AMERICAN FENCE FARM PROFITS

Every rod of good fence helps to cheapen the cost of your matured hogs, beeves, sheep and horses.

The better and greater the quantity of efficient fence on the farm, the higher the price per acre.

If you do not raise stock, the good fence protects your crops and insures largest possible returns.

Thousands of investors are making fortunes by buying up so-called "run down" or "raw" farms, putting on a few buildings and good fences, then selling them for improved, up-to-date farms. Good fences, well built, pay bigger dividends than good barns or good houses.

You want bigger profits per acre—build good fire-proof, stock-proof, time-proof fences. Now is the time to do it. American Fence is the best fence, fully guaranteed, always satisfactory. It is cheaper per rod today than ever before. The manufacturers propose to double the use of American Fence during the next twelve months. We are here to help them. In helping them we help you by offering you American Fence, the BEST in the world, at heretofore unheard of prices. Come and see us, don't delay—this opportunity is too good to miss. You know a good thing, and you know when a good thing is cheap.

It is not always best to buy cheap things, but when CHEAP and GOOD, in fact, the BEST, and the article will pay dividends for years afterward, it is clearly safe and good business sense to buy it, and buy all you can use to advantage.

Come and see us—we know we can save you money now.

THE CONFERENCE

Closes After a Successful Session.

BISHOP I. W. JOYCE PREACHES

Business and Religious Meetings—Anniversary Observances—Undergraduates and Probationers Addressed—Appointments for Pastors for the Year Made Public at the Close.

Thursday night was held the semi-centennial of Methodism in Nebraska, Rev. T. C. Webster, a veteran of the conference, presided. Rev. E. Gombie Smith, D. D., pastor of First M. E. church of Omaha, made the principal address of the evening. He is a speaker of good ability, and paid a glowing tribute to the pioneer Methodist preachers of the state. He closed with an appeal to the people to more adequately care for these pioneers in their last days. Following this appeal, Rev. Wm. Gorst of Omaha, presented a plan which had been worked out at some length to create a perpetual annuity fund for the better support of the conference claimants. In all about $4800 was subscribed to this fund, including a number who had made subscriptions previous to coming to conference. At the conclusion of this feature of the program, Bishop Joyce gave some reminiscences of the early Methodist preacher. This was one of the most interesting sessions of the entire conference.

Friday morning, after the usual preliminaries, the undergraduates were called, and advanced to the studies of the next successive year. In connection with this occurred an incident which is of special interest in every annual conference, namely, the reception of the members who have been on two years' probation, into full membership in the conference. To this class the presiding bishop always makes an address, outlining the work of the minister and urging the faithful performance of that work. This conference was not an exception. At the hour when this was to be done the church was well filled with people eager to hear the address of Bishop Joyce to the class about to be admitted: J. N. Wingett, E. J. T. Connelly and J. B. Roe, members of the class, were brought forward and asked the regular disciplinary questions, after which the bishop made the address which was full of helpful suggestions, encouraging words and sparkling wit, and was richly enjoyed by all present.

J. W. Jennings, presiding elder of the Omaha district, made his report. This is the banner district of the conference and Dr. Jennings has proven himself capable of handling it. Some surprise was manifested that he should voluntarily resign his work at this time, but having an opportunity to enter a field of greater usefulness he felt it only justice to accept it. The Missionary anniversary of the church was held on Friday night. Rev. J. B. Trimble, field secretary of the society, was present and gave an inspiring address, after which Bishop Joyce told of some of his experiences, and observations while inspecting the missionary work in South America and the Orient. All were delighted with this service.

Saturday morning was devoted to routine business. In the afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. R. W. Wilcox preached the conference sermon, and at 8 the anniversary of the Women's Foreign Missionary society was held.

Saturday evening the anniversary of the Freedman's Aid and Southern Educational society was held. Rev. R. S. Lovingscott, president of Samuel Houston college of Austin, Texas, making the address. Mr. Lovingscott is a colored man and has had a most wonderful experience in trying to get an education and build up the college with which he is connected. He came up from the very lowest conditions of poverty and penury but is today an able, well educated and cultured gentleman.

Sunday was the banner day of the conference. The day from the standpoint of the weather was ideal. The services began at 9 o'clock with the time honored love feast in which bread and water are passed as an emblem of good feeling and brotherly love.

At 10:30 o'clock the morning preaching services were held, Bishop Joyce delivering the sermon. The church was crowded from pulpit to door. Chairs were placed in the aisles and on the platform and many people stood about the doors and walls. The bishop's sermon was intensely interesting and helpful to all.

In the afternoon a memorial service was conducted in memory of those connected with the conference who have died during the year. Following persons, deceased within the year, were reported worthy of such consideration: Mrs. W. G. Fowler, wife of the pastor at Humphrey; Miss Joyce Markley, daughter of Rev. A. J. Markley, of Tekamah; and Mrs. D. L. Olcott of Columbus, wife of one of the superannuated members of the conference.

Following this occurred the consecration of deacons and ordination of deacons and elders. J. B. Roe, E. J. T. Connelly and J. N. Wingett were ordained deacons, and W. A. Hornaday, C. H. Moore, S. A. Drais, F. M. Drulliner, E. W. Wilcox and A. E. Fowler were ordained elders.

Monday morning the business of the conference was resumed. Rev. J. B. Priest, retiring secretary of the conference, was presented with a purse of $24 as a token of appreciation of his services.

Rev. J. W. Jennings, retiring presiding elder of Omaha district who becomes the manager of the Kansas City depository of the Methodist Book concern, was presented with a gold watch by the preachers of the Omaha district. Reports of standing committees were received and adopted.

The place of holding the next session of the conference was left to the presiding elders with power to act.

The appointments for the different districts were made public at the close of the conference Monday afternoon, and those for this district, of which Dr. F. M. Sisson is the presiding elder, are as follows:

PARENTAL INTEREST.

How many parents visit the public schools to learn how their children are being taught? Not one in a hundred does it and yet their children are their most valuable possessions—the only ones of real, intrinsic value. For the reason that all parental interest and responsibility are considered ended when the grime is scrubbed off the children's hands and faces and they are headed for school, there are too many teachers in the public schools who possess no peculiar talent for the work, who lack in culture, discipline and the inspiration to worthy ends—teachers who should be engaged in the ancient and honorable service of knowledge and mechanics and thus filling long felt wants. The moral is that parents should show greater interest in the methods and manner of drilling an education into their offspring.—Fremont Tribune.

CRIME OF DRUNKEN INDIAN.

On Saturday night on the Omaha Indian reservation, Henry Guitar, an Omaha Indian, attacked his father Stephen Guitar, knocking him down and kicking him until his brains were beaten out. Henry Guitar had obtained at Omaha a bottle of whiskey, under the influence of which he committed the crime.

POWELL RETURNED.

FOR CONVEYANCE

Automobiles Take Place of Street Cars.

WOULD SUPPLY WAYNE'S NEEDS

The Town's Rapid Expansion Will Lead to Means of Travel in Time—Automobiles Cheaper Than Street Car Line—Driven at Moderate Speed, They Would be Safe and Horses Would Become Used to Them.

The rapid growth and expansion of this city leads to the reflection that it will not be long before some means of public conveyance will have to be provided in town. It is about a mile to the college, and in other directions the long distances to which the streets extend, show that street cars or some other method of getting about, aside from walking, will become desirable. At least we should think so, for the people had rather ride when they have a chance at a low cost, than to walk long distances, even though on the excellent cement walks which are provided. To walk, for instance, to the college and back every day and perhaps several times a day would become quite tedious in time.

Of course a regular street car line with the tracks and cars is an expensive undertaking. We notice that in some large towns, especially in the west, street cars are being superseded by automobiles. These are run at moderate speed by careful and experienced men, and under such circumstances are claimed to be as safe as any other mode of conveyance.

An automobile carefully and safely managed, certainly is a pleasant way of getting over the ground. Their cost is much less than the cost of street cars and with all track expense avoided.

Many are opposed to automobiles on the ground that they are liable to frighten horses. This is true in a measure for a short time. When a horse meets an automobile on the road for the first time, he is liable to imagine he sees before him a diabolical and hostile monster that may hurt or destroy him, and he naturally runs away if he can. But with a number of automobiles constantly plying along the streets, he soon becomes familiar with their appearance, and without fear will pay no more attention to them than he now does to a train of cars.

NEBRASKA CORN COMPARED.

O. J. Lund brought home with him last week some specimens of corn grown in Illinois. They have been compared with the Nebraska quality, and while they are very large they lack the weight of the latter. A Nebraska kernel from average corn was found to weigh 7 1/2 grains, and the best from the Illinois specimens 6 grains.

KILLED NEAR DECATUR.

Dave Monette who has made Pender his home for about twelve years, was shot and instantly killed while attempting to get into a covered wagon occupied by two women and a man near Decatur on Tuesday night of last week. The three campers surrendered to the authorities at Decatur the next morning. The man claims to have done the shooting, though a witness, who had accompanied Monette, thinks one of the women did it.

NEW TOWN IN PROSPECT.

Rumors are afloat to the effect that the Great Northern's Short Line is planning to start a new town between Randolph and Belden to central more of the grain shipments which now go to the former place and from there to market over the M. & O. line. The purchase of a 100-acre farm from Geo. Andrew is believed to be for the rumored new town. If a station is established it will probably amount to little more than an elevator and watering tank.

BLOOMFIELD BANK.

Fred Volpp was down from Bloomfield over Sunday. His many Wayne friends will be glad to know that he is getting along pleasantly and prosperously in his new location. He issued last week the first statement of the First National bank under his management, and the increase in business reflects credit on Mr. Volpp, as will be noted by the following extract from the comment of the Bloomfield Journal: "Mr. Volpp, the cashier, has been in charge but two months and every item in the statement shows a splendid gain, notwithstanding the fact these have been the two poorest months in the year. Mr. Volpp is deserving of a good business and we are glad to see him get it."

DELINQUENT SUBSCRIBERS.

