If you make money out of your citizens spend it with your citizens. Don't go elsewhere to spend it, and it won't be out of order to inform some of our merchants and business men that it is a good principle to purchase the goods you do not carry yourselves, of other Wayne merchants who do.

The entertainment given by the Peak Sisters last Friday evening was a grand success. The Peak Sisters were Mrs. C. W. Simon, and Mrs. Theobald, Misses Edwards, Morgan, Gordon, Chichester, Kortright, Smith and Norton. They all performed their parts remarkably well and furnished a good entertainment. The proceeds amounted to about $9.00.

The Great American Shows, a regular old style, one ring show will be in our city Friday, June 8th, afternoon and night. Do not miss seeing the trained ponies, dogs, monkeys and birds; this show positively gives a grand free balloon ascension and parachute leap every day at one o'clock. Do not forget the day, Friday, June 8. Admission 25 cents.

Saturday afternoon two itinerant showmen stretched a rope from the top of the HERALD building to the rear of the meat market of Fred Volpp. A large crowd was drummed up, the hat passed, a number of dimes and nickels secured and the performance commenced. High kicking, tumbling, etc., over, they proceeded to haul a dog up to the top end of the rope and let him slide down again on a pulley. The same "difficult feat" was performed by one of the men, after which they proceeded to the train and took their departure.

The HERALD acknowledges the receipt of a program for the Seventh Annual Commencement of the Wayne High School which occurs at the opera house to-morrow evening.

Between friction and faction there was enough electricity in the council meeting Monday evening to have caused an unusual display of electric lights but electric lights went glimmering.

A fine rain fell Tuesday evening and all signs of the late frost have about disappeared. Nature has again donned her most beautiful raiment and Wayne county presents a scene that would fill the heart of an artist with pleasure.

Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Mitchell entertained a few friends very pleasantly last Friday evening at a progressive domino party, and another party of the same character was given at the residence of A. L. Tucker Tuesday evening.

Gene Gildersleeve met with rather a painful accident last Thursday morning. While following a harrow he caught his foot in some manner and fell over onto the harrow, the lever striking him in the eye, causing a very painful wound.

Ashley Abel, of Chicago was in the city the first of the week in the interest of the Uniform Bank K. of P. Enough names were secured, measures taken for uniforms and in four or five weeks Wayne can boast of a division of this rank in the order consisting of 32 members.

Messrs James Britton, Henry Ley, Price Williams, R. W. Wilkins and W. H. McNeal have secured the Andrews Opera Company for June 7. This is the old original company that played here seven and four years ago, and not the one represented here a year ago. The company will play "Mikado" giving the opera in its entirety.

The Masons were surprised Tuesday evening in a most pleasant manner. While the lodge was in session a number of ladies of the Presbyterian church called at the lodge rooms with ice cream and cake, and for an hour the members of the lodge were royally entertained, and each Mason given a beautiful button hole bouton.

The Baptists are making preparations to observe Children's Day, June 10. In the morning the pastor will preach to the children and the children will sing. Next Sunday the pastor will preach a sermon to the young people, in the morning, and to the gray haired, in the evening. Everybody invited.

The HERALD heartily coincides with our neighbor up the street on the court house question. A citizen of Wayne county who can face the old "rookery" called a court house, without a tinge of shame being depicted upon his face, has no pride or interest in the welfare of the county. The question must be agitated and one time is just as good as another.

The HERALD will admit that it feels a little sick over the prospect of the city securing electric lights, but still hopes that some action will be taken that will result in the establishing of a plant in Wayne. Just why the council should have been asked whether they should pass ordinance No. 82, to a third reading at the last meeting when it was in order to read it, is a proceeding we do not understand. If the ordinance was not satisfactory amendments could have been offered that would have so made it.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Nearly One Thousand People Assembled at the Opera House.

DECORATION DAY REVIEWED.

A Beautiful Day—Business Houses Decorated with Flags and Bunting—Twelve Hundred People at the Opera House—Procession More than a Half Mile in Length.

Sunday morning at ten o'clock the old soldiers of Casey Post G. A. R. and other Posts assembled to the call of drums at the court house and marched to the opera house where the memorial services were held. Nearly 1000 people assembled and the large opera house presented a sea of living humanity. Old Glory bedecked the interior here and there and every part of the program was carried out like clock work.

