Farmers have been busy as bees the past week and the cornfields are now looking comparatively good and the prospects for a big yield improves with every day of sunshine. There can be no doubt of an average crop, notwithstanding that in some places the corn is not as far advanced as it ought to be.

Those readers of McClure's who "always look for a railroad story"—and there are many of them—will find a tale to their liking in the July number. Frank H. Spearman, who is carving out a reputation in a hitherto unworked field, contributes "The Striker's Story; How McTerza Stopped the Railroad Riot." According to the author, "The reputation of Jimmie McTerza is a classic among the good men of McClure's" and it is likely that the hero will become a classic among Mr. Spearman's readers. As the Striker puts it, "He is the head of the push." And after his single-handed fight against hundreds of strikers, one does not wonder that "royal Kate Mullenix"—but why "give away" the play?

John W. Demore, who for nearly 13 years was a member of the camp of Modern Woodmen at Piper City, Ill., died May 27 last at Chicago of organic heart disease. His certificate in the Modern Woodman society was for $2,000 and there was some question as to the payment of same when the Woodmen officials were informed that Demore was a Dowieite and did not employ a physician. However, an investigation showed that Demore's case was hopeless, and he would have died anyhow. Within a few days his wife will be paid the $2,000 due on his certificate. Demore paid to the Modern Woodmen society in assessments, $100.50, which makes the $2,000 insurance to his wife come very cheaply.

The midsummer fiction number of the July Cosmopolitan contains the best story Bret Harte has written in a long time. The well-known Jack Hamlin is the hero and he will be eagerly welcomed back by the public. Despe, rudo and gambler that he is, theoretically we ought not to like him, but he has that fine courage too rarely met with in real life or in fiction, and those who read "A Mercury of the Foothills" will probably loose sight of his faults in following the events which take place upon "that heaven-kissing hill." Katrina Trask's story in the same number should be read by every woman. It is one of those home tragedies constantly going on in modern society. It is probably the clearest piece of work Mrs. Trask has ever done. R. K. Mun-Kittrick's quaint New England coast yarn has a breeziness about it that makes it really refreshing. The July installment of Edgerton Custie's story begins to raise the curtain on the inevitable ruin which the Duke of Cluny's weakness must bring upon those who love him.

The Contrabandist; OR One Life's Secret!

A TRUE STORY OF THE SOUTH OF FRANCE

CHAPTER XI.

A stranger brought a note for Louis some hours after the disappearance of Rose. He said his name was Raimonde, and that he had been sent by a person who was a friend both to himself and to the missing girl.

He must have required Louis to trust himself absolvingly in the hands of the messenger. For a time he hesitated. Then his anxiety led him to obey. He even consented to be blindfolded, as the letter had enjoined.

Under circumstances of a less urgent and exciting nature, Louis might have paused to question the wisdom of his course in wholly and unreservedly entrusting himself to the hands of an utter stranger. Together they continued their route. Raimonde passed, saying: "Will monsieur stand here an instant? I must move a step forward, and monsieur must be very careful not to remove the handkerchief just yet."

He released his hand and left him. Louis, standing still, heard a harsh, grating sound at a little distance before him, and a faint light of some person lifting a heavy key.

"Come, monsieur," said the voice of Raimonde; "take one step forward and here is my hand. I am below you now. You must stop. Put your hand on my shoulder—thus. Now, you know that you stand on a rock, from which I have jumped. You must follow me—so; that is all. Here we are."

The grating noise was heard again. The key was conducted over what seemed to be a smooth and level path of stone. He had been admitted by Raimonde through the rear entrance of the cavern, and was passing now through the long subterranean gallery in the rock.

At length they paused again; a noise of hoarse and hoarse voices, and a deep, muffled thud, which Louis was led. Then the handkerchief was untied, the door closed behind him, and taking off the bandage from his eyes, Louis found himself in the cell of Jacques.

"Monsieur," uttered Jacques, springing forward, "you are disguised, eh? I did not know you at first."

"You here, my good friend?" uttered Louis, in astonishment, looking about him. "What place is this?"