Every newspaper has a long string of delinquent subscribers. Many of them merely neglect to pay. Others hug the delusion that they confer a sufficient favor on a newspaper by condescending to accept and read it. Still a small number of others intentionally contrive to skin a paper out of its pay and devote more effort to the attempt than would be required to earn the same money some other way. The Herald has several hundred delinquents on its list, and as we are now entering the season of plenty, good prices and prosperity, there is no excuse for failure to remit these small amounts promptly. The Herald will continue to improve and more than merit the low subscription price. Old subscribers and new ones should take advantage of the offer of the Lincoln Weekly Journal free with the Herald during the next two weeks.

- For Congress, Third District, JOHN J. MCCARTHY.

It is said that the ancient but rich democratic candidate for vice-president has contributed thus far only $50,000 toward the campaign fund.

Mayor Britton refuses to be sacrificed in the representative fight as the nominee of the amalgamated opposition. He is perfectly contented with his present official honors and emoluments.

The election of one republican congressman in Arkansas, a state which always has had from 20,000 to 30,000 democratic majority, encourages the hope that in Missouri the republicans may come out ahead, in part at least. A republican governor in that state is hoped for and is claimed by the St. Louis Globe Democrat to be not improbable.

B. F. Jones of Carroll, the republican nominee for commissioner, was visiting friends in Wayne Saturday. Wherever Mr. Jones is known, his good business judgment and sterling integrity are appreciated, and with several hundred republican majority in his favor, there is no earthly reason why he should not be elected. He has resided about fifteen years in different parts of Wayne county.

Congressman McCarthy has done considerable for Wayne county and will be able to accomplish a great deal more. He has been instrumental in establishing several new mail routes for the con-move to secure a government building for Wayne. He will use his best endeavors to nail the improvement during the coming session of congress, and with the start he has made in that direction, there is good prospect that his second attempt will prove successful. People appreciate his efforts and have added reason to give him their votes.

It might not be surprising if Wayne should in a few years be touched by another railroad. There was such a project a few years ago. The plan was to start from Ponca, where a railroad bridge would cross the Missouri and connect with a railroad in South Dakota. From Ponca the proposed road would go up the South creek valley, then cross the Logan and pass through this county southerly, and eventually arrive at Omaha or Lincoln. Wayne was to be on the line. As the country grows more populous, and the business largely increased, this project may arise again, and with a possibility of being made a success.

At the recent state election in Arkansas, it was expected it would result in an overwhelming victory for the democratic party. No republican dreamed of accomplishing anything except showing by their votes their good will and fealty to their own party. And yet, when they came to count the votes the result was found to be that J. W. Hough, one of the republican candidates for congress, was elected over R. E. Sessions, the democratic candidate, by thirteen majority. This is not a very big majority, and 13 is generally considered an unlucky number, but in this case it was lucky and quite appropriate to the occasion. This is the first republican victory in Arkansas in thirty-five years.

The Pierce Leader announces with some flourish that several democratic newspapers have challenged McCarthy to meet McKillop in joint debate, but that so far the former has failed to comply. The Leader doesn't seem to know that the two rivals for congress had a joint discussion recently at Emerson. As near as we can learn, the democratic nominee's most memorable declaration, successively maintained, at that time was to the effect that he had stood on the Kansas City platform, but now stands on the St. Louis platform. In other words, he used to consistently believe that 2 plus 2 were 7 and now believes that 2 plus 2 are 6. Improving, but correct in neither case. In lambasting the trusts, he stood on the republican platform and confided with the ethics of democracy's Wall street presidential candidate. The cry of the democratic papers, as mentioned by the Leader, should be again gratified and a debate between the two candidates pulled off at some convenient point, say, Wayne, in the near future.

DR. J. J. WILLIAMS.

Dr. J. J. Williams who was nominated for state senator by the republican convention in Norfolk, has been a resident of Wayne for fourteen years and during ten years of that time has been prominently identified with the republican party. He has been active in the development of this part of the state and has no enemies among his multitude of acquaintances. Besides his practice as a physician, he owns a farm and is devoting considerable attention to stockraising. It may be said with truth that the republican party in Wayne county is united in furthering his candidacy and it is believed he will win over any one the opposition can pit against him. He is recognized as a man of excellent character and one who will conscientiously look after the best interests of his district. In addition to considering the merits of the republican nominee, voters will bear in mind the importance of sending a man to the senate who will support Hon. E. J. Burkett for United States senator.

Can anyone explain why some people will suffer from rheumatism and colds when they can get Staley underwear at the 2 Johns and be well.

REPUBLICANISM IN THE EAST. Norfolk Daily News—The returns from Maine show a republican majority of 27,180, something more than a thousand less than the majority of McKinley over Bryan in 1900. The argument of the democratic reorganizers that the party would be stronger in the east under the new arrangement is borne out in part, but if there is not a large proportionate showing throughout the east there is not a grand prospect that Parker will sweep the east and win a great victory for Parker. With Parker showing but a thousand gain over the Bryan strength in Maine, and the losses in the west to offset the result, there can not be a large amount of gratification for the reorganizers in the northeast.

ANIMALS OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The western-most of the Philippine Islands is Palawan, a large island extending north and south some three hundred miles. To the south lies a group of small islands from some of which on a clear day, one can look over to the island of Borneo. All geological indications are that in a former, and not distant period, the Philippines at this point were connected with the great island of the southern Pacific. The natural supposition would be that animals of the same species would be found in the Philippines and Borneo. The reverse is, however, the case at the present day. Borneo is the home of gigantic animals and reptiles. Here are found the tiger, elephant, the largest of the monkey tribe, including the gorilla and other mammoth specimens of animal life. The Philippines on the other hand is the land of little men, little women, little horses and little animals in general.

There is a rumor that in the interior of Palawan, has been seen the foot track of some enormous beast, an unknown animal so far never seen by any human being unless the wild savages who inhabit the forests of the interior. The unknown, is always the region of the mysterious, and the mastodon of Palawan may be classed with the white tribe rumored once on a time to have been discovered in the equally wild and unexplored island of Mindoro.

The largest animal of the Philippines is the cariboo or water ox. This animal is not only the largest but by far the most important of Filipino animals. The cariboo should be represented on the coat of arms of the Republica Filipina, should such government ever take its place among the nations of the earth. It is and has been the most useful and valuable of Filipino animals. Its labor has been indispensable to the industries of the country. Whatever may be its future, whether supplanted by the American mule, or whether he continue the working factor of the country, he has earned honorable mention and his eminent services merit perpetuation. The cariboo has been to the Filipino, to a certain degree, what the bison was to the Indian of the plains, or what the reindeer is to the Laplander. His flesh provided the poor man with food, his labor cultivated his patch of ground, or as a beast of burden afforded him the means of making a livelihood in the commercial towns of the country.

The wild cariboo is the largest game animal of the Archipelago. It is smaller than the domesticated species, the latter being about the size of the ox of this country. I have been told by an intelligent native that the cariboo of the mountains is a different animal from the tame one of the lowlands. They are generally, however, regarded as domestic and wild varieties of the same animal. The wild cariboo is the most formidable animal of the Archipelago, in fact, the only dangerous one in Filipino forests, unless the wild hog be an exception. He is no mean antagonist, even to the hunter accustomed to the game of India or Borneo. When wounded or angry he is absolutely fearless and equally vindictive. The only resort for his intended victim is the nearest tree, which for the safety of the pursued should be at a convenient distance. The animal rushes in pursuit with the swiftness and fury of a demon.

Passenger transportation in the cities is generally by little two-wheeled carriages, drawn by little horses, the latter being not much larger than a good sized Shetland pony. The horses are used only for driving, the heavier work being done by the cariboo. The number of native ponies has been greatly reduced through a disease known as the surra, which has swept them away by the thousands. In some sections they are well nigh annihilated by this disease which at one time prevailed in India with, I understand, like results. The cariboo also suffered from a disease called the rinderpest, which proved equally fatal, destroying, not only the tame animal, but the cariboo of the woods as well as other wild animals, thousands of which perished during the prevalence of the pestilence.

The wild hog is one of the best and most plentiful game animals of the Archipelago. The tusks of the wild pig are much used as ornaments to walking sticks. They are of immense length and are anything but a graceful ornament, their chief value being their attraction as a trophy of the Filipino wilderness and as bearing evidence of the reality of the wild pig of the country, which judging from his tusks is an animal of gigantic proportions. The wild pig is much better eating than his domesticated kin, and very much safer eating, living as he does on roots and such cleanly food as he finds in the forests. The tame hog of the lowlands is an animal of so repulsive appearance that the American resident entertains a wholesome repugnance against eating pork unless it be bacon and ham from the commissary.

Over in Borneo, the monkey family is represented by perhaps the largest species on earth. In the Philippines there are plenty of them but of small size and no particular notoriety. They are a common pet, being very easily tamed, and found almost anywhere in the forest. The proximity of men does not seem to disturb them, nor does the native disturb the monkey farther than to take numerous captives which, owing to their mischievous habits, are kept in check by a string or chain about the body.

The music of the song bird is missed in the Philippines, there being few of them as well as birds of brilliant plumage as the bird of paradise of New Guinea and others found in different sections of the tropics. Wild ducks are very plentiful as are snipe of large size and excellent flavor. The ducks are generally small. I would say they are a species of teal, though the mallard is found and a large gray species weighing some four pounds, said to be superior as a table duck to the canvas back.

Every American visiting Manila should not fail to visit the Jesuit Museum, which contains a representation of the birds, beasts, fishes, reptiles, shells, birds, eggs, minerals and insects of the Archipelago. An inspection of this museum is in certain respects equivalent to a trip around the entire Archipelago. The collection is excellently arranged and classified by the fashers, and is being constantly added to, so that anything new of interest wherever discovered is on view.

The last time I was there specimens were being packed for the Buffalo Exposition. Conspicuous among the exhibits is an immense turtle, washed up in Manila Bay, a box of enormous length and an immense shark, the latter being from the haunt of enormous reptiles, the land of great expectations, the unexplored and unknown island of Mindanao.

CONFERENCE SURVIVORS.

A number of these barnyard songsters, not up to requirements in age, adipose and sleekness, survived the late conference, though they flattered and shuddered in terror as the drafts for recruits for the frying pan increased. A pall hung over obitoken yards Sunday, when the chief feast was spread, and these slim birds, though possessing little more than bones and squawks, feared that they might be eligible. Their joy and contentment after the suspense of terrible forebodings, can be easily imagined.

