FREE TRADE ENGLAND THEIR FAVORITE SOIL.

Abolished Protection in the United States as a Means of Destroying the Combines Would Be Fatal to Many American Industries.

Under the caption, "The Growth of Monopoly in English Industry," H. W. Macrosty in the "Contemporary Review" publishes some interesting information respecting trusts in Great Britain which deserves to be attentively studied by those misguided writers who assume that protection is responsible for the movement in the direction of industrial combination so prevalent in this country at present.

A SPECTACLE FOR THE WHOLE COUNTRY.

They have just consolidated their interests in one large combination. In the preceding twelve months they have secured a total of 214,000 shares of the 1897 Armstrong & Co. Co. of New York & Co., making their capital to $42,000,000 in the process.

are all right. That is begging the question. Some of the rankest treason ever heard in this country has been uttered on the floor of Congress. That was in 1890-'91 as well as in 1898-'99.

QUEEN VICTORIA.

An interesting anecdote, and believed to be little known in America, is told of an occasion when the late Majesty Queen Victoria took part with a common ordinary virtuoso in a duet. A famous grand opera company, singing in London at the time, was "commanded" to appear before the Queen at Windsor.

The Queen asked Mr. Cooke if he could sing in the duet for Elzaro and Rosina, from "The Barber of Seville," and the singer replied, "Yes, your Majesty, I could sing it backward."

A JUSTIFIABLE CRIME.

"LD man, I want your address," Debenham broke a piece of silence that had lasted some ten minutes or so.

"It's rather a curious affair," he began, diffidently. "It happened last night. I wanted to go to Baywater to see my old nurse, who lives there. I took the bus at Oxford Circus. As I flared away, you remember it was a nasty wet and foggy, and the vehicle was soon fully in fact, by the time we reached Westbourne Grove there was only room for another. Here we picked up our last passenger. She was a young lady."

"And of course you contrived that she should sit by you," I said. "You would have done the same yourself," Debenham retorted. "Any man would, for she had the sweetest face. It's haunted me all night. It has, really. I don't say she was about 18, or perhaps 20—not more. She had brown eyes, very brown eyes—you know, the kind that seem to speak almost—and they were shaded by long lashes. She had brown hair, too—the kind of hair that twists itself into a lot of little curls—natural curls, you know. I wonder why all girls don't wear their hair that way. Then her mouth—her mouth—"

"Never mind the mouth," I interposed, hastily, seeing that he was about to indulge in an extravagant flood of rhapsody. "It was an ideal mouth, I haven't a doubt!" "She sat down next to me," he went on. "There wasn't much room, and she thanked me when I moved. She had the sweetest voice."

"Splendidly—splendidly!" he cried, as he ran his eyes over it. "It's worth of Bill Sikes himself. I'll send it off in five minutes." And he thrust it in an envelope with a £5 note.

"You'll let me know how it answers?" I said, as he took his hat. "Oh, yes." And then, with a hasty good-night, he went flying down the stairs to catch the post.

"I am very glad," Debenham murmured, nervously. "He must have been an honest fellow." "Yes," she said. "But the strange part of it is that from this morning's post there came a letter from a—a thief, inclosing a £5 note. You can read it if you like."

"And she handed him the precious missive I had concocted." He read it in feigned astonishment. "It never occurs to me that such a curious thing," he murmured. "It's positively— isn't it, you know?"

SEARCHED THE FLOOR AND UNDER THE SEAT.

There was a pause. Debenham stood looking very red and foolish.

"Come, you'd better confess," she said, at length.

He rumped his hair in a reckless fashion.

"It seems impossible for a fellow to do a good action in this world," he cried. "He's sure to be found out."

"Then you did send it?" "Yes. You see, you wouldn't let me help you, and so—I struck me that it would be a capital idea to pretend that I was a thief" (the humbug of his idea, indeed). "I never thought for a moment that you'd see your purse again, and if you hadn't done so, my little godge would never have come to light."

"No, I don't think it would," she answered, "for that was a most realistic letter you wrote."

Debenham groaned. "You can't think what an effort it cost me," he said.

"What an effort, indeed!" "I do hope you will let me keep it as a memento?"

"Yes—if you will promise to forgive me." "Oh, there is nothing to forgive! It was very good of you."

"And you will not think the worse of me for—trying to deceive you?" he went on. Really, he was getting positively absurd; from his voice one would have supposed that he was a prisoner sentenced for his life.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

A New Lodge Organized at Winside. Delegations from Stanton, Pilger, Wayne and Randolph Aid in the Work.

KNIGHTS ROYALLY ENTERTAINED

A Sumptuous Banquet Served Under the Auspices of the Ladies Union. Impromptu Speeches, Music and Dancing Pleasant Features

The Knights of Pythias of Stanton, Pilger, Randolph and Wayne were the invited guests of the new K. P. lodge organized at Winside Tuesday night and never were the members of this grand order, the only thoroughly American order in existence to be recognized by Congress, more royally entertained than by the citizens of that princely town. Friendship, the foundation of the order was never more fully exemplified than by the twenty-two splendid specimens of manhood constituting the newly founded order. For two or three weeks it had been known that a new lodge would be organized at Winside and Tuesday evening eleven of the brave boys from Randolph together with sixteen from Wayne boarded the train for Winside taking an excellent orchestra along with them. On arriving at Winside they were greeted by a large delegation of Knights from Pilger and Stanton when all formed in line and to the strains of music marched in a body to the hotel. Here they met with a reception that thoroughly warmed the heart of every Knight. Jerry Hayes, the genial landlord had prepared a feast fit for kings. It was indeed a sumptuous repast, the tables fairly groaning under the load of good things. After supper the Knights to the number of 75 or more repaired to the castle hall, where the new lodge was instituted under the supervision of Grand Chancellor Young and the Stanton lodge assisted by a few members of the other lodges.
 At 12:30 after a portion of the work had been completed, the guests were invited to opera hall where they were seated around the banquet board. For the writer to attempt to do justice to the entertainment would be futile. The banquet was given under the auspices of the Ladies Union of that town and it could not well have been excelled. It was simply superb in every particular and was presided over by a bevy of Winside's most charming women and young ladies. At the conclusion of the banquet H. E. Simans acted as toast master and a number of toasts were responded to after which Grand Chancellor Young, who has endeared himself to the Knights, delivered a short address on Pythianism and also heartily thanked the ladies for the magnificent spread they had set before the Knights. An adjournment was then taken to lodge rooms where the work of instituting the lodge was continued and it was six o'clock in the morning before the work was completed.

Before returning home on the morning train the Knights with the orchestra assembled at the hotel and serenaded the Grand Chancellor, who made a happy speech, warmly commending the Knights on their conduct during their visit in Winside, and thanking them for their assistance. In concluding he was given three rousing cheers. It was a Pythian gathering that will long be remembered by the Knights as a bright oasis in this busy bustling world.
 The ladies did well their part in making it pleasant for the guests and at the conclusion of the banquet cleared the hall and gave a delightful dance which was attended by many of the visitors.
 The following officers of Virgil Lodge No. 62, were elected for the ensuing year: C. G., J. F. Crosby; V. C. A. B. Cherry; Priolate, Wm. K. Phelps; M. of W., A. J. Tracy; M. of F., A. T.