"—sit! not too loud, monsieur, if you please. I told you I was a prisoner—did I not?"

"Yes; but such a prison as this! And Rose—tell me where she is."

"She is here also, monsieur—in a cell like this, and close by it."

"Jacques! just now me—am I in danger? Let me go instantly and deliver her!"

"He was at the door, but Jacques slipped on his feet."

"For my sake, monsieur, be careful, or you will spoil all! Come here, I entreat you, and listen to me. Rose is safe at present, and if you are calm enough to hear what I wish to say, and to act with me, we may rescue her in ten minutes, which means, in your haste as yours would ruin the scheme."

It was plain enough. The count suffered himself to be led to a seat at the opposite side of the cell, and listen to the explanation of his companion, while burning with eagerness to hasten to the rescue of Rose. He began by a brief work of it. He began by relating the story of the abduction of Rose, and the plot that led to it. Louis was angered and indignantly beyond measure, as he listened to the account of Gasparde's villainy.

"Who is he—what is he, this wretch, Gasparde?" he uttered, hotly.

"The chief of a horde of brigands and contrabandists, monsieur."

"Is it possible!—and yet, why not? One cannot be surprised at hearing of one so base as he. And Rose is in his power?"

"Not exactly, monsieur. He brought her hither, as I have told you, to this prison, which is a cavern in the center of the forest, and after placing her in the cell of which I have spoken, went away with the men upon an expedition, from which they will not probably return until midnight or to-morrow morning. When he comes back, he will either either bring her a ransom, or he will keep her confined in that cell, until she yields to death; for he is just so merciless. He never has forgotten the treatment he once received at your hands, nor the threats and rebukes of Hugh LaFontaine; and he is now watching every chance for an opportunity of revenge. It is ours to deprive him of that revenge."

"Your plan—your plan, Jacques?"

"The man who accompanied you hither is the guard left by Gasparde. He has secured for me an interview with you; but he never suspects that it is for the purpose of liberating Rose and myself, for were we to escape, he knows that the vengeance of the leader would fall on him. Now, we must either manage to gain his silence by force or by a bribe. If we find him, and leave him here when he comes, the wretch, Gasparde, will shoot him when he comes back; but if a sum of money were offered him, I have an idea that he would not only suffer his prisoners to escape, but also take leave himself, since he has grown weary of the captain's tyranny."

"The bribe, then—the bribe, by all means, and be it ever so small. I happen to have a considerable sum with me; but we must be cautious."

"Yes—yes, we must be cautious, as you say; and in case he should refuse the money, we must be prepared to spring the alarm. The wretch, Gasparde, will shoot him when he comes back; but if a sum of money were offered him, I have an idea that he would not only suffer his prisoners to escape, but also take leave himself, since he has grown weary of the captain's tyranny."

"The guard appeared. Jacques glanced towards the count, and then said: "Comrade, you don't forget, I suppose, the agreement which we made about the bidding adieu to monsieur le capitaine?"

"The glitter of gold caught Raimonde's eye from a heavy purse which the count held carelessly in his hand. His avizars were arrested.

"I remember it very well, Jacques," he answered.

The count stepped forward.

"My friend, suppose you were to shut your eyes for the space of half an hour, and to close them at the end of the time, to find yourself richer by a thousand francs or two or three times that sum, perhaps?"

"It would be a very pleasant thing, monsieur."

"I know you that sum in return for a plain favor which I shall ask at your hands."

"Name the favor and it is yours, monsieur."

"I desire the use of the keys which unlock the doors of these cells, and you

It was a matter of ignorance to him, whether Gasparde had returned with the men who had captured him. He was in the power of murderers now, and he was loath to him than to any other who might excite in them a thirst for vengeance. Yet, with the probability of the escape of Rose, he suffered no apprehensions to disturb him.

CHAPTER XII.

With rare accuracy, the spoils of that night's work, the brigand chief, Gasparde, returned, a little after midnight, to the cave. He was in an excellent humor with his multiplied success in effecting the capture of Rose and gaining far more than he had anticipated by the robbery committed that night.