UNSAFE! UNSAFE!

Democratic Charge Against President Roosevelt That is Without Foundation.

THREE YEARS IN WHITE HOUSE

And at No Time Has Anything Been Done That Did Not Tend Toward Peace with All the World.

When the bitter personal attacks on Theodore Roosevelt are analyzed, and when a Democratic agitator is asked to define his opposition to the president, the inevitable reply is that "Roosevelt is an unsafe man."

Now, is he?

What makes an unsafe man? When is a man safe and when is he dangerous? How are we to judge a man—by what he has done or by what some one says he may do? Are we justified in calling a man unsafe who has all his life been emphatically safe? Is not a man entitled to the reputation he makes for himself?

For three years Theodore Roosevelt has had absolute power, as president of the United States, and yet during that three years, although called to the great office suddenly, as the result of a terrible murder, he has never lost his head. He has never done a dangerous thing, he has at no time involved the country in difficulties, either at home or abroad.

False Predictions.

Immediately following the murder of William McKinley predictions were freely made in the Democratic press that President Roosevelt would involve the country in war. Has he done so?

It was also freely predicted that he would break with the Republican majority in the house and the senate, and that he would insist on having his own way, disregarding the advice of the time honored leaders of the party. Has he done so?

Does not every one know, on the contrary, that the conditions of peace between the United States and the rest of the world were never more securely anchored than today? This has not been because the president has not had an opportunity to go to war. There have been half a dozen such opportunities at the very least since he became president, when, if he had been the unsafe man he was alleged to be, he might easily have involved us in war with one or more of the great powers of Europe. He has met every diplomatic emergency with such ready and dignified action, and with such a tact, which have won for the United States the respect of the civilized world.

Record in Diplomacy.

Look over the record of the state department under Theodore Roosevelt for the last three years, and see how much has been accomplished to uphold the dignity and the honor of the United States, without at any time causing the slightest apprehension of foreign war. It was during the present administration that a special commission was appointed to adjust the disputed boundary between Alaska and the Dominion of Canada. Some of the Canadian people and papers talked rather savagely. There was every opportunity for a mis-step on the part of the United States. A little too much bluster, a little too pronounced brag, failure in tact at the proper moment, a substitution of timidity for bravery, or of rashness for conservatism by Theodore Roosevelt would have fanned the feeling in Canada into a dangerous flame. The Alaska boundary was an inheritance from the McKinley administration, but it was safely settled under Roosevelt, settled to the credit of the United States, settled without the loss of an inch of American territory, and settled, too, without the destruction of the friendly feeling between Great Britain and the United States.

When Germany and England were at the throats of the little republic of Venezuela, an unsafe president might easily have involved us in war with those two countries, and a timid president might easily have brought upon the flag the shame of the rest of the world. Russia and Japan have been at war. The sentiment of the people in this country has been largely in favor of Japan. Yet John Hay, the wise and discreet secretary of state, appointed by McKinley and unhesitatingly retained by Roosevelt, has so successfully directed the course of American diplomacy that the United States today is as much the friend of Russia as it is of the little fighting-cock, Japan. The United States, in fact, has dictated the diplomatic conduct of hostilities between Russia and Japan. This country has dominated the situation, and yet at no time has there been the slightest danger that we might become embroiled with any foreign nation.

Safe Every Day in the Year.

These are the actual results of three years of the foreign policy of Theodore Roosevelt, the man who, when he entered the White House as the result of a murderous bullet, was by his political adversaries pictured to the other nations of the world as a braggart and swashbuckler. He has been safe, always safe, every day and every hour, since he has been president of the United States. He has never lowered the American flag to anybody, he has never been forced to apologize and he has conducted every episode of our foreign policy, with the advice of John Hay, in such a way as to preserve the honor of the American republic, and to gain the respect of the sovereigns of the world. There is not a king, nor an emperor, nor a president, nor a potentate from Peking to Timbuctoo who does not know today that Theodore Roosevelt is of the best American type, honest, frank, courageous, sensible, and always safe for those who treat him fairly.

Men of the Roosevelt type are unsafe only to the dishonest, to the disturbers of the peace of nations, to the crafters at home and the grabbers abroad, to the manipulators of markets and the wringers of nations. To the honest man, to the people of the home and the friends, to the good king and to the good subject, the Roosevelt type is the safest thing in all this world.

A THING WELL DONE

A Record That Recommends Roosevelt to the Voters.

The relations between capital and labor in the United States are the existent conditions which affect the welfare of many millions of people. The relations between any administration and the adjustment of these questions must necessarily be careful and most delicate.

What has happened in this relation under the administration of President Roosevelt? What happened and what made the ultimate result in the gigantic miners' strike in Pennsylvania? Who was it who devised, in a plain, common-sense, American way, a solution of the problem which affected the welfare of hundreds of thousands? Of course that is all, now, relatively, an old story. The man who did this with his common-sense was the present candidate of the Republican party for the presidency. He ventures upon things, and he does them well from a straightforward, patriotic point of view.

NOT AN UNKNOWN QUANTITY

The People Know Roosevelt and Admire and Respect Him.

President Roosevelt is not an unknown quantity to the American people. He is personally well known to a vast number of voters in every part of the country. In New York he is familiar to the people of that great city. Throughout his own state the same is true. In Boston he is as much at home as in New York, for Harvard is his alma mater. Throughout New England he is recognized as the representative and exponent of the ideals which have ruled the cradle of American liberty from the landing of the Pilgrim fathers.

And this native of the Empire State, this graduate from the famous New England university is even more fervently admired and beloved in the west—the far west—and middle west, than he is in the east. And this intensity of feeling for Roosevelt in the west is unswayed by sectional bias, as it is, but the national feeling of young, virile people. A people who recognize a man when they see him!

During the McKinley campaign of 1900 Roosevelt, as candidate for vice president, visited almost every western state and territory. He spoke to immense crowds, and won friends by thousands by his straightforward, self-controlled, dignified utterances, and his manly, generous personality.

Toward the end of the campaign the national committee was overwhelmed by requests for speeches by Roosevelt in all parts of the country. It was a physical impossibility for him to accept one-fourth of the engagements to speak that were urged upon him.

In Chicago, where, on his return from the west, he addressed a great crowd at the Coliseum, he was received with the utmost exhibition of enthusiasm. His speech was calm, forceful, logical and convincing, a contrast to the frantic efforts of ordinary speakers.

Contrary to the expectations of people who had derived their ideas from the comic supplements, and other pictorial and yellow press, Mr. Roosevelt's utterances were characterized by a steadfast adherence to the main question at issue in the campaign, and whatever he said bore the stamp of original thought, broad experience and study, and the most conscientious sense of responsibility. There was no ranting, no personal abuse, no wild statements or strange imputations, in any of Mr. Roosevelt's speeches, and there was no posing. He stood before this great audience dignified, collected and amply able to take care of himself—as an American gentleman. In language, in bearing, in all that he said and did, there was what made friends for him of all who came within the sound of his voice.

President Roosevelt has visited the Pacific coast since his assumption of the presidency, and there, as well as throughout his journey from back to the capital, the people rose to him with unmatched enthusiasm. He met and talked with hundreds of his fellow citizens, in every occupation, in every stage and state of society, from the cowboy to college president. He saw and spoke to and was cheered by thousands upon thousands of men, women and children. President Roosevelt is no stranger to the people of the United States. He knows them. They know him. And they understand each other.

A man who is weak enough to put his candidacy in their (Hill's) and Belmont's hands before the convention would not be strong enough to resist their influence after election, if he were by any possibility successful. — William J. Bryan.

First Voters' Clubs.

Roosevelt and Fairbanks first voters' clubs are being organized in every state in the Union. If you are first voter and intend to cast that vote for Roosevelt and Fairbanks this fall, you ought to join one of these clubs. For detailed information apply to the chairman of your state central committee.

Joseph Chamberlain, the great English statesman, in a recent speech to Englishmen declared that free trade was "a suicidal course if you proceed in the present policy your workmen must either take lower wages or lose their work." The Democratic party would have us take up the policy which England is getting ready to discard.

A low wage scale is not consistent with the most wholesome development of the country and of its people. The consideration of the pending measure, as Mr. Blaine said of the Chinese exclusion act, connects itself intimately and inseparably with the labor question.—Senator Fairbanks in the Senate, Jan. 11, 1898.

Farmers Ignored by Democrats.

The Democrats of Kansas, in making up their state ticket, have entirely ignored the farmer. The Republicans nominated one of the leading farmers of the state as railroad commissioner. Seven out of thirteen nominations, including governor, on the Democratic ticket are lawyers, while the Republicans only recognized the lawyers in the nomination of attorney general, judges of supreme court, and one member of the railroad commission. The policy of ignoring the farmer, which the Democratic national committee is reported to have announced, is carried out with a vengeance by the Democrats of Kansas.

THE LONG FISHERMAN

It is only one of the curiosities of an American national campaign, the result of which is foreordained, but it arouses more than a slight degree of interest.

Where is the Long Fisherman, the man who has been twice president of the United States? Where is he, and what is he going to do between the present time and the 8th of November?

What is he thinking about—this Lone Fisherman, and what are his inclinations? We are all interested in him as we should be interested in any ex-president of the United States, and being interested, we have also a curiosity. What about Cleveland? Is that portly and forceful old gentleman going to have anything to do with politics this year or is he simply intent upon the consideration of the subject of lines, bait and all that sort of thing?

The impression seems to prevail, and one apparently justified, that the safe of Princeton is not much interested in the sage of Boopis. The sage of Princeton has at least a certain caliber, and the two men do not fit.

Still, we all want to know what the Lone Fisherman is going to do.

We are not constrained to keep silent on any vital question, we are divided on no vital question; our policy is continuous, and is the same for all sections and localities. There is nothing experimental about the government we ask the people to continue in power, for our performance in the past, our proved governmental efficiency, is a guarantee as to our promises for the future.—President Roosevelt.

Why Change?