The first on the program was prayer by Rev. Ernst, followed by excellent music by Prof. Davies' choir. Rev. Kunkleman then led in prayer and Rev. Theobald read a passage from the scriptures, followed by another beautiful selection by the choir.

The address was delivered by Rev. H. H. Millard, from the text, "There is no Discharge in that War." It was a masterly attempt, eloquent and full of fervor, and such an address as could not fail to touch the heart of every old soldier and all American citizens. Peelingly he portrayed the treatment the survivors of the war should receive at the hands of the nation, and how anyone should be classed as unnumbered who would dare to protest against the soldiers pension.

The morning of Decoration Day dawned beautiful and pleasant and in short time all nature seemed astir. By nine o'clock nearly every business house was decorated with flags and bunting, bound to do honor to the old soldiers. At the hour of 1:30 p. m. the business houses were all closed. The G. A. R. assembled at the building occupied by the HERALD, and headed by the College drum corps, marched to the opera house with the fire department immediately in the rear. It is estimated that 1,200 people, crowded into the building, while many were unable to gain admittance.

The first on the program was prayer, followed by a beautiful song by the College choir under the direction of Prof. Ezerman.

Judge Robinson, of Madison, who was to have delivered the address, was unable to be present, owing to sickness, and instead short but appropriate addresses were made by Rev. Kunkleman, Prof. Ashley and Rev. Millard. The choir then sang, "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground," after which Prof. Pilo and Frank Fuller addressed the vast audience.

At the close of the exercises the procession formed with the firing squad and the College drum corps in the lead. Next in line came the school children with baskets of flowers, the fire department, Grand Army citizens on foot and in carriages, and the procession was more than a half mile in length. After reaching the cemetery, the graves of the dead heroes were strewn with flowers and the usual ceremonies of the G. A. R. performed.

Quite a number of Grand Army men were present from neighboring towns.

The old soldiers who lie buried in Greenwood cemetery are, James Phalen, Chris, Birlingmeier, L. W. Grasset, I. W. Hungerford, D. W. Britton and J. H. Brown.

The Wayne ball club went to Wakefield this afternoon to contest for supremacy with a club of that city.

The fire department nine and a city nine played a game of ball yesterday, the score standing 13 to 16 in favor of the city nine.

A number of the young people fitted up a hay-rack and with well filled lunch baskets and gasoline stove, drove out to the grove of Chas. Neiss four miles east of Wayne yesterday evening, where they had a most enjoyable time. On their return to the city the air resounded with song and laughter.

MIKADO.

The old favorite, the best opera ever written, will be produced by the Andrews Opera Co. at the opera house on Friday evening June 8th. Ed. Andrews has the reputation of being the best Koko that ever played the part. The remainder of the cast will be almost identical with the one that so much pleased every audience in every city of the U. S. only a few seasons past. The costumes are all bright and new. To say the performance will please you is too mild. You will laugh, you will ache, you will scream. Secure seats at once as the house is sure to be crowded.

Just in a nice line of Tadoras at D. E. Smith & Co.

Two or three of the old soldiers in this vicinity have had their pension cut off or reduced to $2 per month and to say that they have contempt for the present administration would be drawing it mild.

Burglars broke into the depot Thursday night and carried the money drawer to a pile of ties a short distance west of the depot where it was found. The outprints secured just nine pennies as a result of their haul.

Oakland Independent.—Rev. Millard of Wayne, formerly pastor of the M. E. church of this place, delivered an able and eloquent lecture at the M. E. church Thursday evening on "Perils of Christian Civilization." A fairly good house was present.

W. H. McClusky, Dr. Cherry and Frank Benson, of Winside, were given the first degree in Masonry by the Wayne lodge Tuesday evening. A. T. Chapin, H. B. Miller, A. H. Carter, W. V. Coous and Mr. Cole were in attendance from that town.

Ran Frazier lost a car of cattle by fire near Craig last Friday. The fire is supposed to have been started by sparks from the engine. The cattle were in a Streets car and a very steer was burned.

The other cars were pulled out of the way. Another shipper lost a car in a like manner at Oakland the same evening.