What, then, was his rage and disappointment to learn from the men whom he had sent back three or four hours earlier that Rose had made her escape! He raved like a maniac; he vowed the escape of his prisoners, and on the spot of the moment, would instantly have gone to assassinate his new prisoners, had not some quarrel arising among the men diverted his attention for a time. During this interval he had an opportunity to become cool, and afterwards repaired to the cells to ascertain what it could be that the man had taken in company with Jacques, and who wore the disguise of a brigand. His mingled astonishment, rage and exultation may be easily imagined on discovering it to be the Count d'Artois.

"Who, my fine fellow! so you are there, and you, too, have escaped! Well, well, well, not a bad exchange of prisoners! Won't I make you dance presently, monsieur! Just wait till daylight!"

"You may do with me what you will," answered Louis, calmly, "since she has escaped, can suffer any torture now."

"I will talk to her, and she will be glad to see you. I mean to get her back again—do you hear that? I will watch, day and night, till the time comes, as I have watched since the time when I vowed revenge for all that happened to me at your hands. So here you helped her to escape, did you?"

"I am sorry to hear that she will be kept now so far beyond your reach that no scheme of yours will ever draw her hither again."

"We will see to that, monsieur—we will see to that! Now mark me! I will get the girl back, and you shall starve before me if you do not bring her by, hour by hour, till you die in your chains!"

He went out, and left his prisoner in the deep silence of his lonely cell to think of those cruel words.

BADGERS FIND RICH GEMS.

Deposit of Precious Stones Unearthed by the Busy Animals.

The discovery of the ledge of precious stones on Yogo creek, Ferguson County, Montana, was made by the finding of true blue sapphires in the earth thrown out by the badgers in digging their holes. The ledge was traced across the country for a distance of several miles by means of these badger holes. These animals were numerous in that section of the country, and, as the limestone came very near the surface of the ground, the only place where the badgers could dig holes deep enough for their dens was in the soft yellow clay which filled the lead at the surface. The gems are pronounced by experts to be equal to the true blue oriental sapphires, and command as good if not better prices from the leading jewelers of London, Paris and New York. The stones are found at the surface of the ledge in soft, yellow clay. When depth is attained on the vein it is found to be hard clay or shale, the result of volcanic eruption and identical in appearance with the diamond deposits of Kimberley, in South Africa.

True blue sapphires are found in India in the glacial gravels, but never before have they been found in the original matrix in which they were placed by the volcano which created them.

The new gem fields are located about 100 miles northeast of Helena, on a tributary of the Judith River, in Ferguson County. The geological survey took note of the deposits in its late report. The first shipment of these stones was a clear box full, which was shipped to a New York jeweler, who bought them for $3,750. He pronounced them equal in every respect to the true oriental sapphires. Jewelry concerns in London have asked for all that can be obtained, offering prices ranging from $8 to as high as $100 per carat.

There are two companies mining sapphires. One, a London concern, has all of its stones cut in London, while the American company has a plant in Helena, where the stones are cut. The American cut stones, with the characteristic skill of American workmen, command a better price, because of the superior fire and lustre due to the more skillful cutting. The American company has in addition to its claims in Ferguson County acquired a large amount of ground on Rock Creek, in Missoula County, from which there are washed every month several thousand carats of sapphires of all colors and tints, ranging from greenish blue, pinks, straw colors and whites.

The Rock creek field also produces among the sapphires a number of rubies, some of them of fine quality, and blue tint, which exceed many times over the value of the finest diamonds. These stones in Missoula County are found to the gravel and not in the matrix like the ones in Ferguson County. They have evidently been washed by glacial action from some vein, the locality of which has never been discovered. These off-colored sapphires are found in nearly all of the placer mines in Montana, but until the Yogo fields were discovered in 1885 very few of the true blue sapphires were found. Many of these off-colored stones, as they are called, are of great beauty, the pinks and straw colors being exceptionally beautiful, and, while they have not the stamp of fashion, their tones are purchased at high prices by the lovers of fine gems. Both of these companies are preparing to mine these stones on a large scale.—Chicago Chronicle.