Why should there be a change in the national administration? What's the matter with Roosevelt? Has anything gone wrong? Has it been necessary to issue bonds to pay the running expenses of the government? Is there any money in the treasury? Has the soup house asserted its supremacy since the palmy days of Grover? Has Theodore Roosevelt betrayed any trust reposed in him, or has he manifested any symptoms of spinal affection? Has the so-called Democratic party advanced any assurance to the American people that they are any more prudent in the twentieth century than they were in the nineteenth? Can they satisfy the honest, industrious, producing citizens of America that they seek for anything but to again grasp the surplus and again empty the treasury, as they have on every previous opportunity?

Of Course Not.

David B. Hill stated, in one of his speeches, that Mr. Roosevelt, on taking the oath of office after the death of President McKinley, said that he would not be a candidate for president in 1904.

President Roosevelt has never made a promise as to his own personal action which he did not redeem. The president is outspoken, fair and square. He makes no promises he does not intend to keep, and he keeps such as he makes.

The silly story started by Hill had no foundation in fact, and it is really not worth the ink and paper that has been used in denying it, except that it once more marks the character of Hill.

The Democratic Argument This Year.

The Democratic argument this year should be printed in the human columns. It is, in brief: "You need not be afraid of us, for if we elect a president and the house, the Republican senate will keep us from doing any damage."

Democrats may abuse President Roosevelt personally and misrepresent the Republican party, but they dare not tell the truth about his official acts or the record of the party, and then condemn it.

Compare the ruin and disaster during the last Democratic administration with the prosperity everywhere seen today.

The contrast is an unanswerable argument in favor of Republican rule.

SLY OLD DAVID

Unique Position Now Occupied by Judge Parker's New Manager.

It is not often that a political leader finds it necessary to promise his party associates that he will keep out of office and be unrepresented in the councils of his friends in case of the success of his own nominee. This unique performance has been exemplified by the Mephistopheles of the Democratic party, David Bennett Hill.

The effect is rather grotesque. It is ## much as if the king of misery rightly were to declare that he would not, in any case, taste of the pie, after the four and twenty blackbirds had been caught, plucked and baked in a big dish of misery. The reception given to the promise of Mephistopheles to "be good after the first of next January," is rather comical. The more outspoken of the Democrats say plaudibly, "Pshaw! I don't believe it!" while the more secretive ones simply "wink the other eye" with a grimace that would make the fortune of the man that broke the bank at Monte Carlo.

It is sly old David, so it is!

Well he knows how to draw the ass's skin over his own; confident is he that no braying will hide from the faithful few his real nature, while the glibly many, he imagines, will joyfully count upon his sneaking retiring into private life as soon as he has seen his party triumphant in the fall elections.

It is a grotesque position, that of the Wolfert's Roost politician. To gain his ends he promises to keep out of all participation in the results he is working for. It must have been at some cost of self-respect that this sop was given to the more respectable wing of the New York Democracy, men who will not train with Hill, and who do not scruple to say so.

Run with those at whom the shot was aimed.

Hill's promise will avail nothing. They know the man. He has no friends, nor has he any enemies who believe in him, except in whatever he undertakes. It is quite probable that he will not be in politics before the first of January, 1905, but it will be not by his own volition, but because of the defeat of his party at the polls in the preceding November.

ROOSEVELT GOOD ENOUGH

The People Like the President's Democratic Ways.

The people have seen more of Roosevelt now as youth and cowboy and sportsman and naval secretary and police commissioner and soldier and governor and president to think themselves fair judges of his human democratic and republican personality. They believe he would spring at and grapple with a usurper or a monarchist as fiercely as he would lasso a wild broncho or fight a Spaulder. And they like his democratic ways, more democratic far in action than the aristocratic and exclusive Parker, with his colorless democratic platitudes.

Talk does not settle popular estimates of public men. Thousands—nay, hundreds of thousands—of Democrats see more real democracy in the vigorous, wide-awake Theodore Roosevelt than in the colorless, secretive Alton B. Parker. The platformers are mighty near together. They are all going to be a more decisive feature of this campaign than usual. And with my knowledge of the American people and the things which please their taste and fancy and all their ideals of what real American manhood is I would, if I were a betting man, stake all I had that Roosevelt will be an easy winner. John S. Wise of Virginia.

First Voters Read This.

Roosevelt and Fairbanks are both young men, as are a majority of the leaders of the Republican party if you believe in progress, if you want to see our country the richest and its people the most contented and prosperous on the face of the earth, if you believe in throwing open the doors of opportunity to young men, if you do not believe that smokestacks are a proper place for cobwebs and birds' nests, if you would rather hear the whir of revolving wheels than the murmur of discontent, if you believe in happiness instead of unhappiness, if you believe in frankness instead of secrecy, if you believe in deeds rather than promises, if you believe in reason rather than ignorance, then cast your first presidential vote for Roosevelt and Fairbanks.

Expansion a Blessing.

United States Consul General Guenther, at Frankfurt, Germany, quotes a noted professor as saying that expansion does not lessen a nation's inherent compactness and strength. On the contrary, a nation can only become great, he says, by having space in which to expand. Great Britain is cited as an example of what expansion has done for a nation that originally had little territory.

Steel Industry Does Not Lag.

A director of the United States Steel Corporation refutes one of the statements made by calamity-howling Democrats by saying that business is so good there, that the steel industry is now running at full capacity in a month or two, and by that time the demand for steel of all kinds will be greater than at any time during the past year.

The general prosperity of the country has enjoyed under Republican administration during the last seven years has profited the farmer as much if not more than any other one class. The farmers as much if not more than any one class know it, and should and undoubtedly will vote to continue conditions as they are and have been.

Liberal compensation for labor makes liberal customers for our products. The Republican policy of protection makes both.

Here is a veritable Roosevelt family: E. R. Conley, a farmer who lives at Westfield, Ill., has six sons, six grandsons and three sons-in-law. All, including Mr. Conley himself, will vote for Roosevelt in November.

The cry that President Roosevelt, if elected, will pick a quarrel and plunge the country in war is raised by the Democrats for the purpose of scaring the farmers, who are peace-loving. The effort will be in vain, as the farmer, as does every one else, knows that President Roosevelt, while urging that the country at all times be prepared to defend itself and maintain its policies, is for peace.

Carefully prepared statistics show that the number of business failures in 1892, the last year under President Harrison, was 10,344, while in 1898, the first year of his Democratic successor, they were 15,242. A party whose success always alarms capital and causes an increase in the number of business failures is not one for patriotic Americans to support.

COLLEGE NOTES.

On Monday morning chapel exercises were made interesting by the presence of Rev. Phillips of Laurel, and Rev. Drutiner of Hartington.

Thos. Nelson of the teachers class of 1902 visited the college last Thursday. He will continue the study of law, this year in the university at Lincoln.

Fred Pile leaves for his school year in the east on Saturday next. He will rank as a sophomore in Colby college and will specialize in mathematics.

Prof. Oden, principal at Wausa, came down to pay the college a visit last Thursday. He is a rising schoolman and is serving his second year at Wausa.

Among old students visiting the college between Friday and Monday we noticed Messrs. Littell, Richardson, Walter Barr, and Misses Anna Ellis, Mead, Eaton and Tripp.

The following new students have enrolled since our last report: Miss Harrison of Mapleton, Ia.; Miss Yaryan of Carroll; Mr. Sinclair of Hartington; Miss Lemmon of Thurston.

County Superintendent Richardson of Neligh, was in town last week in the interest of the International Encyclopedia, and incidentally paid his respects to the college folks.

We saw Blaine Besire of Laurel in town last Sunday. We also saw Miss Anna Kuper, who teaches near Wayne. Doubtless they were both here to attend the Methodist conference.

Two of the old college boys, now Methodist preachers, graced the chapel platform last Friday. Jessie Griffith conducted devotions and Ed King gave a characteristic talk. N. N. C. has reason to be proud of its clerical sons.

Miss Celia M. Chase, so affectionately remembered by all old N. N. C. students, after having spent the past two years in the University of Minnesota, is now meeting with increased success as a teacher in the schools of Chicago Heights, Ill.

Rev. Geo. Main, now of Central City, assisted by Rev. Carr of Grand Island, conducted the meeting of the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. Sunday afternoon, the former giving an excellent address on decision of character, drawing his lesson from the life of Moses.

Miss Kingsbury, former teacher of languages in the N. N. C., recently sent to the college library a copy of a German comedy, "Planchon's Erlacher," which she edited and which comes from the press of Ginn & Co. Miss Kingsbury is now in charge of the German department of Buchtel college, Akron, Ohio.

Prof. Ross Cunningham was taken suddenly ill last Thursday with hemorrhage of the stomach and has since been confined to his room. We are glad to say that he is recovering, though slowly, under skillful nursing, and we hope, to see him at his post again before long. Mrs. Surber has charge of his classes during his absence.

Claude R. Hadley, a well known alumnus of the N. N. C. for the present a "briefless barrister," recently went to Ellensburg, Wash., and upon his arrival learned of a vacancy in the public school, and went to interview the city superintendent. Happening to have a recommendation from Prof. Pile in his pocket, Mr. Hadley presented this and was immediately employed. The superintendent was a classmate of Prof. Pile in college.

Prof. Bronson of the Garrett Biblical institute, spoke to the students at chapel last Thursday and gave an uncommonly inspiring talk. "The art of education," said he, "consists in touching an inner spring as it were in the life of an individual, and when he is set to going he educates himself." As Prof. Bronson wears a rather small hat his father took him to the great phrenologist, O. S. Fowler, to have his head examined, and was told that he would never make anything but an auctioneer. Having since become not only a preacher, but a teacher of preachers, Prof. Bronson modestly believes that external appearances are by no means a certain index of a student's possibilities.

STALEY UNDERWEAR

This is our fifth season in Wayne with the Staley Underwear and our twenty-fifth year in selling this celebrated underwear. You might suppose that we have advertised this underwear sufficient that everyone would know about it, but as there are yet some men in Wayne county that are not wearing Staley Underwear we wish to remind them that it will be to their interest to look at this underwear before buying this fall. To those that have bought Staley Underwear we need only say that Staley Underwear has each year some improvement, and that we always have a full line in stock.

