Views of the Candidates and Platform by Leading Papers.—Reprinted by the Principal Democratic Papers of the Country, Twenty-eight of them Leading German Papers.

Bixby correctly says: "If Mr. Bryan should carry the solid south and all the western states to the Missouri river including North Dakota and Devil's Lake, he would still lack twenty-seven electoral votes of the number necessary to elect. This would require him to capture Minnesota, Iowa and Wisconsin or two or three other old states to secure the required votes to make him President. It is a feat that cannot be accomplished. He cannot even carry his own state. Iowa has less than 25,000 populists, many of whom believe strongly in a protective tariff that they will not swallow free trade in order to get free silver. Wisconsin has few pops and the long end of its democratic vote will go to McKinley. Minnesota is in no sense a doubtful state, and can be depended upon to give the republican ticket a majority that will curl the hair of Ignatius Donnelly and make old Calamity Owens wish he had never kicked over the traces to gratify the desire of Eric Oleson for something unattainable. East of these sentiment is settled in favor of sound money, and something to do, and the flim-flam oratory and watered wisdom of all populism cannot induce the people to vote for a continuance of conditions that democratic incapacity has thrust upon them. In all probability Kentucky and Tennessee will contribute their electoral vote to McKinley, giving him a majority of ninety-nine in the college that makes Presidents. Mr. Bryan will make a first-class messiah for the handful of Rocky Mountain ghost dancers, but he cannot stampede a majority of the level headed citizens of this country into the Altgeld-Tillman tent of insurrection and repudiation."

The free coiners tell us with many tears that the "demonetization" of silver by the United States in 1873 caused the price to fall. They pretend to think that if we establish free coinage the old commercial ratio will at once be restored.

Now what are the facts? The United States had little or nothing to do with sustaining the price of silver prior to 1873. The entire coinage of silver dollars by this country up to 1873 amounted to but $8,000,000. Since 1873 the United States has coined silver dollars to the amount of $430,000,000.

And yet the price of silver has been falling steadily.

Is it possible that the coinage of the trifling amount of $8,000,000 in all our history previous to 1873 kept up the price of silver?

If so, why has our tremendous coinage since 1873 been accompanied by a fall in the price of silver?

Do not these facts show that the price of silver is fixed by the amount produced and the demand for it throughout the world, and not by the action of any one nation?

Do not these facts show that the United States cannot hope alone to affect the world's price of silver simply by opening the mints to free coinage?—State Journal.

Senator Wilkins, who was selected as temporary chairman of the republican state convention of West Virginia yesterday said in part: "I have been a producer of silver for over sixteen years; naturally I am its friend, and favor its largest possible use for money, consistent with a sound and stable currency my interest would incline me to favor the free coinage of silver if I could see it was practicable or possible, or that it rested upon any sound principles. The people now agitating the silver question and demanding its free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1, when silver is only worth 81 to 1, are its worst enemies."

"Apart from the injury it would do the country I did not favor the purchasing clause of the Sherman act, because I felt, as a friend of silver and as a citizen, it would increase the production of silver, thereby lessen its value in the markets and destroy confidence in it as money. This was the result."

To Our Silver Friend.
 [Council Bluffs Nonpartisan.]
 Remember that you are a citizen as well as a silverite.
 Remember that you have a country as well as a party.
 Remember that there are patriots who do not believe as you do.
 Remember that they have not been bought up any more than you have been bought up.
 Remember that arousing passion is no way to secure prosperity.
 Remember that there is no east, no west, no north, no south, but one grand, united country.
 Remember that abuse is not argument.
 Remember that threats of secession not only endanger the nation, but endanger the interests of every citizen, including yourself.

Remember that thinking yourself a martyr does not make you one.
 Remember that because you fancy that the time is ripe for a revolution that does not make it so.
 Remember that the same arguments are being used now which were used to incite the south to rebellion.
 Remember that the rebellion was a failure.
 Remember that you have a lead on you.
 Remember to use it.
 A fine rain began falling early this morning and continued throughout the forenoon. There is now no question as to the corn crop. It is assured and will be a bounteous one.

The populist war dance is on in St. Louis, but the pop-demo-silver strings do not chord. There is sort of a yellow color to the whole hippodrome.

The total receipts from subscriptions, stand privileges, etc., for the Fourth amounted to $338.45. The total disbursements amounted to $323.15, leaving a balance on hand of $15.30.

The ladies missionary Society of the Presbyterian church will meet with Mrs. Corbit Friday afternoon, July 26th at 3 o'clock. All the ladies of the church are invited to be present.

Norfolk has organized a republican club with nearly 300 members and an effort is being made says the Norfolk News, to secure a special train to attend the McKinley and Hobart ratification meeting here Saturday evening.

All McKinley boys between the ages of 10 and 18 are requested to meet at the republican club rooms this evening for the purpose of making arrangements to take part in the McKinley ratification meeting Saturday evening.

A. W. Taylor went to Sioux City Monday to make arrangements with the Milwaukee road for a car to the Grand Army reunion at Minneapolis. If satisfactory arrangements can be made about forty old soldiers from Wayne will attend.

While Henry Dotson was watering his team at the hydrant near Philileo & Son's lumber office Saturday afternoon the horses became frightened and turning suddenly upset the buggy, throwing it into the buggy of Henry Pfeuffer, demolishing a wheel. The buggy of Mr. Dotson was also badly disfigured.

A very good game of ball was played at the fair grounds yesterday afternoon the contesting clubs being Wayne and Randolph. The game was captured by Wayne's Reds, score 18 to 7. Batteries: Wayne, Fisher and Cook; Randolph, Morrison and Warren. Struck out, Fisher 4; Morrison 6. Umpire, Fred Culbert.

A republican club was organized in Garfield precinct Monday night with a membership of 25 which will be largely increased in the next thirty days. Another was organized in Plum Creek Saturday evening with 24 members. Deer Creek precinct (Carroll) has a club of 76 members and clubs will be organized in Wilbur and Winside precincts tomorrow evening.

Prof. R. D. Durrin of Wayne, who has had many years of experience in carving marble, is in the city conferring with the members of the Lincoln statue commission. He carries many indorsements from prominent men, and shows pictures of some creditable work. Professor Durrin does not wish to say anything against the Currie model, but it is known that he has spoken of it to his friends as a monstrous thing, not worthy of a place anywhere within reach of the civilized eyes. It is said that when the time comes for selecting a sculptor, Professor Durrin will be seriously considered, as a Nebraska man will be given the preference, all other things being equal.—State Journal.