Short of Water.

Utah proposes to erect penning canals, with a magnificent system, by supplying the Great Salt Lake basin with needed water. Irrigation has cut off the supply and the lake itself is in imminent danger of drying up. The usual supply of water is being withheld and evaporation is rapidly lowering the level of the lake. Centuries ago the shores of the great inland salt sea were high on the mountains, where the line of the ancient brook is visible to-day and the lake, which has sunk to its present dimensions, promises to disappear far more rapidly than in the great past.

WASH GOODS GOWNS.

OUTING SUITS ARE GENERALLY SEVERE OF OUTLINE.

Elaborations Permitted to Those Who Like Them—Some New Fabrics—A Quintette of Hats That Represent the Tip of the Mode.

New York correspondence:

SEVERITY of outline is a characteristic of most of the outing suits made from the heavier wash goods, such as duck, plume, linen and denim. Elaborations are confined to those who like them, and they may be carried to the same extreme of complexity that prevails in gowns of other fabrics, but rarely do they interpose seriously with plain outlines. The plain shirt waist design is a majority of all, although fancy shirt waists are seen. The skirts are either trimmed with duck or plume of white or a contrasting color. White plique skirts are very elaborate. Some are alternate bands of white embroidery insertion and bands of plique. These usually are worn with a fancy waist, and that may mean something quite as elaborate as the fancy bodies. The dark colored goods are often made up with ecru embroidery. Most of last summer's goods of this general order hold over, and are re-enforced by a few new ones. One of the latter is mercerized duck, which is made up either elaborately and trimmed with embroidery or insertion. Mercerized linen is another quite as elaborate as the fancy bodies. It is made up at a distance much like silk. This material is made up of the most elaborately of any of the heavy wash stuffs. The new shade of blue, somewhat darker than cadet, seems to be the favorite color, and when trimmed with white lace and insertion looks very fine. There is when made simply it stands out well from in-laborate dresses of other fabrics. A striking use of this fabric in the stylish blue shade is shown in this small picture. Here the hand trimming was crimson velvet ribbon, and yoke and collar were ecru lace.

Not a few skirts in these stuffs have Spanish flounces, either plain or handed with insertion or lace. Those box-pleated all around are very jaunty and look swaggy with cotton jacket and fancy white waist. All are unlined. Mercerized linen usually is made over a drop skirt. Denim, duck and plume are worn over fancy white muslin or lawn petticoats, as a rule. A white plique with skirt pleated all around is shown at the left in the second picture. Its sailor collar was all-over-embroidery edged with a tiny embroidered ruffle, and a fancy white shirt waist gave good contrast to the plainness of the dress. In the same grade as to its degree of elaborateness was the third gown of this row. It was light brown denim. Linen embroidery and brown silk cord were its trimmings. The two dresses that remain in this illustration were examples of free trimming that did not affect the outlines much. The left-hand one of these was grass linen band with sheer grass inlaid at top and bottom with ecru embroidery. The other was shirred mercerized

NO TARIFF REVISION.

THE REPUBLICAN SENTIMENT STRONGLY AGAINST IT.

President McKinley and Leading Senators and Congressmen Vigorously Opposed to Tinkering with the Duty Schedules at This Time.

In response to a request by the American Protective Tariff League for an expression regarding the reopening of the tariff question, either by direct legislation or by the roundabout method of special trade treaties framed for the benefit of a few industries and at the expense of the general body of industries, a number of letters have been received from conspicuous members of the Fifty-seventh Congress. All of these letters are identical in one and the same. They are positively adverse to any scheme of meddling with the tariff schedules, now or in the near future. They tally exactly with the expressions of Congressman Taylor of Ohio before the Industrial Commission, and of Congressman Dalzell of Pennsylvania in an interview published after his return from an extended Western tour.

A New England Senator writes: "It is the old story over again—a protective tariff secured after long agitation and effort, resulting in business prosperity; then a movement in the direction of free trade in which those who would have reaped the benefit of protection are foolishly tempted to join. It is very discouraging."