Sheriff Crockett, of Knox county came in Saturday with a prisoner by the name of Grouse, charged with aiding prisoners to escape from jail last September. The prisoner asked for a change of venue to Wayne county, which was granted by Judge Robinson. The Sheriff would not accept the bond of Grouse for his appearance at the next term of the district court, therefore he was placed in the county jail in charge of Sheriff Reynolds.

A special train of eleven car loads of corn under the supervision of Conductor-Holbrook, was sent from this city Friday night by the grain dealers and Saturday evening one of ten cars. Special after special is made up at Wayne, consisting of stock and grain, and no town or city on the road begins to furnish the freight business that is received here and the railroad company certainly ought to provide Wayne with at least equal rates of those in vogue in towns on the line.

Everybody interested in a cheap excursion to the east should get information concerning the excursion to Asbury Park in conjunction with the National Educational Association. This excursion will leave Nebraska on July 5th, via the Northwestern line for all parties north of the Platte. The train will be made up at Missouri Valley via Emerson and Blair, the Northwestern being the official line for this part of the state. The train will be under the general charge of Prof. Ashley of Wayne. For information as to fare, hotel rates, accommodations, limit of tickets and privileges see or write, Prof. B. W. Ashley, Wayne.

The fire department responded promptly to the alarm of fire turned in about five o'clock Thursday evening and in a few minutes was playing on the barn of R. Philleo which had caught fire from a pile of rubbish burning near the barn. In a short time the fire was under control although the stable was in ruins. The fences and barns near by caught fire at times but were promptly extinguished. Mr. Philleo's loss is about $300 with no insurance. That the hose company needs at least 300 feet more of hose was plainly evident, and had the wind been blowing nearly every building in the block would now be in ashes. The place of keeping the fire apparatus must be situated in a more convenient place than it now is, as such valuable time is lost in getting to a fire.

The Yellow Glow of the Horizon,
Painted on the sky by the setting sun, is a beautiful sight. Not so the yellow glow of a face afflicted with biliousness. And oh! the unpeppery discomfort that hits in the wrong place produces. Twice in the right side and under the right shoulder blade, nausea, vertigo, sick headache, constipation, faulty digestion. Not in an instant can the symptoms of biliousness be dispelled, but persistence in the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will eradicate them, restore digestion and regularity of the bowels, and counteract tendencies to more aggravated complaints, which an interruption of these functions begets. Rheumatism, indigestion of the kidneys and bladder, neuralgia and inability to sleep, are also remedied by this gentle preventive and restorative of nerve force and tranquility. As an antidote to the poison of malaria, it is unailing and prompt. A wineglassful three times a day.

A SPRING MEETING.
Hello, Bob Wren?
Are you back again?
Glad to see you so well and so merry!
Remember me to your folks.
Rather early this year?
Door, but I wish I'd a bit of a cherry just ripe in the south.
Melt in your mouth.
Weren't you sorry to leave the sunny land of Florida, and of love and honey?
By and by I'll be here to greet you with you and blossom, but somehow the atmosphere seems melancholy.
For the winter has been long, and the wind, oh, how it makes you shiver.
And long for the balmy air that blows from the south, that you've missed so much.
Above some river.
That warm in Florida, that quiet flow!
Have you any new songs to sing this season?
And do you know where you are going to stop?
We're taking you in the very top.
Of the Maple?—'sures quite within reason.
You're a bit noisy that you've talked so tall?
Oh, nice!—They surely you'll come and call!
—Harper's Young People.

DOCTOR HOBART.

From a story by Edward W. Flagg, in the New Englander.
Elsie Hobart was just a trifle hot tempered as she busied herself about the little cottage preparing an early breakfast. Her husband had been out of work over a month and she had been obliged to support him and the children sewing day and night, until now she was almost disheartened. She thought of her wedding day, when she walked from the church to the carriage on a brightflowered carpet, while children scattered flowers; lately she had walked on a kitchen floor.

Six years before, when Putnam Hobart led his wife out of the little rustic church at Forsyth, the May sun shone encouragingly into his face. Smooth roads seemed to stretch out in every direction. Things went well for a year. Then the financial crashes came and he began to go down. He speculated with Elsie's money and lost it. Then he became a clerk, with meager wages, and all this time their home life, with little money to support it, was becoming unhappy. Finally on the 1st of June, he was thrown out of employment entirely and since then he had hung lazily about, seemingly without ambition and with no aim to do anything. It was now July and on this day, the 5th, he was to accept a position out of town for which he had applied in answer to an advertisement and it was to enable him to catch an early train that Elsie was preparing breakfast at this early hour, while the other villagers were still sleeping. As she went about her work, thoughts of the past filled her mind, and made her angry, while looking into the future she saw little hope.