"THE CRIME OF '73."

IT EXISTS ONLY IN THE MINDS OF SILVER MEN.

Congressman McCleary Exposes the Absurd Fabrications About the Act of 1873—Bill Was Discussed for Three Years.

Here are the facts. For the benefit of the thousands of intelligent people who honestly believe that a crime was committed surreptitiously against silver in 1873, Congressman J. T. McCleary of Minnesota devoted considerable time, in his great speech of Feb. 12, to a presentation of the important facts connected with the passage of the coinage act of 1873. The facts stand out so clearly and tell such a straightforward story that it would seem impossible that any fair-minded man should, after reading them, continue to believe that there was any "conspiracy" by anybody that caused the passage of this act. We can give but a few of the more salient points from Mr. McCleary's speech on this subject:

The original bill was prepared in the Treasury Department in the winter of 1869-'70, by John Jay Knox, then deputy comptroller of the currency, under the direction of George S. Boutwell, then Secretary of the Treasury. The laws relating to the mint had not been revised for more than a generation, and much confusion existed. This bill was largely a codification of existing law, with such improvements as experience suggested.

The first draft of the bill was submitted to leading experts on coinage and currency in this country, and to some in Europe. In this way the views of more than thirty men were obtained. Their answers were transmitted to the House in June, 1870, as a supplementary report on the bill. The consensus of opinion of these experts, and of those who discussed the bill in Congress, was that it was simply to recognize legally what had practically existed, since the act of 1853 had made gold the single standard of value and made silver subsidiary and legal tender only for sums not exceeding 25¢.

The bill as introduced distinctly discontinued the silver dollar. One of the eight headings to the divisions in the reports accompanying the bill was as follows: "(5) DISCONTINUANCE OF SILVER DOLLAR." This was printed in capitals. The discontinuance of the silver dollar was specifically referred to in four places in this report.

Contrary to the suppositions and statements of many leading free silverites, the old standard dollar of 423½ grains was never in the coinage bill passed in 1873, and therefore it could not, as they allege, have been omitted surreptitiously. In May, 1872, a silver dollar containing 384 grains was introduced into the bill. Like the silver half-dollar, it did not have "free coinage" or full tender. This was the dollar which was afterward dropped out of the bill and in place of which the trade dollar of 420 grains, with unlimited coinage, but limited tender, was substituted.

From the contemporary records it is clear that the bill was before Congress for about three years; that it was printed eleven times separately and twice in reports of the Comptroller of the Currency; that it was considered at length by the Finance Committee of the Senate and by the Coinage Committee of the House during five different sessions; that it was carefully debated in both houses, the debates in the Senate occupying sixty-six columns and those in the House occupying seventy-eight columns of the Congressional Globe, and it finally passed substantially as it was originally introduced. Every feature of the bill was thoroughly explained in the original report accompanying the bill, and repeatedly afterward in the debates on the bill itself.

There doubtless were persons in both houses who did not pay attention to either the report or the discussions, for at that time such subjects were regarded as of interest only to experts, but it certainly cannot be truthfully said that they did not have full opportunity to know all about it.

So far as concerns the coinage of gold and silver, there were just two important provisions in the act of 1873—namely, the unlimited coinage of gold and the limited coinage of silver. Both of these provisions have endured and will endure, because, as I have shown already, this is the only way in which we can have the use of both metals as money at the same time. And though some very excellent gentlemen in Congress in 1873, when the wave of "free silver" threatened to overwhelm every one opposed to it, may have said some foolish things about the act of 1873, it is a significant fact that not a single Republican of those quoted as saying these things, unless he lives in a silver producing State, has ever voted to repeal the essential provisions of the act of 1873 above cited. Except as to the trade dollar (which was inserted as a special concession to the silver producers), the act of 1873, based upon the experience of centuries, framed by men pre-eminent for ability and integrity, discriminated in all its phases during the three years when it was before Congress, will be recorded in history as one of the wisest and best pieces of legislation ever enacted by the Congress of the United States. Its details may be changed, but its fundamental principles will endure.

Occasionally we hear a man ask, "Why didn't the newspapers say more about the act at the time of its passage?" The answer is plain. It was because of their being newspapers, not ancient histories. There was nothing new in principle or practice in the bill. It was largely a re-enactment of existing law, properly codified. Why did the bill give gold unlimited coinage and tender? Because all the laws in existence did so. Why did it restrict the coinage of subsidiary silver and limit its tender to 5¢? Because these were the provisions of the act of Feb. 21, 1853. Why did it omit from coinage the old standard silver dollar? Because that had been the intent of the act of 1853. In 1853 the dollar was entirely out of circulation, and no attempt was made to bring it back into circulation. Why did it make the gold dollar the unit of value? Because it had really been the metallic unit since 1834. And this was the avowed intention of the act of 1853.

The truth was that in 1872 the silver dollar was worth for bullion 314 cents more than the gold dollar and that silver dollars had not been in circulation for many years. As Congressman Hooper said on April 9, 1872, when discussing the silver dollar: "It does not circulate now in commercial transactions with any country, and the convenience of these manufacturers in this respect can better be met by supplying small stamped bars of the same standard, avoiding the useless expense of coining the dollar for that purpose."

And Mr. Kelley, who is reported as having said afterward that he "did not know that the bill omitted the standard silver dollar," said on this same day: "It is impossible to retain the double standard. The values of gold and silver continually fluctuate. You cannot determine this year what will be the relative values of gold and silver next year. They were 15 to 1 a short time ago. They are 16 to 1 now."

"Hence all experience has shown that you must have one standard coin which shall be a legal tender for all others, and then you may promote your domestic convenience by having subsidiary coinage of silver, which shall circulate in all parts of your country as a legal tender for a limited amount and be redeemable at its face value by your government."

In another place in the same speech Mr. Kelley said, "Every coin that is not gold is subsidiary."

Even Mr. Stewart, then as now a Senator from Nevada, said on Feb. 20, 1874:

"By this process we shall come to specie basis, and when the laboring man receives a dollar it will have the purchasing power of a dollar and he will not be called upon to do what is impossible for him or the producing classes to do, figure upon the exchanges, figure upon the fluctuations, figure upon the gambling in New York. But he will know what his money is worth. Gold is the universal standard of the world. Everybody knows what a dollar in gold is worth."