We have Staley underwear in every grade and can satisfy your taste. Considering the length of time it wears it is the cheapest underwear made. But some will say: "I can't wear wool." We will say right here that we have never found a man who can't wear Staley All Wool Underwear. Staley Underwear is not like any other, the wool is treated different and Staley uses a different kind of wool than other manufacturers. Wool doesn't hurt any one. It is the foreign matter that hurts people, and all foreign matter is taken out of the wool used in Staley Underwear. Some say: "All my wool underwear shrinks so I can't wear it." We give printed instructions with Staley Underwear, and if you obey instructions in washing Staley Underwear it will not shrink. It will cost you nothing to see Staley Underwear. We can fit anyone, no matter how large. We will be glad to explain to your entire satisfaction why Staley Underwear should be worn by all, and can satisfy you that you can wear it comfortably. Ask any one wearing Staley All Wool Underwear and they will recommend it. Ask any doctor if you ought to wear Staley Underwear and he will recommend it. Ask us to show you Staley All Wool Underwear and you will be pleased to buy it. Staley Underwear cures rheumatism.

ROBBER GETS AWAY

HIS QUICK WIT ENABLES HIM TO MAKE HIS ESCAPE.

Stole Twenty Thousand in Gold—The Money Was Taken from Him, but by a Daring Bluff He Boarded a Street Car and Got Away.

San Francisco: Just at the close of banking hours Saturday night a man in the lobby of the First National Bank, of this city, observing the cage door leading behind the counter ajar, pushed it aside, walked in, and helping himself to a bag containing $20,000 in gold coin, made a rapid exit.

He immediately slowed down his pace and walked into a side entrance of the Brooklyn Hotel which leads to the dining room closely followed by C. K. Mink, an employe of the bank, who had witnessed the theft.

Seeing he was pursued, the thief turned into the hotel office where he was overtaken and seized by Mink. When asked to turn over the money he said it was his own. The bag was taken from him, however, and its contents found to have been undisturbed.

The daring robber, who is about 35 years of age and well dressed, called on the people in the hotel office to see if they could not identify him. Accompanying him to the bank only a few feet away. He walked to the corner undisturbed, boarded a street car which was passing and soon was out of sight. He is now being searched for by the police.

The government detective found tracks of a peculiar kind. Back of one hind horse shoe impression there was a scraped spot in the soft mud. The posse made the same discovery in the dust of the road.

Todd and Dowd are said to be ex-convicts. Dowd, it is further said, was a forger, and has been out only two weeks. Todd is credited with being a safebreaker.

The government detective found tracks of a peculiar kind. Back of one hind horse shoe impression there was a scraped spot in the soft mud. The posse made the same discovery in the dust of the road.

IMPORTANT CUSTOM RULING

Decision Affects Wheat Growing and Cattle Industries.

New York: A customs decision of considerable importance to wheat growing and cattle raising interests has been made by the board of general appraisers.

It sustains the protest made by a Minneapolis dealer against the classification for duty as "wheat" at 25 cents a bushel of an article described in the invoice as "wheat screenings" and returned by the deputy collector at Minneapolis as "feed wheat."

The appraisers declare that the ordinary commercial meaning must be applied in interpreting the tariff law; that the grain under consideration is not fit to be made into flour or for human food and is incapable of germination, and its only use is as feed for cattle and fowl.

The claim that it is dutiable at only 10 per cent, as an unimproved unmanufactured article, was sustained.

STATE OF NEBRASKA

NEWS OF THE WEEK IN CONDENSED FORM.

Cowardly Murder at Sidney—Frank Wiser, Union Pacific Night Watchman, Done to Death by Tramps—Other Nebraska News.

Frank Wiser, the Union Pacific night watchman at Sidney, was murdered there Saturday night by some unidentified tramps. Wiser was to have brought the train and to keep guard over the large amount of storage coal which is constantly kept by the railroad company, also to see that there were no fires near the stock yards.

Saturday night a tramp came up to the named watchman that the Union Pacific watchman was having a fight down by the stock yards and was getting the worst of it. Pantenburg informed the night foreman of the shops, but he failed to inform the authorities until some time later.

Wiser failed to show up for the passenger train and a search was instituted, but owing to the darkness nothing could be found of him.

Sunday morning his dead body was found about 250 yards northeast of the stock yards. His entire left side had been crushed in and a large black and blue mark was on his forehead. It is believed that he had either been kicked or some heavy instrument used. There were only a few scratches about the face. All the tramps about the town were immediately arrested, but no positive clue has yet been discovered. Should the murderers be apprehended a racket party would be held.

Wiser was an odd-time cowboy in the employ of Keith & Burton and John Pratt, of Lincoln County. He was about 45 years old and leaves a wife and two children.

QUICK WORK ON MURDERERS.

Less Than Week Elapses Between Crime and Sentence.

District Judge Grimes arrived at Sidney Thursday evening and held a special September term of the district court for the purpose of accepting a plea of murder in the second degree for the Thomas McElroy, James Sullivan, alias Miles, and Walter W. Flynn, alias Harry Neville, the murderers of Theodore Wiser, the faithful night watchman of the Union Pacific Railway, who was killed last week.

County Attorney Mark Spangle read the information, after which the prisoners were asked how they pleaded. All responded "Guilty," and the understanding that the county would accept their plea of murder in the second degree. Judge Grimes then asked all the attorneys in the case if the plea would be agreeable to them, and they replied that they had carefully weighed the matter jointly and that it was for the best interests of the people the case be closed and the prisoners sentenced to the penitentiary.

Judge Grimes again admonished the prisoners about their plea and all replied as before and were willing to accept the judgment of the court. Judge Grimes then sentenced them separately to imprisonment for life.

The sentence now with universal approval and the county is spared a heavy expense and the law has been vindicated.

MAN IS KILLED NEAR DECATUR

Three People Under Arrest Pending Investigation.

A Decatur special says: Tuesday night David Monet, a quarter-blood Indian, was shot and killed two miles north of this place on the reservation. A party consisting of a man and two women passed through town and went into a camp north of the place. A number of men called at the camp, Monet being in the party. The men are supposed to have left and Monet returned. There was some trouble and he was shot. As soon as this was done the party hurriedly packed their goods and left.

Parties who heard the shot went to the place and found Monet's body. The party in the wagon was overtaken and brought to a halt, where the country was left to Monet. As far as the evidence has been taken it is conflicting, and it is impossible to tell whether the man or one of the women did the shooting.

To the officers the members of the party gave their names as Ella Brown, Martha Brown and Felix Brown. They are all white.

The evidence showed that Monet when he was shot was accompanied by a white man, James Merry; that they had been drinking and attempted to enter the wagon where the women were getting ready to go to sleep; the man ordered the women to get out of the wagon; the man was then fired. He said that he did the shooting. Merry says the shot came from the wagon and the women were the only ones in the wagon at the time.

The verdict of the jury was to the effect that David Monet came to his death by a gunshot wound from a gun held in the hands of one of the three people. All have been held to the district court.

The preliminary hearing of Tom McIntire, James J. How and Harry Neville, alias Tom Flynn, charged with the murder of Watchman Frank Wiser, was held before Judge Tucker Tuesday at Sidney. After the reading of the information by County Attorney Spangle all the defendants pleaded not guilty. They each in turn, however, took the witness stand and accused one another of the crime, alleging that they did not intend to kill Wiser. Their statements were conflicting.

They were bound over to the district court without a jury and the two witnesses for the state, Jenkins and Redding, were held under $2,000 bail for their appearances. It is currently reported that this trial will ask a speedy trial, plead guilty and accept a life sentence.

PROGRESS OF THE RUSSEK WAR

Mukden, the ancient royal city of the Manchus, is the focal point for the world-wide attention center in the Russo-Japanese war. In successive stages the field of operations swept across Manchuria. Liaoyang, recently was the stage for great events. The battle fought there, even though but fragmentary facts are known, conceded a place among the world's great military struggles. Kuropatkin, in a masterly retreat, forced upon him by the strategy of the enemy, covered forty miles of sodden roads, saving his army and artillery from total disaster and reached Mukden. Will he make a stand here, or will his weary army take up the march again to a position farther north? This is the question of the hour. A few miles north is Tio Pass, a position adapted by nature for defensive operations. This, say rumors, is in reality to be the scene of the next great battle. In fact, a desperate battle has already been reported here, but this is now denied.

Mukden, which in times of peace has at least 200,000 inhabitants, is situated in the center of an immense alluvial plain, about three miles from the Hunn, a tributary of the Liao river. It is about forty miles north of Port Arthur, forty-two miles north of Liaoyang, and 350 miles south of Harbin. General Kuropatkin discovered, early in March, that Harbin was too far north to serve as a military base for the campaign in Southern Manchuria, and he selected Mukden for his headquarters, because it is favorably situated on the railway and on the Pekin road.

The city of Mukden has an outer wall of mud, and a lofty quadrangular tower with three miles in circuit, built of brick, flanked by lofty towers and pierced by eight gates protected by lofty brick bastions. This wall, on which three batteries could drive almost, protects the commercial and official part of the city, and is densely crowded. Mukden, besides being the great grain emporium of Manchuria, is the center of the Chinese fur trade, and attracts buyers from all parts of the world. It is the ancient burial place of the rulers of China. About the city and about the tombs centers the veneration of China's millions.

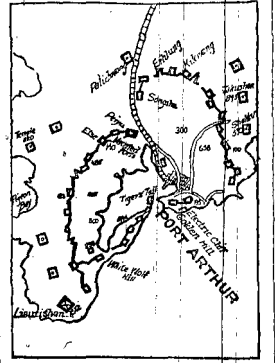

Aside from this, Kuropatkin may not only avoid battle at Mukden, but may be compelled to abandon all hope of further resistance until after the winter months. His army, repeatedly defeated, is badly demoralized, say rumors. His morale cannot but have been unshakably broken, the tactics of again facing the Russian dispersion of the Japanese might prove too severe a strain. Two months of autumn campaigning for fighting. Nevertheless, it is more than probable that the battle of Liaoyang marks the last important struggle of the present year. The rains now prevent operations. The plan of the Japanese will not develop until transportation becomes possible over the roads. A determined advance on the part of the enemy will in all probability be followed by a prompt northward movement on the part of Kuropatkin.

