The Presidential Party Put in a Day at Denver,

AND THEN SPEED EASTWARD.

The Ex-President receives an Ovation at Buffalo at the Formal Opening of the Cleveland Democracy's Club House—The Florida Fight.

Denver, Colo., May 13.—At the reception at Mrs. Governor Rountz's residence, Mrs. Harrison was presented with a handsome bouquet of Colorado wild flowers. After leaving the Grant residence the party were driven all over Denver suburbs and past the West Denver public school, where 1,400 children were drawn up in line. Returning the party were driven to the depot where large crowds were waiting to see them off. Promptly at 6 o'clock the train pulled out over the Burlington road amid cheering, waving of handkerchiefs and cries of "good bye. Everything went smoothly without a bit of the friction or confusion of any kind during the day. The president's speech here in the morning was as follows:

This scene is inspiring. This beautiful day has not failed to carry to the farthest parts of the country the news of the great industrial civilization. You are here to see the great industrial civilization of the world. You are here to see the great industrial civilization of the world. You are here to see the great industrial civilization of the world.

TO A HIGHER COURT

BOYD SAYS THAT HE WILL APPEAL HIS CASE AT ONCE.

Boyd Will Appeal. OMAHA, May 8.—Governor Boyd was seen yesterday and in response to inquiry as to his future movements he said:

"I have little more to say than that which is contained in an interview with me already published. A transcript of the proceedings of this case is being drawn up as speedily as possible and will be submitted to the supreme court of the United States along with the case of John Lincoln on Monday next until October, and there is no prospect of a hearing until after that time. It is my duty to decide my citizenship, the responsibility of Nebraska cutting no figure in the case whatever. If there is a further appeal, I will be represented by an Irishman, an Irishman who has resided here almost a half century, on account of the friendly relations between the two governments, as Ireland has always looked to America for support and assistance. While I am not an Irishman, I am an Irishman. I look still greater pride in being an American citizen, as I have always been, and will know I am as good a citizen as any man in the world, and it is as much my duty to defend the opinion as well as that of conservative democrats and republicans, that Judge Maxell is right in his decision, and I will not lawfully elected does not invalidate what he did.

Comment on the Nebraska gubernatorial case. CHICAGO, May 7.—Commenting on the alleged suppression of the case of Hon. James E. Boyd, the Journal (republican) says: Governor Boyd did some excellent things while his brief term of office lasted. His greatest service to law and order was his veto of the radical railroad legislation, which afforded an opportunity to be attempted by the folly and ignorance of the legislature. His veto while in office was a great service to the state, and he lawfully elected does not invalidate what he did.

Judge Maxwell's Opinion in the Nebraska case. LITTLETON, Neb., May 5.—The dissenting opinion of Justice Maxwell in the Thayer-Boyd contest is of great interest. The judge reviews in extensive detail the proceedings of the case, and then after treating on one or two other points, he in brief expresses himself thus concerning the enabling act:

"The first section of the act admitting the state of Nebraska into the union, passed by Congress on March 3, 1854, expressed an act to enable the people of Nebraska to form a constitution, etc., 'that the constitution to be formed by the people of Nebraska have formed for themselves and the same is hereby sanctioned.' The Congress thus construed the word 'people' as a synonym with the word 'inhabitants.' It is observed that the act admitting Nebraska into the union contains provisions which are exceedingly comprehensive. It vests the jurisdiction and state government 'as hereby accepted, ratified and confirmed, and said state of Nebraska shall be admitted into the union upon an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever.' It is not possible to find such strong language in an act admitting any other state into the union, and it is not possible to find more than that admitting the state of Texas."

It is necessary now to inquire how the original states were admitted into the union.

The preamble to the constitution of the United States declares that 'We the people of the United States, in order to promote a more perfect union, do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America.' However, then, was one of the people of either of these states when the constitution of the United States was adopted? It is not possible to find such strong language in an act admitting any other state into the union, and it is not possible to find more than that admitting the state of Texas."

January 30, 1802, the inhabitants of the eastern division of the territory northwest of Ohio were authorized to form a government for themselves, a constitution and a state government. The population consisted partly of citizens of the United States and partly of foreigners. The inhabitants that were authorized to form a state government for themselves, must have been all the real inhabitants of the territory, and not those who were admitted to the territory after the admission of the state into the union, must have equally participated in all its advantages, because if not, they would be considered as aliens, and all the inhabitants had not formed a government for themselves.

TEXAS WAS ADMITTED INTO THE UNION

ON AN EQUAL FOOTING WITH THE ORIGINAL STATES IN ALL RESPECTS WHATSOEVER.

Boyd was admitted into the union were somewhat similar, although not identical. The act admitting Nebraska, the act admitting Texas, the position which has been sometimes taken by the citizens of Texas must be taken by the citizens of Nebraska before they can become citizens of the United States is propounded. No doubt that the same was admitted and applied to the citizens or inhabitants of Louisiana or Florida—countries acquired by purchase, much less is it possible that the citizens of a state which by voluntary treaty or legislation becomes incorporated into the United States cannot be deprived of their rights as citizens of the United States, neither can citizens of Nebraska be stripped of their immunities and privileges pertaining to the citizens of this state.

Judge Maxwell's Opinion in the Nebraska case. LITTLETON, Neb., May 5.—The dissenting opinion of Justice Maxwell in the Thayer-Boyd contest is of great interest. The judge reviews in extensive detail the proceedings of the case, and then after treating on one or two other points, he in brief expresses himself thus concerning the enabling act:

"The first section of the act admitting the state of Nebraska into the union, passed by Congress on March 3, 1854, expressed an act to enable the people of Nebraska to form a constitution, etc., 'that the constitution to be formed by the people of Nebraska have formed for themselves and the same is hereby sanctioned.' The Congress thus construed the word 'people' as a synonym with the word 'inhabitants.' It is observed that the act admitting Nebraska into the union contains provisions which are exceedingly comprehensive. It vests the jurisdiction and state government 'as hereby accepted, ratified and confirmed, and said state of Nebraska shall be admitted into the union upon an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever.' It is not possible to find such strong language in an act admitting any other state into the union, and it is not possible to find more than that admitting the state of Texas."

It is necessary now to inquire how the original states were admitted into the union.

The preamble to the constitution of the United States declares that 'We the people of the United States, in order to promote a more perfect union, do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America.' However, then, was one of the people of either of these states when the constitution of the United States was adopted? It is not possible to find such strong language in an act admitting any other state into the union, and it is not possible to find more than that admitting the state of Texas."

January 30, 1802, the inhabitants of the eastern division of the territory northwest of Ohio were authorized to form a government for themselves, a constitution and a state government. The population consisted partly of citizens of the United States and partly of foreigners. The inhabitants that were authorized to form a state government for themselves, must have been all the real inhabitants of the territory, and not those who were admitted to the territory after the admission of the state into the union, must have equally participated in all its advantages, because if not, they would be considered as aliens, and all the inhabitants had not formed a government for themselves.

Comment on the Nebraska gubernatorial case. CHICAGO, May 7.—Commenting on the alleged suppression of the case of Hon. James E. Boyd, the Journal (republican) says: Governor Boyd did some excellent things while his brief term of office lasted. His greatest service to law and order was his veto of the radical railroad legislation, which afforded an opportunity to be attempted by the folly and ignorance of the legislature. His veto while in office was a great service to the state, and he lawfully elected does not invalidate what he did.