The remarks of Mr. Kelley in the House in 1872, and those of Senator Stewart in 1874 show that at that time, before the tremendous output of silver turned men's heads, there was practically undivided opinion on the subject. The bill had been before Congress three years. It had been repeatedly discussed, there was nothing new or startling in it, and hence there was no call for any extended notice of its passage.

But the facts are seen to be that the bill was passed openly and honestly. It embodies the principles of sound finance, and it undoubtedly saved us from going to a silver basis on the resumption of specie payments. And, therefore, the men who framed it and those who passed it deserve and will receive the grateful thanks of ourselves and our posterity.

After becoming acquainted with the facts, how ridiculous seems the following statement from Col. A. P. Finlay's School: "In the language of Senator Daniel of Virginia, it (the act of 1873) seems to have gone through Congress 'like the silent tread of a cat.'" Yet this is but a sample of the false statements made by most of the leading silverites. The following summary of procedure indicates how "like the silent tread of a cat" the act of 1873 stole through Congress:

Beat that Silver Can Expect. There is a field for silver in our currency system just as there is for paper, but it is one which is subordinate to gold. The United States cannot afford, either as a matter of honor, or self interest, to abandon the present single standard.—New York Advertiser.

square Fight Will Settle It. The money standard of the United States should be settled beyond disturbance. A square contest between the friends and foes of sound money will settle it.—Tuba Herald (Rep.).

THE PATRIOTISM OF BUSINESS.

It has become the fashion of late to deride business as unpatriotic. We hear much of the "sordid considerations of capital," "employment," "industrial energies" and "prosperous labor." The United States, differing from the mediaeval conditions which govern older countries, differing from the militarism which is the curse of European nations, differing from thrones which rest upon the sword, is pre-eminently and patriotically a commercial and a business nation. Thus commerce and business are synonymous with patriotism. When the farmer is sowing and reaping the crops which find a market that remunerates him for his toil, when the laborer and the artisan find work seeking them and not themselves despairing of work, when the wage of the toiler promises comfort for his family and hope for his children, when the rail is burdened with the product of the soil and of the factory, when the spindles are humming and the furnaces are in blast, when the mine is putting out its largest product and the national and individual wealth are constantly increasing, when the homes owned un-mortgaged by the people are more numerous day by day and month by month, when the schools are most crowded, the fairs most frequent and happy conditions most universal in the nation, then are the promises fulfilled which make these United States of America the home of the oppressed and the land of the free.—Hon. Chauncey M. Depew.

McKinley on the Value of Labor.

No worthy American wants to reduce the price of labor in the United States. It ought not to be reduced; for the sake of the laborer and his family and the good of society it ought to be maintained. To increase it would be in better harmony with the public sense. Our labor must not be debased nor our laborers degraded to the level of slaves, nor any pauper or servile system in any form, nor under any guise whatsoever, at home or abroad. Our civilization will not permit it. Our humanity forbids it. Our traditions are opposed to it. The stability of our institutions rests upon the contentment and intelligence of all our people, and these can only be possessed by maintaining the dignity of labor and securing to it its just rewards. That protection opens new avenues for employment, broadens and diversifies the field of labor, and presents variety of vocation, is manifest from our own experience.—Hon. Wm. McKinley.

Neither Work Nor Wage.

Four short years have come and gone. Look at the country now. The treasury is empty. Our credit is impaired. Our revenues are deficient. We meet the public needs not with income, but by borrowing at high rates and pledging the future for the wants of the present. Business is paralyzed. Confidence is gone. Enterprise has folded its eagle wings and mopes and blinks in the market-place. Our mills are idle and our railroads crippled. Capital hides itself and labor idly walks the streets. There is neither a good day's wage nor a good day's work.—Senator Lodge.

Honor to the Nation.

This is the year of the people. They have risen in their might. From ocean to ocean, from lake to gulf, they are united as never before. We know their wishes and are here to register their will. They must not be cheated of their choice.

They know the man best qualified and equipped to fight their battles and to win their victories. His name is in every heart, on every tongue. His nomination is certain, his election sure. His candidacy will sweep the country as a prairie is swept by fire. This is the year of the people. In their name, by their authority, I second the nomination of their great champion, William McKinley. Not as a favorite son of any State, but as the favorite son of the United States. Not as a concession to Ohio, but as an added honor to the nation.—Senator Thurston.

McKinley Takes Command.

Hear the people's joyous shout,
"McKinley takes command—
To lead Protection's army on.
Drive Free Trade from our land.
Arise! Protection's host, arise!
No effort now abate
To raise Protection's banner high,
From Maine to Golden Gate.
Now join the patriotic host,
In America's great land,
And never more fear Free Trade's blight,
McKinley takes command."

Downfall of Democracy.

Bryan is only Tillman in better English.

Well, who in the East knows Bryan, and who in the West knows Sewall? "Bland didn't 'lose the Presidency.' He only lost a chance to be beaten for the Presidency.

To Cleveland the saddest thing in life is the letter he might have written declining the third term, and didn't.

General Backus was right. It will be a double-ender—Bill McKinley and McKinley bill—with vim and vigor at each end.

The Chicago platform is mainly a plagiarism, as can readily be seen by comparing it with the Populist platform of 1892.

The Chicago convention was the first illustration in American history of a great political party in the throes of delirium tremens.

"The boy orator of the Platte" is likely to do more slopping over than has ever before been done by a candidate for President.

If Mr. Hanna had been privileged to order the proceedings at Chicago in the interest of McKinley, he could hardly have improved upon what has been done.

The terms of twenty-nine Senators will expire next March, and after that we may look for a Republican Senate that will do business instead of obstructing it.

No party has ever yet succeeded in this country on a platform favoring repudiation and spoliation, and there is no reason to suppose that such a thing is possible this year.

The free silverites have expended most of their energy in the work of making a platform and a ticket, and their enthusiasm will dwindle rapidly as the campaign progresses.

A phrase has nominated a candidate for the Presidency, but a phrase cannot elect a candidate who stands for the idea that 100 cents worth of labor should be paid for with a 50-cent dollar.

