trouble is that, while he can give fifty years to evaluating life impartially, life has spent several thousand years in shaping his prejudices.

In moments of decision there is danger of mistaking the exhaustion of long spiritual struggle for resignation to fate.

Faith, like any virtue, must have its test, and probably the reason for inexplicable evil.

An optimist is an unreflective individual with nerves at concert pitch.—Century.

Inverted Morality.

It is probable that nearly all who think of conduct at all think of it too much; it is certain we all think too much of other. We are not deterred by doing wrong, but for not doing right, Christ would never have had negative morality: "thou shalt" was over His word, with which He succeeded "thou shalt not." To make the idea of morality center on forbidden acts is to deplete the imagination and to introduce into our judgments of our fellowmen a secret element of guile. If a thing is wrong, we should not dwell upon the thought of it, we should not dwell upon it with inverted pleasure. If we cannot drive it from our minds—one thing of two. Either our creed is in the wrong and we must more indignantly remodel it, or else, if our morality be in the right, we must more leniently and should place our personal restraints.—Scribner's.

Best in the World.

THIS GOOD OLD STAND-BY accomplishes for everybody exactly what is claimed for it. One of the reasons for the great popularity of the Mustang Liniment is found in the universal applicability. Everybody needs such a medicine. The Lumberman needs it in case of accident. The Housewife needs it for her household. The Chamber needs it for his kitchen and the work bench. The Mechanic needs it always on his work bench. The Farmer needs it in case of emergency. The Housewife needs it for her kitchen, her stable, and her stock yard. The Steamboat man or the Boatman need it in their stores aboard and ashore. The Horse-fancier needs it in his best horse and saddle stock. The Work-garage needs it to well care their thousands of dollars and a world of trouble. If it is needed in any case, it will stand as good as the word of a gentleman and a doctor. The Blacksmith needs it. There is nothing like it as an antidote for the dangers to life, limb and comfort which surround the plowman. The Horseman needs it about his store when his equipment, accidents will happen, and when those cases the Mustang Liniment is wanted at once. Keep a Bottle in the House. 'Tis the best of security. Keep a Bottle in the Factory, it immediately in case of accident saves pain and loss of wages. Keep a Bottle Always in the Stable for when you wanted.