In that event, the winter will find this situation: The main Russian army will be centered at Harbin, with the rear guard at Tio Pass. The main Japanese army will be quartered in and about Liaoyang, with its advance guard at Mukden. Rumors have come scrap of information to indicate that the movement was not yet completed. Rumors even of pitched battles fought by the Russian rear guard are still coming. We may disregard as manifestly erroneous all stories from hysterical correspondents and army officers in Mukden of fighting close in to that city, and we can similarly disregard the report that Kuroki's and Oku's forces are respectively twenty-seven and twenty miles to the east and west of Mukden.

The other day there appeared three circumstantial accounts of the battle of Liaoyang, telegraphed in by correspondents who had been present. Two

COURSE WHICH THE RUSSIAN BALTIC FLEET WILL TAKE.

The course that the Russian Baltic fleet, which has started for the far East, will probably take is indicated in the map. The length of the journey is more than half the distance around the world for 12,270 nautical miles or 14,110 statute miles separate Port Arthur and Cronstadt by the shortest sea route. At an average steaming rate of ten knots, not including many stoppages for coaling, it would take fifty-one days for the fleet to get within sight of the beleaguered fortress. Between Gibraltar and Port Arthur there are at least twenty ports at which, in times of peace, the ships could coal, but the ports being in neutral hands this is forbidden in present circumstances. Any adverse weather will cause a great delay, for the larger ships must hold back for the small craft, of which there are many in the new fleet.

From Tokio of a winter campaign. Those familiar with the reports of the Manchurian writers doubt that such course could be seriously considered. Japan could well afford to grant a period of rest to an army which has accomplished fairly marvelous things in seven months of fighting.

All is speculation, however, and no definite word may be uttered until the armies again move and their plans actually develop. Meantime, ancient Mukden draws attention.

It is impossible to ascertain what has happened during the last week between Liaoyang and Mukden, except in the broadest outlines, and even as to these there is uncertainty. We know that Kuropatkin has been withdrawing his army northward, but how far he has taken it, we cannot tell. We know that Kuroki has been in touch with his rear guard to the east at least part of the time.

We have had it officially stated several times that the entire Russian army was in Mukden or north of there, and concurrently we have had

at his wife, and he saw that she was sad.

"Oh, I'm sure I shall draw a prize!" he said, with a faint, fading smile.

He took four half eagles from the box and put them in his pocket. His wife said nothing. She played with her baby to hide her sadness, for she did not wish to say more on the subject. She had seen that little pile of gold gradually accumulating, and both she and her husband had been happy in anticipating the day when the pretty cottage would be all their own. But when she saw those four pieces of gold taken away from the store, she felt a foreboding of evil. She might have spoken again against the movement, but she saw that her husband was surely tender on the subject, and she let the affair go into the hands of fate.

A week elapsed from the time that James bought his ticket to the drawing of the lottery, and during that time the young man had not a moment of real enjoyment. He was alternating between hope and fear, and therefore his mind was constantly on the stretch.

At length the day arrived. James went to the office and found that the drawing had taken place, and the list of prizes had been made out. He seized the list and turned away, so that those who stood around should not see his face. He read the list through and through, but he searched for his number in vain! It was not there. He had drawn a blank! He left the office an unhappy man. Those twenty dollars which he had lost had been the savings of two months of hard labor, and he felt their loss most keenly.

When he returned home that night he told his wife that he had lost. She found no fault with him. She only kissed him, and told him that the lesson was a good one, even though it had been dearly bought.

But James Lanning was not satisfied. He brooded over his loss with a bitter spirit, and at length the thought came to him that he might yet draw a prize. He wished that he had not bought the first ticket, and he thought that if he could only get back his twenty dollars he would buy no more; but he could not rest under his loss. He was determined to make one more trial, and he did so. This time he purchased a ticket without his wife's knowledge. The result was the same as before. He drew a blank!

"Forty dollars!" was a sentence that dwelt fearfully upon the mechanic's lips.

"Ah, I must draw a prize!" he said to himself. "I must make up what I have lost. Let me once do that, and I'll buy no more tickets."

Another twenty dollars was taken from the little bank, another ticket was bought, another blank was drawn. At the end of three months the little bank was empty, and James Lanning had the last ticket in his pocket. Ah, how earnestly he prayed that that last ticket might draw a prize! He had become pale and careworn, and his wife—poor, childless soul—thought he only repined because he had lost twenty dollars. When she would try and cheer him he would laugh, and try to make the matter light.

"James," said his wife to him one day—it was the day before that on which the lottery was to be drawn in which he held the sixth ticket—"My rowse has been here to-day after his semi-annual interest. I told him that you would see him to-morrow."

"Yes, I will," said James, in a faint voice. "Yes, to-morrow I shall see him."

Young Lanning thought of the lottery, and of the prize. This was his sixth trial, and he felt sure that he should draw.

The morning came, and when James Lanning returned to his home at night he was penniless! All his golden visions had faded away, and he was left in darkness and misery.

"James, have you paid Mr. Rowse his interest yet?" asked Hannah.

The young man leaned his head upon his hands and groaned aloud. "It's heaven's sake! James, what has happened?" cried the startled wife, springing to the side of her husband and twining her arm about his neck.

The young man looked up with a wild, haggard expression. His lips were bloodless, and his features were all stricken with a death-lie.

"What is it? Oh, what?" murmured the wife.

"Go look in our box—our little bank!" groaned the poor man.

Hannah hastened away, and when she returned she bore an empty box in her hand.

"Robbed!" she gasped, and she sank tremblingly down by her husband's side.

"Yes, Hannah," whispered the husband, "I have robbed you."

The stricken wife gazed upon her husband with a vacant look, for at first she did not comprehend; but she remembered his behavior for weeks back; she remembered how he had murmured in his sleep of lotteries and tickets, of blanks and prizes, and gradually the truth broke in upon her.

"I have done it all, Hannah," he grievedly whispered to the condemned man when he saw that his wife had guessed the truth. "All his gone for lottery tickets. The demon tempter lured me; he held up glittering gold in his hand, but he gave me none of it. Oh, do not chide me! You know not what I have suffered—what hours of agony I have passed—and you know how cold is my heart now. Oh, my wife, would to God I had listened to you!"

"Ah," calmly whispered the faithful wife, as she drew her hand across her husband's heated brow. "Mourn not for what is lost, I will not chide you. It is hard thus for you to lose your scanty earnings, but there might be many calamities worse than that. Courage, James; we will soon forget it."

"And Mr. Rowse will foreclose the mortgage. You will be homeless," murmured young Lanning in broken accents.

"No; I will see that all is safe in that quarter," added Hannah.

At that moment the baby awoke, and the gentle mother was called to care for it. On the next day, at noon, Hannah Lanning gave her husband a receipt for fifteen dollars from Mr. Rowse.

"Here," said she, "interest is paid

THE LOTTERY TICKET.

JAMES LANNING was a mechanic, a young, honest man, whose highest ambition was to gain a comfortable home for himself and wife. He had built himself a house, and there still remained upon it a mortgage of five hundred dollars; but this sum he hoped to pay in a few years if he only had his health. He had calculated exactly how long it would take him to clear off this incumbrance, and he went to work with his eyes open.

One evening James came home to his supper more thoughtful than usual. His young wife noticed his manner, and she inquired its cause.

"What is it, James?" she kindly asked. "Why, I never saw you look so sober before."

"Well, I'll tell you, Hannah," returned the young man, with a slight hesitation in his manner. "I have just been thinking that I would buy a lottery ticket."

Hannah Lanning did not answer immediately. She looked down and smoothed the silken hair of her babe, which was chirping like a robin in her arms, and the shades of her handsome features showed that she was taking time to think.

"How much will it cost?" she asked, at length, looking half timidly up into her husband's face.

"Twenty dollars," returned James, trying to assume a confidence which he did not feel.

"Add have you made up your mind to buy it?"

"Well, I think I shall. What do you think about it?"

"If you should ask my advice, I should say not to buy it."

"But why so?"

"For many reasons," returned his wife, in a trembling tone. "She would not offend her husband, and she shrank from giving him advice which he might not follow.

"In the first place," she said, "I think the whole science of lotteries is a bad one; and then you have no money to risk."

"But just look at the prizes," said James, drawing a "scheme" from his pocket. "Here is one prize of twenty thousand dollars, another of ten thousand, another five thousand, and so on. Something tells me that if I buy a ticket I shall draw a large prize. And then just think, Hannah, how easily I could pay all up for my house, and perhaps have a good handsome sum left."

"The young man spoke with much earnestness and assurance; but he saw that there was a cloud upon his wife's brow.

"It seems to me that the chance of drawing a prize is very doubtful," said Hannah, as she took the scheme. "Here are many thousand tickets to be sold."

The babe tried hard to snatch the paper, and Hannah hid it aside.

"I think I shall run the risk," resumed James, glancing once more over the paper, and resting with a nervous longing upon the figures which represented the higher prizes. "There's Barney; he drew about eight hundred dollars a year ago."

"Yes, I know it," said Hannah, with more warmth than she had before manifested, "and what has become of the money? You know he has squandered it all away. Ah, James, money is of no use unless we come honestly by it."

"Honestly!" repeated the young man. "Surely, there is nothing dishonest in drawing a prize in a lottery."

"I think there is," kindly but emphatically replied the wife. "All games of hazard, where money is at stake, are dishonest. Were you to draw a prize of twenty thousand dollars, you would rob a thousand men of twenty dollars each; or, at least, you would take from them money for which you returned them no equivalent. Is it not gambling in every sense of the word?"

"Oh, no! You look upon the matter in too strong a light."

"Perhaps I do; but yet so it looks to me. What you may draw, some one else must lose; and perhaps it may be some one who can afford the loss no better than you can. I wouldn't buy the ticket, James. Let us live on the products of our honest gains, and we shall be happier."

James Lanning was uneasy. He had no answer for his wife's arguments; at least, no answer that could spring from his moral convictions, and he let the matter drop. But the young man could not drive the siren from his head. All the next day his head was full of "prizes," and while he was at his work he kept muttering to himself, "Twenty thousand dollars," "Ten thousand dollars," "Five thousand dollars," and so on.

When he went home the next night he was almost unhappy with the nervous anxiety into which he had thrown himself. The tempter had grasped him firmly, and whenever he thought of the lottery he saw nothing but piles of gold and silver. In short, James Lanning had made up his mind that he would buy the ticket. He went to the little box where he had already one hundred and twenty dollars laid up toward paying off the mortgage on his house. The lock clicked with a startling sound, and when he threw open the door he beheld, he looked assault of anything like even numbers of even the bravest of troops.