Rheumatism

Is a blood disease and only a blood remedy can cure it. So many people make the mistake of taking remedies which at best are only tonics and cannot possibly reach their trouble. Mr. Asa Smith, Greencastle, Indiana, says: "For years I have suffered with Sciatic Rheumatism, which the best physicians were unable to relieve. I took many patent medicines but they did not seem to reach my trouble. I gradually grew worse until I was unable to take my food or handle myself in any way; I was absolutely helpless. Three bottles of S.S.S. relieved me so that I was soon able to move my right arm; before long I could walk across the room, and when I had finished one dozen bottles was cured completely and am as well as ever. I now weigh 170."

A Real Blood Remedy.

S.S.S. cures Scrofula, Cancer, Eczema, and any form of blood troubles. If you have a blood disease, take a blood medicine—S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) is exclusively for the blood and is recommended for nothing else. It forces out the poison matter permanently. We will send to anyone our valuable books. Through Yellowstone Park on a Bicycle.

The Passenger Department of the Burlington Route has issued—and will gladly mail to anyone who will ask for it—a little booklet giving full information about the best way to make the tour of Yellowstone Park on a bicycle. There is nothing experimental about the idea. The trip has been made again and again—to the supreme satisfaction of every one of the dozen or so of riders who have been bold enough to undertake it.

The booklet contains a good map of the Park and also tells the reader what the trip costs, what the roads are like what to take, etc. Write for a copy.

DON'T STOP TOBACCO.

How To Cure Yourself While Using It.

The tobacco habit grows on a man until his nervous system is seriously affected, impairing health, comfort and happiness. To quit suddenly is to sever a shock for the system, as tobacco to an inveterate user becomes a stimulant that his system, continually craving "Baco-Curo" for its habit-forming tobacco, habitually all its forms, carefully compounded after the formula of an eminent Berlin physician who has used it in his private practice since 1872, without a failure. It is purely vegetable and guaranteed perfectly harmless. You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to cure permanently any case with three boxes, or refund the money with 10 per cent interest. "Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a scientific cure, that cures without the aid of will power and with no inconveniences. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew of smoke.

Cured By Baco-Curo and Gained 30 Pounds. From hundreds of testimonials, the originals of which are on file and open to inspection the following is presented:

Clayton, Nevada, Co., Ark., Jan. 28, 1895. Bureka Chemical & Mfg. Co., La Crosse, Wis.—Gentleman: For forty years I used tobacco in all its forms. For twenty-five years of that time I was a great sufferer from general debility and heart disease. For fifteen years I tried to quit, but couldn't. I took various remedies, among others "No-To-Bac" and "Indian Tobacco Antidote," "Double Chloride of Gold," etc., but none of them did me the least bit of good. Finally, however, I purchased a box of your "Baco-Curo" and it has entirely cured me of the habit in all its forms, and I have increased thirty pounds in weight and am relieved from all the numerous aches and pains of body and mind. I could write a quire of paper upon my changed feelings and condition. Yours respectfully,
P. H. MARBURY.

Down with Treason.

[New York Commercial Advertiser.]
When the cannon shot of treason knocked at the gates of Sumpter hundreds of thousands of men forgot that they were democrats and remembered that they were Americans. Now, when all the alien and abhorrent forces of this cosmopolitan republic are banded together for robbery and riot under the flery flag of the commune and the leadership of demagogues who disgrace the American name—when the once great democratic party has sold itself to anarchy for thirty pieces of silver and forsaken every tradition and principle that gave it cohesion or standing,—when not merely the honesty of our dollars, but the stability of our institutions, the authority of our highest tribunals and the safeguards of order and society are threatened by revolt as dangerous as the uprising of the slave power a third of a century ago, the sons of the war democrats of 1861-65 stand facing a duty which they cannot evade without cowardice nor shrink without shame.

A RED HOT CAMPAIGN.

The present campaign will be the most exciting one fought out since the war. There will not be a day when something of unusual interest will not transpire. The State Journal has made up its mind to surpass all its former efforts in the direction of news-giving and will give its readers the most complete details of the campaign, giving all the news from an unbiased standpoint. Republicans will want The Journal because of its staunch republican principles, it being recognized as the standard bearer of the great republican party of Nebraska. Populists and democrats should read it for the news it gives. The Semi-Weekly Journal will go to thousands of new homes during the campaign. You should subscribe, as it will only cost you 25 cents from now until November 15. Two papers every week, making it almost as good as a daily. Subscribe through your postmaster or send your order to The State Journal, Lincoln, Neb.

Legal Notice.

To Jacob B. Sechler, defendant:
You are hereby notified that on the 10th day of July, 1896, M. P. Savidge as plaintiff filed in the office of the District Court of Wayne county, Nebraska, against Mrs. J. H. Sechler and Jacob B. Sechler, the object and prayer of which are to foreclose a mechanics lien in the amount of one hundred and thirty-four dollars and twenty-six cents, range four, east Wayne county, Nebraska, to secure the payment of the sum of $134.26, interest at 10 per cent, from April 14th, 1892, making a total now due of $163; said sum being evidenced by four notes executed by Mrs. J. H. Sechler, dated April 14th, 1892, and respectively June 1, 1894, January 1, 1895, June 1, 1895, and January 1, 1896, amounts, $14.00, $25.00, $25.00, and $25.00, said lien was for 7 1/2 feet of galvanized piping and labor, putting same down at 90 cents per foot, which cost the sum of $67.50, and was done at the instance and request of Mrs. J. H. Sechler as the agent of Jacob B. Sechler. That a decree is asked for said sum of $163 with interest at 10 per cent per annum from July 14th, 1896, and that defendant be required to pay the same or that said premises may be sold to satisfy the amount of said sum. Some people when asked to support Bryan retort with the following: "We have been in the brine the past four years and want no more of it."

It has been appropriately said that
"eloquent wind at one end and an open barrel at the other shows worldly wisdom
in the Coliseum combination."

From seven a. m. till eleven p. m. the political theorists hold sway and the arguments presented for the preservation of man and government are many and varied.

Bryan admits that he can't devote all of his time to wind, that he requires a few moments to dispel hunger. Nebraska's nominee will have a good deal more time after November 3rd.

Farmers were deluded four years ago by democracy's free trade cry. Will you be again by the free silver cry?
Democracy repudiates itself and then comes to you with more promises and begs you to again elect it to office.
Will you do it?