"He'll be back again, soon," she said to herself. "The work won't suit him; I know it."
That morning he went to take the place. Two days later he came back. The work was not to his taste—that was all he said. Two days after that, a writ, secured by some of his creditors, was served and then the creditors came. But they found little enough to attach. In the garden rank wormwood and thistles look down on puny corn; there was a woodpile in the yard, but of furniture and the refuse of recent carpentry lay in a tangled heap; and in the house the prospect was not much better. Elsie's poor sewing machine being everything that the creditors thought worth taking.

Elsie went back to her father's with the children. Her husband traveled westward to one of the river states. He would come back in a little while, he said; he would begin life over again and be her lover once more. More than a year after his words were still ringing in her ears, but he had never come back. The strongest links which bound them had snapped asunder: the children all lay buried in the graveyard on the hillside. The physician who tried to save them was eloquent and ignorant. In the early stages of the disease he prophesied their speedy recovery; in a few days it was an easy matter to predict their death. When the last child lay dead before her, the wish to know what the nature of medicines was, and what knowledge could do to save life, became a settled purpose with Elsie. She would be a physician—and she would be a faithful and thorough physician. Elsie entered a medical college in a prairie city. In four years she became a physician in the City Hospital. She found time to do many things for which she was not paid. With steady nerves and cheerful presence, she ministered to the sick, and so the druggist, if she could not save souls. In six months she was known as skilled physician; in a year she had established that reputation throughout the hospital.

Her appointment at the hospital had come through the influence of the chief surgeon. She had been pleasantly associated with him in her studies; but her Platonic friend now became her devoted lover. Her explanations did not satisfy him, and her desire that her work should not suffer and that their association should not cease wrung her secret from her reluctant lips.

One icy afternoon in February she was summoned to Dr. Gay's office.
"I am called to a consultation in Robey," he said, pointing to a dispatch. "It is impossible for me to go. I can't leave No. 6; and there are two critical cases in the city. Will you go?"

"Yes, if you will trust me."
"As I would myself," was the doctor's reply.
Soon the train for Robey was bounding westward, with Elsie aboard. Somehow her thoughts went back to the happy days following her marriage. A thousand images of her husband came to her mind. With all his faults he had meant to be kind; in other circumstances, all would have been different—and although she was in the first flush of success she would have given up all for him even now.

At last the Robey station was called. As she alighted she was met by a boy carrying a smoky lantern and a man hurried in. As Elsie stepped forward, the man stared at her curiously.
"Dr. Gay couldn't come," she said.
"That's the word we got," said the man behind the fur collar. "Said he'd send one just as good. We hadn't counted on it's being a woman, though. The gals' always been puny," he continued.

Then they left the station and presently they came to a house where lights were burning in the lower rooms. Elsie was shown into a small sitting-room. The kitchen-door stood ajar, and through it a short, thin woman soon entered.

"My daughter, Henrietta, she said. She's been ailing," off an' on, four years. We've tried no end of medicines. Our doctor calls it angulur pectoris. He made a deal of Henrietta; he meant to marry her, miss."

Elsie checked this torrent of speech when she could and sat down in the sick-room and watched her patient who was a young girl, perhaps 18. On the table by the bedside were bottles and vials. She glanced at the labels and shook her head in indignation.

"It's pneumonia," she said. "The girl has been treated wrong, altogether wrong. It is atrocious bungling."

The room was still vibrating with her words when the attending physician entered.

"Dr. Hobart," sobbed the mother, but she could not go on.
There was a moment of bewildering confusion. The family had withdrawn, and Elsie, stunned and almost powerless, stood gazing at her husband. This man of many schemes had groped his way into a high profession; he had floated into a hazardous connection with some medical charlatan, and the few scraps of knowledge which clung to him became in his unskilful hands so many deadly instruments. His vanity so blinded him to his ignorance, that here he was experimenting on the girl whom, as had just been poured into Elsie's startled ears, he claimed to love and even planned to marry. No familiar word passed between the two. Elsie spoke only, in burning, trembling words, of the wicked mistake. Her thoughts were chiefly at this moment of the suffering girl.