A Mississippi Valley Congressman of marked prominence says: "Nine-tenths of the sentiment in favor of the Babelock bill is based upon ignorance, misstatements of fact and prejudice growing from recent consolidation of protective industries."

In a recent interview at Cleveland Senator Hanna declared that he did not believe the President ever said to M. Stegried that he had ceased to be an ultra-protectionist and that the necessity for protection had largely disappeared. Senator Hanna said: "From all the talks I have had recently with President McKinley I am of the opinion that he is as greatly a believer in protection as ever."

"This talk that the next Congress will tinker with the Dingley tariff law at the suggestion of the President is all nonsense. The Dingley law is a scientific measure and will last for years to come. The President believes it is as necessary as ever before and will not, in my belief, advocate any changes whatever. He still believes in protecting the American industries wherever it is necessary."

"The President, however, is a strong advocate of reciprocity, and would, I think, consider treaties along the line of mutual interest between this country and another."

"If another country is willing to offer us something without duty which we need badly we shall be willing to reciprocate by opening the tariff wall a little and giving them something free of duty, as long as it does not interfere with the protection of our industries."

"The French reciprocity treaties would have been accepted had it not been for some objectionable tariff features. The treaties they stood, if ratified by the United States, would have killed the knit goods industry in the New England States and the pottery business in Ohio. That is the reason they failed. As long as the United States is able to make reciprocity treaties with foreign countries without injuring American industries they will be made, and gladly."

The following is from General Grosvenor, the Ohio Congressman, who has been said to be in a peculiar sense the reflector of the views of President McKinley on the floor of the House of Representatives: "Admitting that the repeal of the duties upon certain products of American industry might injure and even destroy certain of the trusts, agitation of the question of the modification of the present tariff system would do more financial injury to the welfare of the country in one month than all the benefits that the most enthusiastic rainbow chaser of the suggestion has ever dreamed of. Let a party with political power enough solemnly decide that they will enter upon the reorganization of the schedules of the present tariff law and business will stop as quickly as human life will stop when the blood ceases to circulate. I do not mean to cause absolutely, but the heart will beat more slowly and the blood will flow in paucity of amount and speed."

"I do not believe that the placing of our products of iron and steel upon the free list would break up a single trust or imply the value of the stock of the United States Steel Company or any other of the combinations. There is no trouble about the trusts. Under our constitution as at present formed, Congress, in co-operation with the State Legislatures, has ample power to do all that is necessary, all that is just, all that is fair, in the regulation of combinations of money, capital and labor."

At the Mercy of Europe.

Furthermore, our ocean-borne commerce, in the absence of American ships in which to transport it, is at the mercy of Europe. An outbreak of war, the turning loose of a fleet of commerce destroyers by the enemies of Great Britain, would put an instant stop to American exports, because we are dependent upon British ships for the major part of our ocean transportation. Sound considerations of public policy, not the pecuniary interests of any group of American capitalists, are behind the proposed legislation to aid in building up American deep-water shipping. The interests of foreign ship-owners are largely behind the opposition to that measure.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

FOR BOUDOIR AND HOUSE WEAR.

Let the Tariff Alone.

The majority sentiment of the Republican party is decidedly against any revision of the protective tariff of 1897. The present unparalleled prosperity of the country dates from the election of President McKinley in 1896 and the enactment into law of the protective tariff of 1896 known as the Dingley law. It can be said with a good deal of truth that this Republican tariff turned the tide of national adversity and hard times, and rescued the country from dire distress. The Democratic party declared that the tariff of 1897 would be a dismal failure; that under its provisions (this country could not increase its export trade and foreign commerce. Both predictions have proved a failure.

Failed in their attempts to disprove the tariff and to make free silver and "millitarians" vital issues, the Democratic party undertakes to argue that trusts are an outgrowth of the tariff, and that therefore the protective tariff on all trust-made goods must be placed on the free list. Such a policy would be dangerous for it would destroy all domestic independent concerns and place the products more firmly than ever in the control of trusts. The policy under which the country has prospered—the bridge over which the people have traversed to success—must not be destroyed. If the tariff is meddled with present prosperity will disappear. Let the tariff alone.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

By Whom the Tariff Is Needed.