Bryan says in speaking of the people down east: "Let the heathen rage." In all probability they will and when they get through with Mr. Bryan, he will still remain the pleasant gentleman he is but the platform on which he stands will be "smashed to smithereens."

To the men who object to McKinley because they wish the money kept just as it is now, and believe that the republican platform means a change, we wish to call your attention to this fact:
The policy of the republican party is to keep the money as it is now, every dollar worth 100 cents, whether it be paper silver or gold. If you are informed differently it is a falsehood.

The question as to who will be the next President of the United States will be decided by the men who till the soil and work in the machine shops.
They hold the balance of power. Four years ago they were told of the glories and beauties of free trade, just as they are now to be told of the beauties of free silver. But free trade put no money into their pockets, nor added a comfort to their homes. Free silver will be even more delusive, for it is backed up by free trade in its worst form.—Inter Ocean.

The nomination of MacColl is a great triumph of the masses of the republican party and of the plain people of the state. His support, which was as loyal as man could desire, was composed of the best men of all walks and professions—the farmer and laboring man, the professional and business man, in fact of those who appreciated him simply for what he is and based their efforts chiefly on the score of personal friendship. Had he depended on combination he would have failed. Had he been able to effect them, as is usually done, he could have controlled more than three-fourths of the convention.
It is generally felt that he is stronger
by five thousand votes than any other candidate would have been, for the reason that he reaches common people of Nebraska, while standing high in the confidence of the business and professional classes. He is the great cosmopolitan of Nebraska. There was no mistake in his nomination, and combinations and coalitions and fusions can not be effected in sufficient force to outvote him in the esteem of the citizens of Nebraska.—Kearney Hub.

The Main Issue is Protection.
Mr. Hobart has said "ditto," though in no service or imitative tone, to Mr.
McKinley. The Republican candidate for the Presidency has affirmed protection to American industries to be the main issue of the campaign and the chief solvent of commercial troubles;
and the Republican candidate for the Vice Presidency has affirmed in like manner.

Mr. Hobart, in reply to the speech by which Chairman Fairbanks gave him formal notification of his nomination by the St. Louis convention, said:
"I am firmly convinced that what we need most of all to remove the business paralysis that afflicts this country is the restoration of a policy which, while affording ample revenue to meet the expense of the government, will reopen American workshops on full time and full-handed, will their operatives paid good wages in honest dollars. And this can only come under a tariff which will hold the interests of our own people paramount in our political and commercial systems.

The opposite policy, which discourages American enterprises, reduces American labor to idleness, diminishes
the earnings of American workmen, opens our markets to commodities from abroad which we should produce at home, while closing foreign markets against our products, and which, at the same time, steadily augments the public debt, increasing the public burdens
while diminishing the ability of the people to meet them, is a policy which must find its chief popularity elsewhere than among American citizens."

Mr. Fairbanks had himself subordinated the currency to the tariff issue in his speech of notification. Assigning cause for the choice of Mr. Hobart by the convention, Mr. Fairbanks said:
"Because of your exalted personal character, and of your intelligent and patriotic devotion to the enduring principles of a protective tariff, which wisely discriminates in favor of American interests, and to a currency whose soundness and integrity none can challenge, and because of your conspicuous fitness for the exacting and important duties of the high office, the Republican national convention, with a unanimity and enthusiasm rarely witnessed, chose you as our candidate for Vice President of the United States."

No truer or plainer words could have been spoken.
Major McKinley was nominated by the people long before the St. Louis convention assembled, and long before the currency issue had taken to itself pretentious proportions. The convention did but ratify the choice of the people; and the choice of the people was McKinley, because of McKinley's intimate association with the most truly protective measure of tariff legislation that ever was adopted in America. The people know that always under protection there has been prosperity, and that always under tariffs framed "for revenue only" there has been adversity. Therefore, after nominating McKinley to the highest office they nominated Hobart to the next in degree of exaltation, "because as Chairman Fairbanks said, "of his intelligent and patriotic devotion to the principles of a protective tariff."

Given a soundly protective tariff and a currency of such domestic parity between silver, gold and paper as the Republican platform supports, the return of prosperity is certain. But without protection there will be stagnation of business, even though the currency of the United States remain "the best in the world." For currency is set in circulation by the machinery of trade;
and it is beyond question that the machinery of American trade rusts
when uncared by the grace of protection.—Inter Ocean.

Have you forgotten that Wm. Mc-Kinley is the people's choice? Do you not remember with what gusto and persistence you demanded his nomination? Has he changed since then, or did you intend to bolt anyway? Answer these questions, dear free silver republicans, before you denounce the republican ticket any more.—York Times.

The comfort of the American home
depends on the maintenance of American wages, and the way to secure the one is to protect the other.—San Francisco Call.

WALTER PENNYN

By John Deane and Burton

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

Two or three members said they had spoken to Cundall, and one that he had told him he did not seem very gay, but that he had replied in his usual pleasant manner, that he was very well, but had a good deal to occupy his mind.

"It was some time past two o'clock (the club having a large number of members of Parliament on its roll, was a late one) before the storm was over, and he rose to go.

The hall porter was apparently the last person who spoke to him alive, asking him if he should call a cab, but receiving for answer that, as the air was now so cool and fresh, he would walk home through the park, it being so near to Grosvenor place.

The sentries who had been on duty at and around St. James' Palace were interrogated, and the one who had been outside Clarence House stated that he distinctly remembered a gentleman answering Mr. Cundall's description passing by him into the park at about a quarter to three.

It was raining slightly, and he had his umbrella up. He saw a laborer, or mechanic, walking some fifteen yards behind him, and supposed he was going to his early work.

From the time Mr. Cundall passed this man until the policeman found him dead, no one seemed to have seen him.

With the exception of the medical evidence, which stated that he had been stabbed to and through, the heart by one swift, powerful blow, that must have caused instantaneous death, there was little more to be told.

Judging from the state of the ground, there had been no struggle, a fact which would justify the idea that the murder had been planned and premeditated.

The workman might have easily planned it himself in the time he followed him from outside his club to the time they were in the park together, but he would have had to be provided with an extraordinarily long knife, such as workmen rarely carry.

Lord Penryn sat listening to the different opinions of men who had known Cundall.