"I shall relinquish it to you," was all he said, and then he left the room and the house. Upon Elsie rested the burden of this young girl's life. She worked unweariedly, while her heart beat wildly, to wrest her patient from the influence of the drugs; and just as a little clock buzzed 12, the sick girl woke to consciousness.

After the dimness of the sick-room, the light in the kitchen seemed dazzling. The quick departure of Dr. Hobart was commented on, and Elsie listened in guilty silence.
"I must take the early train," she said, as she gave her directions; "I have to be at the hospital in the morning. If there is a change for the worse, you may send word to me at once."

"What's the name?" Mrs. Plympton asked.
"Send to Dr. Gay."
The woman looked at her inquiringly.

"Mebby you're his wife," said one.
"No, I am not," and, with a good-bye, she followed the boy with the smoky lantern.

The Robey depot was kept warmed and lighted for the convenience of early passengers. Elsie sat on one of the backed benches, while feverish thoughts crowded through her brain.
"Your husband has basely deserted you; call it by a milder name if you will—this is what it means. Five years ago he promised to come back to you, and he has never done so. He has saved the life of the girl whom he professes to love."

There came a sound as of some one being dragged along the platform; and a railroad functionary emerged from a little office.
"Is that Hobart? Don't say he's been—"
"No, he hasn't," with convincing gestures; "his breath's jes' like a rose!"
"But what's to pay, Toby? Where was he?"
"Layin' on the track, close to the switch. He seems to be thurin' out now," continued the man, meditatively. "I s'pose the trouble was that case of Plympton's gal. They'd a' lost her if the consultin' doctor hadn't come. She's a woman thour, an' kind of a half-way alphyth."

"ARE YOU WARMER NOW, PUTNAM?"

The ticket agent, aware of Elsie's presence, gave the man a nudge. Elsie had left her seat, and was talking in a low voice to the man who sat shivering over the fire.

"Are you warmer now, Putnam?" she asked, when the men had disappeared in the office.
"Yes."

His eyes shot swift, inquiring glances, and she knew what he would ask:
"She was better when I came away. I think she will get well."
"It would have been murder if she had died. I called myself a murderer when I left the house. I didn't care what became of me."

He detailed his miserable experience before he came to Robey. He had gone down and down until he became a very tramp. While the forest fires were raging, and the sun one day was wasted in smoke, he lost his bearings, and for days he traveled in circles. It was night-fall when he came into the village. It was raining; else he would have sought shelter in the fields or under a grain-stack. Fathers of families glowered at him and pointed with their fingers toward the county house, five miles across the grain belt. At the Plympton cottage a young girl looked pitifully at him, and begged that he might stay; and from that time he had loved her as he could love.

"I am not worthy of you; we ought never to have met," he groaned.
"How can you say that and think of the dear child?" Was it a bargain for food and shelter? I want to love you; you must live so that I can; you must let me help you to do it. We must live together. Dr. Gay will help you to get work. I will go back to Forsyth—I will do anything—but we must not live apart."

Putnam Hobart came to the Bethesda Hospital and, after a lingering illness, died. Dr. Hobart went away with the body and after a week returned and began the old routine again. Dr. Gay watched her day by day as she moved in black about the wards. Three months, six months, a year went by, and then again he told his love to the woman who now was free.

Forsyth, Robey, Bethesda, the four graves, the great effort—all seemed to cluster about this moment of Elsie's broken life. She had made the ascent alone. Should she go on alone? She hesitated long; but one night when the sun went down after the long day, with a smile born of sorrow, but born too of love and confidence, she took the hand which was held out to her.

Rural Mail Delivery.