This country was never more prosperous than it is right now under the Dingley tariff, and as the prosperity began as soon as the Dingley tariff was passed, and as there had been no prosperity under the tariff it displaced, it is fair to attribute a large share of the existing prosperity to the Dingley tariff. There are trusts in Great Britain, where there is no protective tariff, and the biggest trust, so-called, in this country, the Standard Oil Company, has no tariff protection. The trusts do not need the tariff in order to exist, but to maintain their competition with the trusts, do need tariff protection.

The larger share of existing labor troubles is due to the demagogic tirades against trusts in which Democratic papers are indulging now in the same fashion that they indulged before the day of trusts against "robber barons." The people are not oppressed so far by the exactions of the protected trusts or of the tariff. There is not a single article, the product of protected industry, well established in this country, which is not cheaper to-day than it was before the protective duty was imposed.—Louisville Commercial.

A Flourishing Growth.

Let Well Enough Alone.

When we are well off it is a good time to quit experiments. The results of the Wilson-Gorman act are a little too fresh in the memory of the people. The reduction in the average tariff by this act was comparatively small, yet it was big enough to paralyze industry, and inaugurate a financial panic that has taken several years to recover from. Let well enough alone.—Lincoln (Nebr.) Journal.

Over-time and Half-time.

It will be noticed that in all strike settlements these days, provisions are made for payment for overtime, either at time-and-a-half or double rates. The question of overtime does not concern wage earners during free trade tariffs. Half the workmen are satisfied with full time, and all the rest would be glad of full time.

A "Slim" Lieutenant.

One day the commanding officer of a Sussex volunteer regiment met one of his lieutenants on the rifle range. The lieutenant was shooting, and he "called" each shot as hit without waiting for the markers to signal the result.

"You're a pretty good guesser," said the Colonel. "Why don't you admit you're guessing where those shots land?"

"If bet you a box of cigars," said the junior officer, that I can call twenty shots correctly in succession."

"Taken," said the old warrior, who was nothing if not a sportsman.

The lieutenant fired.

"Miss," he announced, and a red flag from the target told that this was correct. Another shot. "Miss," he declared. A third shot. "Miss again," he said. Fourth shot. "Fourth miss," announced the young officer. Another shot. "Miss," again sang out the lieutenant.

"Hold on there," put in the Colonel. "What are you trying to do? I thought you were going for the target."

"I am trying to win my box of cigars," said the lieutenant.

"Don't try any more," said the Colonel. "You're no sportsman."

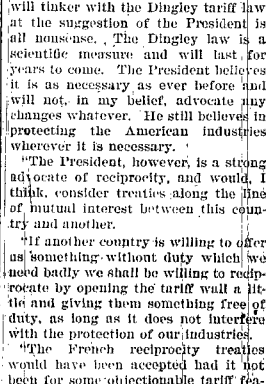

Americans in Venice.

Two American men in Venice spent their first evening looking round the lagoons in a gondola, it being moonlight of course, and all the rest of the sentimental, charming things it is always in Venice.

"Here comes a gondolier," stung-whispered one to the other. "That probably contains a pair of lovers. See how absorbed those two dim figures evidently are in each other, the gondolier, other gondoliers, the witchery of the moonlight, and the place—all of it, they are oblivious. Oh, what a spot for sentiment! The air is full of it!"

And as the two gondoliers gazed past each other the Americans heard the unmistakable accents of a fellow countryman.

"I'll see you 'ere and raise you five."

The republicans of Wayne county can easily elect their ticket this fall if fair methods are used and no such proceedings are permitted as marked the convention of a year ago. Otherwise there is no telling what the result will be. Republicans who have the best wishes of the republican party at heart will bear this in mind.