Amongst others, he noticed one young man who was particularly grief-stricken, and who was constantly appealed to by those who surrounded him; and, on asking a fellow member who he was, he learnt that he was Mr. Stuart, the secretary of his dead brother.

"To-morrow," Penryn heard him say, and he started as he heard it, "I am going to make a thorough investigation of all his papers. As far as I or his city agents know, he hadn't a relation in the world; but surely his correspondence must give us some idea of whom to communicate with. And, until this morning, I should have said he had not got an enemy in the world, either."

"You think, then, that this dastardly murder is the work of an enemy, and not of mere robbery?" the gentleman asked who had brought him into the club.

"I am sure of it! As to the workman who is supposed to have done it, well, if he did it, he was only a workman in disguise. Not he had some enemy, perhaps some one who owed him money, or whose path he had been enabled by his wealth to cross, and that's the man who killed him. And I am going to find that man, out."

Penryn sat there, and as he heard Stuart utter these words he felt upon his precipice he stood.

Suppose that, in the papers which were about to be ransacked, there should be any that proved that Walter Cundall was his eldest brother, and that he, Penryn, had only learned it two days before he was murdered.

Would not everything point to him as the Cain who had slain his brother, and was he not making appearances worse against him by keeping silence?

He must tell some one; he could keep the horrible secret no longer. And he must tell the work of some one else dead to him; he would confide in Ida!

Surely, she would not believe him to be the murderer of his own brother! Yes, he would go down to Belmont and tell her all. Better it should come from him than that Stuart should discover it, and publish it to the world.

"I hope you may find him out," several men said in answer to Stuart's exclamation. "Is there any clew likely to be got at through the wound?"

"No," Stuart answered, "I think not. Though the surgeon who has examined it says that it was made by no ordinary knife. The dagger, he thinks, must have been semi-circular, and of a kind the Arabs often use, especially the Algerian Arabs."

"I never knew that!" said one. "But then I have never been to Algiers. Who has? Here, Penryn, you were there once, weren't you?"

"Yes," Penryn said, and his tongue seemed to cleave to the roof of his mouth as he uttered the words; "but I never saw or heard of a knife or dagger of that description."

Stuart looked at Lord Penryn as he spoke, and noticed the faltering way in which he did so.

Then, in a moment, the thought flashed into his mind that this was the man who had won the woman whom his generous friend had loved.

"Could he be no, the idea was ridiculous! He was the winner, Cundall the loser. Successful men had no reason to kill their unsuccessful rivals!"

CHAPTER VIII.

After a wretched night spent in tossing about his bed, in dreaming of the murdered man and in lying awake wondering how he could break the news to Ida, Lord Penryn rose with the determination of going down to Belmont.

"How do you look?" Smerdon said, when he saw him. "What is the matter?"

"Matter?" the other answered. "Is there no matter enough to make me look ill? I have told you that Cundall is dead, and you know how he died."

"None whatever," he said last night. Meanwhile, his friend and secretary, Mr. Stuart, says that he is confident that the murder was committed by some one who had reason to wish him out of the way, and he is going through his papers once again and bade me farewell forever in this world, and then I saw his murderer spring upon him, and—

"And that murderer was?" her lover interrupted, quivering with excitement.

"Unhappily, I do not know—not yet, at least, but I shall do so some day." She had risen now, and was standing before him pale and erect. The long white peignoir that she wore along her delicate simple figure, making her look unusually tall, and she appeared to her lover like some ancient classic figure vowing vengeance on the guilty. As she stood thus, with a fixed look of certainty on her face, and prophesied that some day she should know the man who had done this deed, she might have been Cassandra come back to the world again.

"His face was shrouded," she went on, "as all murderers shroud their faces, I think; but his form I knew. I am thinking—I have thought and thought for hours by day and night—where I have seen that form before. And in some unexpected moment remembrance will come to me."

"And then?" Penryn interrupted.

"And then, if I compass it, his life shall be subjected to such inspection, his every action of the past examined, every action of the present watched, that at last he shall stand discovered before the world!" She paused a moment, and again she looked fixedly at him, and then she said: "You are my future husband; do you know what I require of you before I become your wife?"

"Love and fidelity, is it not?—And how do you not that?"

"Yes," she answered, "but that fidelity must be tried by a strong test. You must go hand in hand with me in my search for your murderer, you must never falter in your determination to find him. Will you do this out of your love for me?"

"I will do it," Penryn answered, "out of my love for you."

She held out her hand—cold as marble—"It will do it," he said, "out of my love for you; but forgive me, are you not taking an unusual interest in him, and as his death was—"

"No," she answered, "No. He loved me; I was the only woman in the world he loved—he told me so on the first night he returned to England. Only I had no love to give him in return; it was given to you. But I liked and respected him, and, since he came to me in my dream on that night of his death, it seems that I should find the task of finding the man who killed him."

She had bidden him do the very thing of all others that he would least wish done, bidden him throw a light upon the past of the dead man, and find out all his enemies and friends.

She had told him to do this, while there, in his own heart, was the knowledge of the long-kept secret that the dead man was his brother—the secret that the dead man had enjoined on him never to divulge.

What was he to do? he asked himself. Which should he obey, the orders of his murdered brother, or the orders of his future wife?

He rose after these reflections and told her that he was going back to London. And she also rose, and said:

"Yes, yes; go back at once! Lose no time, not a moment. Remember, you have promised. You will keep your promise. I know."

He kissed her, and muttered something that she took for words of assent, and prepared to leave early in the evening. He reached his house early in the evening, and the footman handed him a letter that had been left by a messenger but a short time before. It ran as follows:

"Grosvenor Place, June 12, 188—

"My Lord—In searching through the papers of my late employer, Mr. Walter Cundall, I have come across a will made by him three years ago. By it, the whole of his fortune and estates are left to you, your name and the title being carefully described. I have placed the will in the hands of Mr. Fordyce, Mr. Cundall's solicitor, from whom you will doubtless hear shortly."

"Your obedient servant,
"A. STUART.
"The Rt. Hon. Viscount Penryn."

"That was all; without one word of explanation of the contents of the manner in which Mr. Walter Cundall's vast wealth had been bequeathed."

Lord Penryn crushed the letter in his hand when he read it, and, as he threw himself into a chair, he moaned:

"Everything must be known, everything discovered; there is no help for it! What will Ida think of me now? Why did I not tell her to-day? Why did I not tell her?"

