

The Duchess.

CHAPTER XII.

On the morning following the incident, through which the Duchess had passed, she was sitting at her dressing table in the room which she had made her own. She was looking at herself in the glass, and was thinking of the day which she had spent at the Duchess's. She was feeling very much surprised, and she was wondering what her father would say when she told him of her escapade. She was feeling very much surprised, and she was wondering what her father would say when she told him of her escapade.

CHAPTER XIII.

CHAPTER XIV.

To-day is not a sowing, steady downpour that commenced at early dawn is still rendering miserable the shrubbery and garden.

CHAPTER XV.

It is not an apartment, after all. A long, low, vaulted passage reveals itself, and she is looking at the door which she has just opened.

With a certainty of meeting nobody in the empty rooms and corridors, wanders aimlessly throughout their dreary length and breadth. These rooms are well known to her, and presently wearying of them she turns aside and rather timidly pushes open a heavy, faded, bolt-covered door that leads she scarcely knows whither.

It is not an apartment, after all. A long, low, vaulted passage reveals itself, and she is looking at the door which she has just opened. She is feeling very much surprised, and she is wondering what her father would say when she told him of her escapade.

CHAPTER XVI.

There was no insult. I may have told her that it was a mistake to do such things as she was doing, but she must not take it to heart. She is feeling very much surprised, and she is wondering what her father would say when she told him of her escapade.

CHAPTER XVII.

Four long days have crept languidly into the past, and the dullness of day is broken by the sun's rays. She is feeling very much surprised, and she is wondering what her father would say when she told him of her escapade.

CHAPTER XVIII.

It is a splendid appearance, that the painter's pencil fails to sketch and only a hunter's dream on a pillow of hickory at foot of St. Regis is able to picture.

CHAPTER XIX.

How can you tell mistletoes from toothstays, little boy? Mrs. Richmond always hate to go into a drugstore and ask to see the doctor, and then walk out without buying anything.

Wives of the Waltz King. Johann Strauss, the waltz king, was scarcely laid away to rest in the Friedhof when a series of disputes arose over his possessions. Strauss secreted to his wife and stepdaughter, as well as his sisters, moderate incomes for life, and then made the Society of Friends of Music his heir-at-law.

Walls Plastered with Coins. Miss Daisy Dentz, of Dentzville, N. J., a suburb of Trenton, has probably the largest collection of coins in New Jersey. Some of them are many hundred years old, and they represent the currencies of nearly every country in the world.

The Wind Made Snowballs. Last March there was a remarkable exhibition at Grifton, N. E., of the comparatively rare phenomenon of snow rollers. The English fallen snow was rolled by the wind into enormous cylinders, some of them as large as a barrel, which dotted the hills and fields. Similar rollers have been seen in recent years in Connecticut, in Kansas and in the State of Washington.

Glass Railways. By means of a valuable toughening process recently discovered glass may be molded into lengths and used as railway sleepers. It is therefore possible to have complete glass railways.

STRIKE!

Hundreds of Thousands Are Involved.

Thousands of laborers have reached a stage of organized activity, and a general strike is being planned for the near future. The strike will affect the entire country, and will be one of the most important events of the year.

THE USEFUL BICYCLE.

It Has Taken a Distinctive Place in the Social Economy.

There is a quite general belief in this country that bicycling is diminishing rather than increasing. But it is doubtful if the number of bicycles in actual use is not larger to-day than ever before.