"The greatest nuisance with which postoffices, especially those in the smaller cities, have to contend," said an official of the Postoffice Department, "is that occasioned by the thoughtlessness of the great army of future men and women of this glorious republic, sometimes irreverently called 'school kids.' Many of these, during the school months, flock to the post-office three or four times a day, and frequently three or four members of the same family repeat the same performance at short intervals. Thus the mail of one family is needlessly called for by children twelve or fifteen times a day for five or six consecutive days in a week without the delivery of a solitary piece of mail for weeks at a stretch, some older member of the family generally having called during the morning or afternoon. Parents and guardians can, if they will, do much toward abating this evil, and at the same time benefit the children, by appointing one of them official mail carrier for the family, whose duty it shall be to call at the postoffice at stated and reasonable times, and prohibiting others from going there so often.—Chicago Record-Herald."

The HERALD is short a subscriber since last Saturday, and just to show the size of the man we will explain why. The people of Carroll held a school election last week Monday, and exercised the right of franchise as provided by law, and men were elected school director and treasurer who are not and cannot be made stool pigeons for J. R. Manning, and although we have not been in Carroll for several months or had anything to do with the matter, the aforesaid subscriber (J. R. Manning), poor thing, desired to vent his spleen upon us because the people of Carroll school district did not see fit to choose the men he wanted. God pity a man so contemptibly small. But that isn't all. Some time ago, James Baker, one of the school directors and also postmaster at Carroll, refused to acquiesce with Manning in some school matters and as a result Manning has threatened to get Mr. Baker's scalp, and is now trying to defeat him for reappointment although he told Baker he was taking no part in the matter—which is on a par with many other things he says. Mr. Baker is an honorable, honest old soldier who has made a very good postmaster and has given general satisfaction, and every old soldier in Wayne county should condemn the revengeful spirit which prompts such proceedings.

LATER: Since the above was written we have received a mammoth petition in which three of Mr. M.'s "hunks" have ordered the HERALD discontinued. Gosh, but we feel bad.

LOVE'S TRAGEDY

THE girl was looking out of the window, humming softly...

A month had passed. Once more George stood at the same window...

They were good boys, but hardly worth the amount of serious observation he was giving them...

"You are sure your mind is made up, George?"

"What is the good of beginning again?" she said, with an impatient movement.

"But, George," and the man made an appealing gesture...

"Why not?" she returned, quickly. "That is just what I wanted to speak to you about..."

"The funeral and wedding marches are side by side on the piano..."

"What does my face tell you?" he asked. "She looked at him critically."

"For a moment there was a dangerous gleam in his eyes, but it changed to a tender look of amusement..."

"I suppose it would have been more sensible," he agreed, "only I don't love either Midge or Lillian..."

"You needn't try to be funny, Rex," she said severely. "You know quite well I should have to become a domesticated woman if I married..."

"By Jove! that's the nearest I've ever got!" thought Rex. "I believe she does half like me, but mustn't like her yet before she'll respect me..."

"I beg your pardon, George. I believe you may be right, after all, though it is hard to think of giving you up..."

"Yes, I know what you are," he replied quietly. "You are very young..."

"Yes, I am very young—only 19, and you are nearly 30..."

"All right, George. In a month I shall have made up my mind, and I will tell you, Good-by..."

"Good-by," she murmured, vaguely afraid of what she had done...

Midge was sitting there alone, sewing and singing gaily...

"Guess who's been here?" exclaimed Midge. "Who?"

No External Symptoms.

The blood may be in bad condition, yet with no external signs, no skin eruption or sores to indicate it. The symptoms in such cases being a variable appetite, poor digestion, an indescribable weakness and nervousness, loss of flesh and a general run-down condition of the system—clearly showing the blood has lost its nutritive qualities, has become thin and watery. It is in just such cases that S. S. S. has done some of its quickest and most effective work by building up the blood and supplying the elements lacking to make it strong and vigorous.

"My wife used several bottles of S. S. S. as a blood purifier and to tone up a weak and emaciated system, with very marked effect by way of improvement. We regard it a great tonic and blood purifier." J. F. Durr, Princeton, Mo.

SSS is the greatest of all tonics, and you will find the appetite improves at once, strength returns, and nervousness vanishes as new rich pure blood once more circulates through all parts of the system.