Edwin Arnold's Marvelous Memory.

At the Walt Whitman fellowship dinner in New York recently Maj. J. E. Pond, speaking of a visit which he made with Sir Edwin Arnold to Walt Whitman shortly before Whitman's death, said: "We had a very pleasant chat, and as we rose to go Walt Whitman presented to Sir Edwin and to me a volume of 'Leaves of Grass,' that had just been republished. I opened the volume, which, you know, is of several hundred pages, and began reading aloud a random line. Sir Edwin stopped me. 'Let me go on from there,' said he, and he took up the line and without a break recited the whole poem. 'Try me anywhere,' said Sir Edwin. I did so, and not once, no matter how obscure the poem, did he fail to give every line of it correctly. I wonderingly following him with the book before me. 'That is the way I know your poems,' said Sir Edwin to Walt Whitman, when he had finished the test."

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

HANNAH WAS AN OLD-FASHIONED CHRISTIAN MOTHER.

Yet Dr. Talmage Says Her Industry, Her Intelligence and Her Christian Devotion Refined Her for Heaven—A Plea for Our Mothers.

An Ordinary Woman.

This radical discourse will no doubt have its practical result in many hearts. The staid, thrifty, Christian mother, the text was I. Samuel ii. 10. "Moreover her mother made him a little coat and brought it to him from year to year when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice."

The stories of Deborah and Abigail are very apt to discourage a woman's soul. She says with herself, "It is impossible that I ever achieve any such grandeur of character, and I don't mean to try," as though a child should refuse to play the eight notes because he cannot execute a "William Tell." This Hannah of the text differs from the persons I just named. She was an ordinary woman, with ordinary intellectual capacity, placed in ordinary circumstances; and yet by extraordinary piety standing out before all the ages to come the model Christian mother. Hannah was the wife of Elkanah, who was a person very much like herself—unromantic and plain, never having fought a battle or been the subject of a marvelous escape. Neither of them would have been called a genius. Just what you and I might be, that was Elkanah and Hannah. The brightest time in all the history of that family was the birth of Samuel. Although no star was among the heavens pointing down to his birthplace, I think the angels of God stooped to the coming of so wonderful a prophet. As Samuel had been given in answer to prayer, Elkanah and all his family, save Hannah, started up to Shiloh to offer sacrifices of thanksgiving. The cradle where the child slept was altar enough for Hannah's grateful heart, but when the boy was old enough she took him to Shiloh and took three bullocks and an ephah of flour and a bottle of wine and made offering of sacrifice unto the Lord, and there, according to a previous vow, she left him, so there he was to stay all the days of his life and minister in the sanctuary.

Years rolled on, and every year Hannah made with her own hand a garment for Samuel and took it over to him. The lad would have got along well without that garment, for I suppose he was well clad by the ministry of the temple, but Hannah could not be contented unless she was all the time doing something for her darling boy. "Moreover her mother made him a little coat and brought it to him from year to year when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice."

Hannah's Industry.

Hannah stands before you, then, to-day, in the first place, as an industrious mother. There was no need that she work. Elkanah, her husband, was far from poor. He belonged to a distinguished family, for the Bible tells us that he was the son of Jeroham, the son of Elihu, the son of Tohu, the son of Zuph. "Who were they?" you say. I do not know, but they were distinguished people, no doubt, or their names would not have been mentioned. Hannah might have seated herself in her family, and with folded arms and disheveled hair, read novels, and from year to year, if there had been any to read. But when I see her making that garment and taking it over to Samuel, I know she is industrious from principle as well as from pleasure. God would not have a mother become a drudge or a slave; he would have her employ all the helps possible in this day in the rearing of her children. But Hannah ought never to be ashamed to be found making a coat for Samuel. Most mothers need no counsel in this direction. The wrinkles on their brow, the pallor on their cheek, the thimble mark on their finger, attest that they are faithful in their domestic duties. The bloom of the brightness and the vivacity of girlhood have been placed to the grander dignity and usefulness of a motherhood of American. There are mothers who banish themselves from the home circle. For three-fourths of their maternal duties they prove themselves incompetent. They are ignorant of what their children wear, and what their children eat, and what their children read. They intrust to irresponsible persons these young immortals and allow them to be under influences which may cripple their bodies, or taint their purity, or spoil their manners, or destroy their souls. From the awkward cut of Samuel's coat you know his mother Hannah did not make it.

Out from under flaming chandeliers, and off from imposing stairways and down the granite stairs there is coming a great crowd of children in this day untrained, saucy, incompetent for all the practical duties of life, ready to be caught in the first whirl of crime and sensuality. Indolent and unfaithful mothers will make indolent and unfaithful children. You cannot expect neatness and order in any house where the daughters see nothing but slatternliness and upside-downnateness in their parents. Let Hannah be idle, and most certainly Samuel will grow up idle. Who are the industrious men in all our occupations and professions? Who are they building the walls, tinning the roofs, weaving the carpets, making the laws, governing the nations, making the earth to quake and heave, and making the rattles with the tread of gigantic enterprises? Who are they? For the most part they descended from industrious mothers, who in the old homestead used to spin their own yarn and weave their own carpets and plait their own doormats and flag their own chairs and do their own work. The stalwart men of this day, 99 out of 100 of them, came from such an illustrious ancestry of hard knuckles and honest sweat. And who are these people in society—light as froth, blown every whither of temptation and fashion—the peddlers of flimsy stories, the dancing jacks of political parties, the scum of society, the tavern lounging, store infesting, the men of low wit and filthy chuckle and brass breast-pin and rotten associations? For the most part they came from mothers idle and disgusting, the scandal mongers of society, going from house to house attending to everybody's business but their own, believing in witches and ghosts, and horse-shoes to keep the devil out of the churn, and by a godless life setting their children on the very verge of hell. The mothers of Samuel Johnson, and of Alfred the Great, and of Isaac Newton, and of St. Augustine, and of Richard Cecil, and of President Edwards, for the most part were industrious, hardworking mothers. Now, while I congratulate all Christian mothers upon the wealth and the modern science which may afford them all kinds of help, let me say that every mother ought to be observant of her children's walk, her children's behavior, her children's food, her children's books, her children's companionships. However much help Hannah may have, I think she ought every year at least make up a garment for Samuel. It is good to have mercy on the mother who is so unfortunate as to have had a lazy mother!