In the opinion of the Chicago Tribune, if the Japs had tried to take Liaoyang exclusively by direct assault they would have failed. But the flanking movement of Kuroki, who threatened to get behind the Russians, compelled them to evacuate the town. The critics who have eyes only for Oku's army, and see it battered and bruised in its direct assault, must not forget that Kuroki could not attempt his flanking movement from the east unless Oku should press the south in sufficient numbers to keep a large number of Russians employed there, and so prevent them from being sent to interfere with Kuroki's flank march. But the Japanese did not surround and capture the Russian army. That is a thing not often done.

Kuroki, marching from his bridges across the Taitze, had twice as far to go to reach the railroad above Liaoyang as Kourapatkin, who was in Liaoyang and on the railroad. In addition, Kourapatkin has steam to increase his mobility, while Kuroki must plow his men and transports over wretched, muddy footpaths. Small forces in good positions could delay Kuroki; there were no forces on the railroad to check Kourapatkin.

There is no disposition to question the cool-headedness of the Russian general. He acquitted himself splendidly and conducted his retreat most cleverly. But it were foolish, on the other hand, to accuse Oyama of incompetence for failing to surround his foe. Such a task under the conditions was preposterously difficult. If he had achieved it would have done something almost miraculous. In that he failed to achieve it, he is not to be blamed.

In every war of history a victory such as Oyama won has been called "sweeping." He forced the Russians out of a strongly fortified place, chased them to Mukden, forty miles northward, and it is reported that they are all going, and propose to make for Tieling, forty miles north of Mukden. This retreat is directly away from Port Arthur.

The Port Arthur situation remains obscure. There has been some heavy fighting. The Japs gained a few advantages, though probably at a heavy cost. The Russians are now forced to distribute water because the Japanese have cut off the last remaining fresh water spring of the Russians, which was at Fort Etse. Etse and the adjoining forts are not occupied by either side, since these positions are dominated by batteries of both sides.

The favorite attacks of the Japanese are along the railroad and from the east bank. They have not demonstrated for some time against Liautshian, the 1,512-foot fort which dominates all the whole region. Undoubtedly the battle of Liaoyang will be a valuable moral asset to Nogri's forces, and of heavy moral liability to Stoessek's.

War News in Brief.

Russian officials state that the loss to Kuropatkin's army at Liaoyang was less than 15,000 men, 4,500 being killed.

The Japanese are said to be leaving camps in Manchuria and to have taken control of finances and customs in captured territory.

Much bushwhacking is going on upon the road south of Mukden, and many Russian soldiers have been killed from the hands of Chinese corn.

Oyama reports that a large Russian force faces him south of Mukden and that the Russians are fortifying both banks of the Liao river at Tio Pass.

The Japanese have turned their attention to Port Arthur in the fall in the months of good weather, and the Russians await news of another assault. Shell are raised on the town and the Mikado's army is retreating the adjacent heights.

The Russian cruiser Lena, which took refuge in the harbor at San Francisco, is ordered by President Roosevelt to remain until the end of the present war. The commander of the Lena has signified his willingness to meet the demands.

Information coming from an authoritative source in St. Petersburg is that the Russians will winter at Harbin, but the fact that there probably will be two months of good weather for military operations before extreme cold weather sets in leaves room for a revision of this purpose in the light of events that may transpire.

THE LIVING LANDMARK.

Of our swift passage through this scenery of life and death, more durable than we. What landmark so congenial as a tree, repeating its green legend every spring. Type of our brief but still-renewed mortality.

Men's monuments, grown old, forget their names.

They should eternalize, but the place where shining souls have passed imbibes a grace.

Beyond mere earth, some sweetness of their names.

Leaves in the soil its unextinguished trace.

That penetrates our lives and brightens them or shames.

—James Russell Lowell.

THE LOTTERY TICKET.

JAMES LANNING was a mechanic, a young, honest man, whose highest ambition was to gain a comfortable home for himself and wife. He had built himself a house, and there still remained upon it a mortgage of five hundred dollars; but this sum he hoped to pay in a few years if he only had his health. He had calculated exactly how long it would take him to clear off this incumbrance, and he went to work with his eyes open.

One evening James came home to his supper more thoughtful than usual. His young wife noticed his manner, and she inquired its cause.

"What is it, James?" she kindly asked. "Why, I never saw you look so sober before."

"Well, I'll tell you, Hannah," returned the young man, with a slight hesitation in his manner. "I have just been thinking that I would buy a lottery ticket."

Hannah Lanning did not answer immediately. She looked down and smoothed the silken hair of her babe, which was chirping like a robin in her arms, and the shades of her handsome features showed that she was taking time to think.

"How much will it cost?" she asked, at length, looking half timidly up into her husband's face.

"Twenty dollars," returned James, trying to assume a confidence which he did not feel.

"Add have you made up your mind to buy it?"

"Well, I think I shall. What do you think about it?"

"If you should ask my advice, I should say not to buy it."

"But why so?"

"For many reasons," returned his wife, in a trembling tone. "She would not offend her husband, and she shrank from giving him advice which he might not follow.

"In the first place," she said, "I think the whole science of lotteries is a bad one; and then you have no money to risk."

"But just look at the prizes," said James, drawing a "scheme" from his pocket. "Here is one prize of twenty thousand dollars, another of ten thousand, another five thousand, and so on. Something tells me that if I buy a ticket I shall draw a large prize. And then just think, Hannah, how easily I could pay all up for my house, and perhaps have a good handsome sum left."

"The young man spoke with much earnestness and assurance; but he saw that there was a cloud upon his wife's brow.

"It seems to me that the chance of drawing a prize is very doubtful," said Hannah, as she took the scheme. "Here are many thousand tickets to be sold."

The babe tried hard to snatch the paper, and Hannah hid it aside.

"I think I shall run the risk," resumed James, glancing once more over the paper, and resting with a nervous longing upon the figures which represented the higher prizes. "There's Barney; he drew about eight hundred dollars a year ago."

"Yes, I know it," said Hannah, with more warmth than she had before manifested, "and what has become of the money? You know he has squandered it all away. Ah, James, money is of no use unless we come honestly by it."

"Honestly!" repeated the young man. "Surely, there is nothing dishonest in drawing a prize in a lottery."

"I think there is," kindly but emphatically replied the wife. "All games of hazard, where money is at stake, are dishonest. Were you to draw a prize of twenty thousand dollars, you would rob a thousand men of twenty dollars each; or, at least, you would take from them money for which you returned them no equivalent. Is it not gambling in every sense of the word?"

"Oh, no! You look upon the matter in too strong a light."

"Perhaps I do; but yet so it looks to me. What you may draw, some one else must lose; and perhaps it may be some one who can afford the loss no better than you can. I wouldn't buy the ticket, James. Let us live on the products of our honest gains, and we shall be happier."

James Lanning was uneasy. He had no answer for his wife's arguments; at least, no answer that could spring from his moral convictions, and he let the matter drop. But the young man could not drive the siren from his head. All the next day his head was full of "prizes," and while he was at his work he kept muttering to himself, "Twenty thousand dollars," "Ten thousand dollars," "Five thousand dollars," and so on.

When he went home the next night he was almost unhappy with the nervous anxiety into which he had thrown himself. The tempter had grasped him firmly, and whenever he thought of the lottery he saw nothing but piles of gold and silver. In short, James Lanning had made up his mind that he would buy the ticket. He went to the little box where he had already one hundred and twenty dollars laid up toward paying off the mortgage on his house. The lock clicked with a startling sound, and when he threw open the door he beheld, he looked at his wife, and he saw that she was sad.

"Oh, I'm sure I shall draw a prize!" he said, with a faint, fading smile.

He took four half eagles from the box and put them in his pocket. His wife said nothing. She played with her baby to hide her sadness, for she did not wish to say more on the subject. She had seen that little pile of gold gradually accumulating, and both she and her husband had been happy in anticipating the day when the pretty cottage would be all their own. But when she saw those four pieces of gold taken away from the store, she felt a foreboding of evil. She might have spoken again against the movement, but she saw that her husband was surely tender on the subject, and she let the affair go into the hands of fate.

A week elapsed from the time that James bought his ticket to the drawing of the lottery, and during that time the young man had not a moment of real enjoyment. He was alternating between hope and fear, and therefore his mind was constantly on the stretch.

At length the day arrived. James went to the office and found that the drawing had taken place, and the list of prizes had been made out. He seized the list and turned away, so that those who stood around should not see his face. He read the list through and through, but he searched for his number in vain! It was not there. He had drawn a blank! He left the office an unhappy man. Those twenty dollars which he had lost had been the savings of two months of hard labor, and he felt their loss most keenly.

When he returned home that night he told his wife that he had lost. She found no fault with him. She only kissed him, and told him that the lesson was a good one, even though it had been dearly bought.

But James Lanning was not satisfied. He brooded over his loss with a bitter spirit, and at length the thought came to him that he might yet draw a prize. He wished that he had not bought the first ticket, and he thought that if he could only get back his twenty dollars he would buy no more; but he could not rest under his loss. He was determined to make one more trial, and he did so. This time he purchased a ticket without his wife's knowledge. The result was the same as before. He drew a blank!

"Forty dollars!" was a sentence that dwelt fearfully upon the mechanic's lips.

"Ah, I must draw a prize!" he said to himself. "I must make up what I have lost. Let me once do that, and I'll buy no more tickets."

Another twenty dollars was taken from the little bank, another ticket was bought, another blank was drawn. At the end of three months the little bank was empty, and James Lanning had the last ticket in his pocket. Ah, how earnestly he prayed that that last ticket might draw a prize! He had become pale and careworn, and his wife—poor, childless soul—thought he only repined because he had lost twenty dollars. When she would try and cheer him he would laugh, and try to make the matter light.

"James," said his wife to him one day—it was the day before that on which the lottery was to be drawn in which he held the sixth ticket—"My rowse has been here to-day after his semi-annual interest. I told him that you would see him to-morrow."

"Yes, I will," said James, in a faint voice. "Yes, to-morrow I shall see him."