S. S. S. is the only purely vegetable blood purifier known. It contains no minerals whatever. Send for our free book on blood and skin diseases and write our physicians for any information or advice wanted. No charge for medical advice.

EXCHANGE NOTES

Hartington News: Miss Brown of Wayne, returned home Tuesday after a pleasant visit with her sister, Mrs. W. H. Mallett at Wauwapa.

Tekamah Journal: Rev. Hammond left yesterday to attend synod at Wayne. Mrs. Hammond is spending the time of his absence among friends at the Grace Lutheran church on the Divide.

Allen News: Miss Carrie Stewart departed Monday for Wayne, where she will attend the Normal. Miss Stewart has been secured as principal of the Concord school for next year, and the News knows Concord has made no mistake in their selection, as Miss Stewart is an up-to-date teacher, who keeps her self posted in the very latest and best methods of teaching by taking the special courses of study during her vacations.

Homestead: It is a difficult thing to weed out inferior animals from the herds and flocks. There is as much reason why this should be done as there is for weeding out growing crops or thinning fruit on an over loaded tree. The man who does not select his seed has to be satisfied with inferior crops caused by inferior seed. The man who fails to weed his herds has to be burdened with inferior offspring as a result from such breeding. We should look at this matter philosophically and weed out the inferior and breed from the best, obtaining quality rather than quantity.

Stanton Picket: C. H. Chace is the victim of more runaway accidents than any other man in Stanton county. The last and by far the most serious occurred a few minutes before noon Monday. Mr. Chace and family were starting for the Masonic picnic and were in their carriage headed west in front of Peyerherm & Wiebolds implement house where the accident occurred. L. L. Way had hauled his street sprinkler filled with water for the use of the masons to the bank of F. A. Raabe's store building. To get the sprinkler out he was obliged to haul it back and hooked a team to it for that purpose, connecting with a rope. The team were fast and the man at the tongue found it impossible to properly guide the vehicle, which crashed into the board blind at the back of the corner saloon. The noise started the team they lunged, broke the rope and dashed into the street with the doubletrees pounding their heels, and turned west. Their speed made it impossible for Mr. Way to stop them and the lines were jerked from his grasp. Half a block ahead was the Chace carriage, the occupants all unconscious of danger. Into this runaway team dashed one going on each side and the doubletrees bounding upwards came down directly across the center of the top, crushing it down. The carriage was jammed forward into Mr. Chace's own team and the four horses, the wrecked carriage and precious human lives were piled up in one confused mass. Those who saw the condition of affairs describe it as horrifying and it is almost a miracle that the family all escaped death or serious injury, yet they did. Mr. Chace was down town a few hours later walking with a cane and feeling somewhat sore from his bruises but not seriously hurt. Mrs. Chace was worse hurt and badly frightened, yet her condition is not serious. The carriage and Mr. Chace's harness are a total wreck. Two weeks ago a team ran over and killed the Chace family cow. Last Saturday evening another runaway team straddled one of the fine shade trees in front of their home, breaking the bark badly, and now has Excursion Rates to the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo.

It was said when the World's Fair closed that this country would not see its equal in fifty years. In all but the space occupied, however, the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo this year will excel the great show of '03. This means that more can be seen in the same length of time at the Pan-American, and with less fatigue and weariness that was unavoidable at the World's Fair.

The exhibits will be varied, interesting and instructive, and the improvement in their selection and the manner in which they are displayed, due to the experience gained by exhibitors at the recent great Expositions, will be very noticeable. In the variety, quality, novelty and number of its entertainment features, the Buffalo Exposition will surpass all others.

There are different rates for tickets with different limits, and if you expect to visit Buffalo, and will send your address to the undersigned, the rates now in effect will be quoted you, and you will be kept advised of any changes.

An artistic booklet, beautifully illustrated and giving a concise description of this great Exposition, will be mailed free to all inquirers.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed color, also his eyes, and he suffered terribly. His malady was yellow jaundice. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured. A trial proves its matchless merit for all stomach, liver, and kidney troubles. Only 50 cents at Raymonds."
