DENNY'S LUCK

BY WILLIAM 0, PATEN.

Dennis Lowry was his name, but every one who know him called him cleany. Ho was a full, rather good-looking, yet sloucht-appearing young fellow of twenty-two or three. Ho had always lived in the sleepy little country village of Newton, and crey man-for clies around know him. Ho was accounted before the work of the country of the state of the country of the state of the country of the co celled nay and shiftless, and it was too that he had never exceled himself a great deal to prove the charge falsa. He was justified to lay his pure forcumatures to Luck. Worse than being for poor, he had been unlesty. This was justified to lay his pure forcumatures to Luck.