Rural mail delivery has been brought to notice again by an appropriation of twenty thousand dollars for "experimenting" with the regular postoffice—appropriation bill. The average member of Congress ought to know without further experimenting that the entire population of our rural districts would be directly benefited by regular mail delivery to an extent which would far more than compensate for any extra cost which might be assumed. Nothing so broadens and develops a man as a constant acquaintance with the affairs of the world. The more secluded a man is the narrower he is apt to be. The seclusion of farm life drives many a wide-awake, energetic man to leave his farm and take a less independent position, and one less healthful physically and morally, in some great city. Rural mail delivery would do much to counteract this undesirable tendency and to elevate the intellectual and social status of our country at large.
The plan has long been in successful operation in England, France, and Germany, and need not be considered an experiment in any sense. Still we are glad to see enough interest manifested to try the plan, even in a small way.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

The First Edition.
When a man succeeds in his calling he can afford to reveal the secrets of less prosperous days. A well-known writer of humorous prose and verse was talking with a bibliomaniac a few days ago, when the latter said: "By the way, I am collecting first editions of American authors. I want to add your first book to my collection—Have you any copies of the first edition?" "Yes," answered the author, "I have all of them."
"Women can have good times, and be good-natured afterward, but a man can't."

ITALIAN BANKS IN NEW YORK.

The Way the Italian Bankers Rob Depositors of Their Money.
The Italian banks of New York, of which there are about 132, are patronized by the most ignorant Italian laborers. The bankers, who are of a little higher grade than the laborers, do a great variety of work, sending money to Italy, writing letters, acting as adviser and sometimes changing the office into an employment agency. Money is given to a banker by the laborers to be sent to Italy, if he chooses to send it right away, he does; if not he waits till he gets ready, sometimes never sending it. All the customers' letters come to the banker and, as very few of the depositors can read, he reads them whatever he wishes to.

The banks are expected to work without compensation, and so they swindle the customers to obtain it. If a depositor wishes to go some place he has a banker buy his ticket and is overcharged by that person, who keeps the surplus for himself. Dr. H. M. H. in his trouble. During the past eight months the fourteen Italian bankers absconded in New York. The reason that so many got out is on account of the hard times. The depositors, being out of work, go to the bank to get their savings, but the banker, having probably been juggling with the money, is unable to meet the demands and is forced to run away. Of course all of the bankers are not dishonest. The fact that $5,000,000 annually passes through their hands shows that the criminal element is not in control.

Medicine and Cats.

A New-Yorker had an Angora cat upon which he set a great value. Unhappily she was in somewhat frail health, but she could not be persuaded to take medicine. It was put into her milk and mixed with her meat, but all such experiments were unsuccessful. Attempts to force it into her mouth and down her throat proved equally unavailing; she would not take the disagreeable dose. At last a young Irish girl, just out on the old county was received into the kitchen and heard of the cat difficulty. "Sure," said she, "give me the medicine and some lard, and I'll warrant she'll be eating all I give her." She mixed the powder and the lard, and smeared the cat's paws with the compound. "Puss" at once began licking herself clean, and of course swallowed the medicine. The master of the house expressed his assurance and gratitude. "Faith," said the girl, "in Ireland every body knows how to give medic'ine to a cat."

It Should Keep Them Cool.

From the estimates given by two reputable ice dealers of New York City, the annual consumption of ice in New York, Brooklyn, Hoboken, Newark, and Jersey City is something enormous. It takes between three and four billion pounds to supply the trade, and this is just half the amount harvested, as ice men calculate that 50 per cent. of all ice cut is lost by melting or breakage before being delivered to the consumer.

Says Animals Are Immortal.

Canon Wilberforce told an interviewer the other day that he believed emphatically in the immortality of the lower animals. He believes that every argument by which we maintain the continuity of the personality of men after death is of equal validity in maintaining that death does not end the individuality of the lower animals.

Even the Missouri river is going democratic. It is causing destruction in many places.

The state league of republican clubs meets in Lincoln June 12th. Wayne should send representatives.

Omaha has nearly always done the right thing by the republican party, therefore the metropolis of the state is justly entitled to the state convention.

To think of congress in session all summer and earning their bread by the sweat of their brow is tough. The people would be willing to furnish the bread if the show would only adjourn.

Although Wayne has been trading along at a little slower gait the past year than is her custom, she is preparing to put on her husking clothes, and when she does the gait will be a 2:07 pace.

The thanks of the HERALD are due Congressman Meiklejohn for a number of public documents, among which is the famous tariff speech of Thos. B. Reed and the seventh annual report of the commissioner of labor.

The democratic press used to talk about strikes but then its different now, there are no strikes?—It's a unanimous strike and the democratic party will receive a blow this fall that will be worse than falling through its platform.

