AT THE PACIFIC GATEWAY.

"Ini California President McKinley has reached one of the most interesting stages of his long journey. The whole Pacific cosat region of the United States is the child of legitimate expansion, and its history is especially significant at the present time. One of the reasons impelling this country to acquire California operated also in dealing with the Philippines. If California hid, not become a part of the United States it would have passed to England or France through negonations with Mexico. One State Department under the early Polk administration, and even before, maintained a trief "igliance upon this point, and our invariand army officers on the Pacific were given cautionary instructions. One American commodore was at years abed of time in hoisting the flag, and when government to retrace his step, doubting and the pacific of the was merely a little too fast for manifest destby. California came to the United States flaging and when compelled by his own government to retrace his step, doubting in the compelled by the wing government to retrace his step, doubting and the properties of the wisdom of pacepting a region of what seemed the other side of the world and populated with 30,000 Mexicane, Spaniards, hybrids and Indians. of the Norfolk News hand

A reader of the Norfolk News handed in the following article to that paper and requested its publication:
Atchineon, Kan. Jan. 15, 1901.—A. H. Wait, Edöhor Beacon—Dear Sir: Your letter of inquiry regarding smallpox treatment received. I assure you I have no secrets concerning this matter. I have abswered thousands of letters in the same manner. Smallpox in its malignancy, as I have seen it at Lenor and other places, is so terriable that I could not withhold a secret treatment when it is so simple and yet for extrement when it is so simple and yet for extrement when it is so simple and yet for extrement when it is so simple and yet for extrement when it is so simple and yet for extrement when the seen it advocate and use. I contracted smallpox while attending the disease and the torture I underwent would not permit me to retain a secret for the alleviation of humanity. I not only question vaccination but detest pest houses. I have had much experience inable care and treatment of smallpox and the mortality is doubted where pest houses are used. If life is worth an effort, why invite death by dragging the poor sick, tortured oul from his comfortable home to a miserable, unaccommodating, degrading pest house. The oustom is barbarous and belongs to the vaccinating class. The pest house is usually managed by drunken hirelings who care nothing for the death of the poor sufferers who dave been dragged from loved ordes at home. Is it a wonder people dread smallpox with such barbarous treatment? I owe my life to a bitter fight against removal to a pest house.

bitter fight against removal to a pest house.

The vinegar treatment obliviates all this. Members of the family can nurse each other without fear of contagion. In other words, should one of the familist contract smallpox others of the family can take vinegar treatment and remain with him, to relieve his suffering, without contracting the disease. Be certain it is pure apple dider vinegar, not store apple dider vinegar so called, but procure it from the man who made the cider. Then take it disluted well with water.

If exposed but once, as is usually the cise, a tablespoonful of vinegar three or four times daily for a week will do but in case of a nurse, constantly exposed, the dose should be somewhat increased until the effect is cit, such as pricking of the skin and a nervousness. Then the dose can be decreased, but continued as long as exposed, without harm. Isolation and disinfection are also important, as the