Young Lanning thought of the lottery, and of the prize. This was his sixth trial, and he felt sure that he should draw.

The morning came, and when James Lanning returned to his home at night he was penniless! All his golden visions had faded away, and he was left in darkness and misery.

"James, have you paid Mr. Rowse his interest yet?" asked Hannah.

The young man leaned his head upon his hands and groaned aloud. "It's heaven's sake! James, what has happened?" cried the startled wife, springing to the side of her husband and twining her arm about his neck.

The young man looked up with a wild, haggard expression. His lips were bloodless, and his features were all stricken with a death-lie.

"What is it? Oh, what?" murmured the wife.

"Go look in our box—our little bank!" groaned the poor man.

Hannah hastened away, and when she returned she bore an empty box in her hand.

"Robbed!" she gasped, and she sank tremblingly down by her husband's side.

"Yes, Hannah," whispered the husband, "I have robbed you."

The stricken wife gazed upon her husband with a vacant look, for at first she did not comprehend; but she remembered his behavior for weeks back; she remembered how he had murmured in his sleep of lotteries and tickets, of blanks and prizes, and gradually the truth broke in upon her.

"I have done it all, Hannah," he grievedly whispered to the condemned man when he saw that his wife had guessed the truth. "All his gone for lottery tickets. The demon tempter lured me; he held up glittering gold in his hand, but he gave me none of it. Oh, do not chide me! You know not what I have suffered—what hours of agony I have passed—and you know how cold is my heart now. Oh, my wife, would to God I had listened to you!"

"Ah," calmly whispered the faithful wife, as she drew her hand across her husband's heated brow. "Mourn not for what is lost, I will not chide you. It is hard thus for you to lose your scanty earnings, but there might be many calamities worse than that. Courage, James; we will soon forget it."

"And Mr. Rowse will foreclose the mortgage. You will be homeless," murmured young Lanning in broken accents.

"No; I will see that all is safe in that quarter," added Hannah.

At that moment the baby awoke, and the gentle mother was called to care for it. On the next day, at noon, Hannah Lanning gave her husband a receipt for fifteen dollars from Mr. Rowse.

"Here," said she, "interest is paid

"Here," said she, "interest is paid

Now let us forget all that has passed, and commence again."

"But how—what has paid this?" asked James, gazing first upon the receipt, and then upon his wife.

"Never mind."

"Ah, but I must mind. Tell me, Hannah."

"Well, I have sold my gold watch."

"Sold it?"

"But I can buy it back again. The man will not part with it, if I want it. But I don't want it, James. All we are able. Perhaps I shall never want it. You must not chide me, for never did I derive one iota of the pleasure from its possession that I now feel in the result of its disposal."

James Lanning clasped his wife to his bosom, and he murmured a prayer, and in that prayer there was a promise.

Two years passed away, and during that time James Lanning lost not a single day from his work. He was as punctual as the sun, and the result was as sure.

It was late on Saturday evening when he came home. After supper he drew a paper from his pocket, and laid it upon the table.

"There, Hannah," said he, while a noble pride beamed by every feature, "there is my mortgage. I've paid it—every cent. This house is ours; it is our own house. I've bought it with dollars, every one of which has been honestly earned by the sweat of my brow. I am happy now."

Hannah Lanning said that her husband had opened his arms, and she sat down upon his knee and laid her head upon his shoulder.

"Oh, blessed moment!" she murmured.

"Yes, it is a blessed moment," responded her husband. "Do you remember, Hannah, the hour of bitterness that we saw two years ago?"

The wife shuddered, but made no reply.

"Ah," continued the young man, "I have never forgotten that bitter lesson; and even now I tremble when I think how fatally I was deceived by the tempter that has lured so many thousands to destruction."

"But its horror is lost in this happy moment," said Hannah, looking up with a smile.

"Its terror may be lost," resumed James, "but its lesson must never be forgotten. Ah, the luring lottery ticket has a dark side—a side which few see until they feel it."

"And are not all its sides dark?" softly asked the wife. "If there is any brightness about it, it is only the glare of the fatal ignis fatuus which can only lead the wayward traveler into danger and disaster."

"You are right, my dear wife. You were right at first. Ah," he continued, as he drew the faithful being more closely to his bosom, "if I had bands would often give the tender dictates of the loving wife, there would be far less misery in the world than there is now."—Waverley Magazine.

A DINNER WITH TOLSTOY.

Serious Affairs Hatched and Merriment Marked the Feast.

Edward A. Steiner describes a visit to Tolstoy in the Woman's Home Companion. He says:

"Countess Tolstoy, as every one knows does not agree with her husband in all his theories; but she agrees with the world which worships him, and I believe that she is very proud of him, and very devoted, although her devotion has been severely taxed in various ways. She has copied yards of uncreedable manuscript while babies of various sizes were pulling at her skirts; she has translated books into three or four languages, and has transformed all sorts of garments to meet the needs of the changing sixteen, her children. For many, many years she has never been cheerful and happy; and it is possible that there can be a greater test of a wife's goodness or a woman's greatness?"

"As I have said, the Countess received me cordially, although I may have been the straw which threatened to break the camel's back, inasmuch as the house already contained a dozen strangers, and it looked as if Mrs. Tolstoy was keeping a boarding house. At nine o'clock dinner was served, and I was led into the family dining room, which is a large apartment where signs of luxury are not wanting. There are ancestral portraits upon the walls; a piano stands open, and books well used; there is a table covered by books and magazines, and then in the center the large dining table, around which gathers a host of people of strange faces and forms, with unpronounceable names, and some with undiscovered histories. The Countess sat at the head of the table. To the left sat the Count, and before him a kettle containing his favorite kasha—the coarsest kind of peasant's food. He helped himself from this freely, and somewhat carelessly, as a man might who eats kasha three hundred and sixty-five times in the year. I sat next to the Count.

Two servants waited on the table. The meat was of the Hamburg-stenk variety. The Count never eats meat; kasha and two eggs constituted his dinner. It must be over twenty years since he has eaten meat, and probably longer than that since he has tasted liquor or smoked tobacco.

"There was much animated conversation, jolly laughter and good-natured joking, and the serious seemed to be banished, for we ate, drank and were merry, and I forget that I was sitting close to a man with whom I had tried to settle the affairs of the universe just a short hour ago."

What He Took Comfort In.

The ark had just landed.

"There is no comfort, anyway," remarked Noah, "there isn't any old salt left to tell me he was in a worse storm thirty years ago."

With a thankful sigh he proceeded to unship his cargo.—New York Tribune.

OLD FAVORITES.

Lasca.

It's all very well to write reviews, and carry umbrellas, and keep dry shoes, and say what every one's saying here, and wear what every one else must wear; but to-night I'm sick of the whole affair, I want free air and I want fresh air, and I sigh for the center after the cattle. The crack of the whips like shots in a battle. The melody of horns and hoofs and heads that wars and wrangles and scatters and spreads. The green beneath, and the blue above; and dash and danger, and life and love, and Lasca!

Lasca used to ride on a mouse-gray Mustang close to my side. With blue scraps and bright-belled spur; I laughed with joy as I looked at her! Little know she of books or of creeds—An Ave Maria sufficed her needs; She was as wild as the breeze that blew, From San Saba's shore to Lavaca's tide. She was as bold as the willow that beat, She was as wild as the willow that blew, From her little head to her little feet.

She was swayed in her suppleness to a fro. By each gust of passion; a sapling pine, That grows on the edge of a Kansas bluff.

And wars with the wind when the weather is rough. Is like this Lasca, this love of mine. She was alive in every limb With a feeling, to the finger-tips; And when the sun is like a fire, And sky one shining soft sapphire, One does not drink in little sips.

Why did I leave the fresh and the free, That suited her and suited me? Listen awhile, and you will see; But this be sure—in earth or air, God and God

The next examination will be held on Friday and Saturday, November 4 and 5, 1904. No examination in September and October. C. H. BIRCH, County Superintendent.

Any man interested in the breeding of high class animals of any kind is aware that breeding condition and beef condition of breeding animals are quite different and that in order to obtain satisfactory results a high beef condition must of necessity be avoided in animals intended for breeding purposes. The Shorthorn cattle to be sold at Wayne next Tuesday have never been fitted for show as beef animals, but are and have always been kept in good condition as breeders and as such will be fully guaranteed.

THE STOMACH IS THE MAN.

A weak stomach weakens the man, because it cannot transform the food he eats into nourishment. Health and strength cannot be restored to a sick man or weak woman without first restoring health and strength to the stomach. A weak stomach cannot digest enough food to feed the tissues and revive the tired and run down limbs and organs of the body. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure dissolves what you eat, cleans and strengthens the glands and membranes of the stomach, and cures indigestion, dyspepsia and all stomach troubles. Sold by Raymond's Pharmacy.

FROM 148 TO 92 POUNDS.

One of the most remarkable cases of a cold, deep-seated on the lungs, causing pneumonia, is that of Mrs. Gertrude E. Frazier, Marion, Ind., who was entirely cured by the use of One Minute Cough Cure. She says: "The coughing and straining so weakened me that I ran down in weight from 148 to 92 pounds. My stomach was so weak that I could not eat. I was unable to get any sleep until I used One Minute Cough Cure. Four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me entirely of the cough, strengthened my lungs and restored me to my normal weight, health and strength." Sold by Raymond's Pharmacy.

Among its Improvements are:

A metal-covered hub, which will not check or split. A combination wood and steel axle, the wood and steel going the whole length of the axle. This axle will stand twice the strain of an ordinary hickory axle. Also a bolster-stake made from heavy sheet steel.

The popularity of the MacKinnon Wagon rests not only on the above improvements, but every piece of lumber used in its construction is carefully selected from the best Wisconsin timber. The parts are fitted and put together by skilled workmen, and nothing is left undone, even in the smallest detail, to make it a perfect wagon in every particular. We manufacture our own wood stock, from the log to the wagon, and as we have been twenty-five years engaged in the manufacture of wagon material, we have gained an experience in the selection of wagon wood second to none. Our factory is supplied with the most complete and latest machinery. We have at all times a large stock of lumber carefully selected and well seasoned.

Respectfully,
THE F. MACKINNON MFG. CO.