Hannah's Intelligence.

Again, Hannah stands before you to-day as an intelligent mother. From the way in which she talked in this chapter and from the way she managed this boy you know she was intelligent. There are persons in our community who need to be wiser and well-informed as mothers. Oh, this work of culturing children for this world and the next! This child is timid, and it must be roused up and pushed out into activities. This child is forward, and he must be held back and tamed down into modesty and politeness. Rewards for one, punishments for another. That which will make George will ruin John. The rod is necessary in one case, while a frown of displeasure is more than enough in another. Whipping and a dark closet do not exhaust all the rounds of domestic discipline. There have been children who have grown up and gone to glory without ever having had their ears boxed. Oh, how much care and intelligence are necessary in the rearing of children! But in this day, when there are so many books on this subject, no parent is excusable in being ignorant of the best mode of bringing up a child. It is possible to know more of the child, there would be many dyspeptic stomachs and weak nerves and inactive livers among children. If parents knew more of physiology, there would not be so many curved spines and cramped chests and inflamed throats and diseased lungs as there are among children. If parents knew more of art, and were in sympathy with all that is beautiful, there would not be so many children coming out in the world with boorish proclivities. If parents knew more of Christ and practiced more of his religion, there would not be so many little feet already starting on the wrong road, and all around us voices of riot and blasphemy would not come up with such ecstasy of infernal triumph. The eaglets in the cryle have no advantage over the eaglets of 1,000 years ago; the kids have no superior way of climbing up the rocks than the old goats taught them hundreds of years ago; the whelps know no more now than did the whelps of ages ago—they are taught no more by the lions of the desert, and it is shame that on a day, when there are so many opportunities—improving ourselves—in the best manner of culturing children, that so often there is no more advancement in this respect than there has been among the kids and the eaglets and the whelps.

Hannah's Piety.

Again, Hannah stands before you to-day as a Christian mother. From the way she talked and from the way she conducted her boy to God, I know she was good. A mother may have the finest culture, the most brilliant surroundings, but she is not fit for her duties unless she is a Christian mother. There may be well read libraries in the house, and exquisite music in the parlor, and the canvas of the best artists adorning the walls, and the wardrobe be crowded with tasteful apparel, and the children be wonderful for their attainments and make the house ring with laughter and innocent mirth, but there is something woefully lacking in that house if it be not also the residence of a Christian mother. I bless God that there are not many prayerless mothers.

The weight of responsibility is so great that they feel the need of a divine hand to help, and from the way she conducted her boy to God, I know she was good. A mother may have the finest culture, the most brilliant surroundings, but she is not fit for her duties unless she is a Christian mother. They feel the need of a divine hand to help, and from the way she conducted her boy to God, I know she was good. A mother may have the finest culture, the most brilliant surroundings, but she is not fit for her duties unless she is a Christian mother. There may be well read libraries in the house, and exquisite music in the parlor, and the canvas of the best artists adorning the walls, and the wardrobe be crowded with tasteful apparel, and the children be wonderful for their attainments and make the house ring with laughter and innocent mirth, but there is something woefully lacking in that house if it be not also the residence of a Christian mother. I bless God that there are not many prayerless mothers.

were gone and she stopped praying. A few months after she came to die, and in her closing moments said, "Mother, I wish you would bring me that dress that cost $500." The mother thought it was a very strange request, but she brought it to please the dying child. "Now," said the daughter, "mother, hang that dress on the foot of my bed." And the dress was hung there on the foot of the bed. Then the dying girl got up on one elbow and looked at her mother and pointed to the dress and said, "Mother, that dress is the price of my soul!" Oh, what a momentous thing it is to be a mother!

THE "REAL CONVENTION"
About the first of last March P. L. Miller received a letter from the firm Durand & Kasper Co., wholesale grocers, of Chicago, asking what was the matter with P. L. and why he didn't buy as much tea and coffee as he used to. In closing the letter they said: "Remember there is going to be a republican convention in St. Louis, but the 'real convention' is in Chicago; come and see us."
In reply to this letter Mr. Miller gave some excellent reasons for not purchasing more tea and coffee, and with his permission we give below a few of the more important ones which the letter contained:
"We remember there was the same kind of a convention held in your city about four years ago and that was when the trouble commenced that brought about the present condition of trade and compels us to buy so sparingly of your goods. That was a tariff reform convention and they have reformed it until there is but little of it left. We hope your brand of 'tariff reform Mocha and Java' is of a better quality than the Democratic brand of 'tariff reform' has been, for even Democrats out here are sick of that. The result of that convention and the election which followed, is what makes it necessary for our farmers to sell their oats at 9 to 10 cents, corn 11 to 13 cents, hogs 3 1/2 cents, beef 2 to 3 1/2, butter 5 to 10 cents, eggs 7 cents, and reduced the domestic consumption of wheat in 1895, compared with 1892, 36,000,000 bushels, of corn 934,000,000 bushels, of beef cattle nearly 1,000,000 head, and all other farm products in a like proportion.

That same convention gave us an administration whose tariff reform policy has paralyzed our home industries, has opened up the factories and workshops of foreign countries, and created a market here for their goods; has relieved our treasury of its gold and given to the workingman of this country a "free trade soup ticket in place of a check for his weeks wages every Saturday night," that has created a bonded indebtedness of $263,000,000, and it still has 365 days left in which to get in its ruinous work. Well may you ask what is the matter of us. We are perhaps buying your line of goods in about the same quantities as our neighbors, for as near as we can observe this trade depressing policy has struck us all about alike."

Shortly after the Chicago convention P. L. had occasion to order some goods from this firm, and asked them what they thought of the "real convention." In reply the following letter was received:

CHICAGO, July 20, 1896. P. L. Miller, Wayne, Neb. My Dear Sir—In reply to your note I will say, too much Populistic for me, and I will state further, that in the absence of a democratic candidate I will vote with you for Wm. McKinley and sincerely hope he will sweep the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I remain, Yours very truly,
A. J. KASPER.

Mr. Kasper has always been a democrat and there are thousands and thousands of democrats who believe the same as he does and will assist in making Major McKinley's majority the largest ever received by a presidential candidate.