"Help one another," is a motto to remember during these Cleveland times, and this can be done in no better way than by insisting that you are supplied only with American goods made in America. Ask your neighbors to do the same. American Economist.

Chas. S. Coney, of Stanton, is a candidate for state superintendent before the republican state convention. Mr. Coney has been closely allied with the school interests of the state for ten years, is serving his fifth term as superintendent of Stanton county, was president of the North Nebraska teachers association and was assistant superintendent of the Nebraska educational exhibit at the world's fair. He is also a true blue republican, thoroughly qualified for the position and if he is favored with the nomination his election is assured.

Forty years ago yesterday President Pierce signed the famous Kansas-Nebraska bill, which gave to Nebraska a territorial government and a definite territory, but it was not the Nebraska that is known today. Before that time it was supposed to be a wild and barren waste of territory north of Texas and west of the Missouri river, with an unknown western boundary. As defined by the Kansas-Nebraska bill the territory of Nebraska extended north and south from the 40th to the 49th degree of north latitude with the Missouri and White Earth rivers bounding it on the east and the Rockies on the west. The territory included is the now states of Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana and North and South Dakota.

The first gun in the campaign in Mr. Wilson's own state of West Virginia has been fired, and Mr. Wilson does not seem to like its recoil. A municipal election was held in Martinsburg yesterday, and a special from that town says: "The municipal election held here was a Waterloo for the democrats. The republicans carry every ward in the town for mayor and four out of five for the council. The vote in the first ward is a tie. John B. Wilson is elected mayor over Charles P. Matthaies by a majority of 229. At the last municipal election the democrats elected their mayor by a majority and four out of five councilmen. The republicans are jubilant." West Virginia Democrats don't like the news. They fear, and with just cause, that it portends the defeat of several of their number in the congressional elections this fall. Republicans believe the election in Martinsburg means the election of at least three congressmen from West Virginia. —Wednesday's Sioux City Journal.

An exchange very aptly remarks that the republican battle cry in this congressional district this fall will be: "Millions to the sugar maker, but not one cent to the corn raiser." Niobrara Tribune.

If this was true, but it is not, we would like to know what in the democratic cry will be. The last democratic cry in behalf of the people has "dummed" near used 'em up.

Eighteen hundred and ninety was a good republican year, and the entire land was prosperous. The railroads of the United States in that year carried according to the revised statistics, 36,000,000 tons more freight than all the railroads of Great Britain, Germany, France, and Russia combined. The people demanded "a change" and got it, but they have a great deal to answer for. —Inter Ocean.

A Word on Exports. The free-trader is always telling us that under protection we are not able to sell our goods in foreign markets, but that if we have free trade we shall be able to sell in every market in the world. During the last twenty years England has been a free trade country while America has been protected. We can see how the exports of the two countries have increased from the following figures:

Table with 2 columns: Period, Increase of exports over preceding ten years. Rows: 1870-1880, 1880-1890, Average increase.

It thus appears that during these twenty years the average increase of exports has been only 21 per cent in free trade England while it was 84.3 per cent increase in America. This fact is calculated to upset another free trade theory.

He Will Right the Wrong. From the American Economist. The editor of the American Economist lives on Long Island, and when homeward bound he sometimes hands a few copies of the paper to neighbors who have nothing to read. This kind of missionary work might well be done by other friends of protection. It bears forth good fruit as is shown by the following instance of a man who will right the wrong he did in 1892.

Editor American Economist: I had a copy of the American Economist handed to me of the date of April 6. Now, I was always a republican from the time I was 21 up to the time Grover Cleveland was elected the first time, and there were such flaring speeches and gigantic promises of big wages and good times that I, like thousands of others, took too much stock in them. But we all know to our sorrow what it all amounted to. I have read nearly every word in the above named paper, and am pretty well convinced that I have made the biggest mistake of my life.

Now I would like to know how a man can become a member of the American Protective Tariff League, and if there is a membership fee to pay, how much is it. I am a carpenter with six in my family, and one year ago my wages were $2.75 per day, and plenty of work. Now they are $2.25 and work about one half of the time. If there is any organization that will make times better for the workingman and woman, I am one man that is ready to go into it and vote for it every time. A. G.
