Loss by Fire

Sparks from the engine of a corn shelter set fire to a large quantity of hay and straw in the farm yard of Wm. Fleckleben eight miles southeast of town Monday afternoon. The hay was stacked in the yard near the barn. By the aid of the telephone neighbors were summoned and over twenty promptly responded and in heroic efforts on their part do save the buildings from going up in flames. RUIN FOR PLANTERS

NIGHT RIDERS' WAR CAUSES EXODUS FROM KENTUCKY

Recent Raids and Murders Increase Alarm, and Conditions Said to Be Worse Than at Any Time Since Beginning of Teakoo War.

Because of warning letters and visits from night riders many farmers in nearly all of the forty-two counties in the White Burley tobacco district of Kentucky are busily destroying their tobacco beds, and at the present time less than one-third of the number usually planted have been started. In many counties huge signs have been erected on buildings and in high places nearly declaring the intention of the farmer not to raise a crop this season.

Rentalizing the difficulty of making a living for their families in case the decision to raise no tobacco is adhered to, many tenant farmers are preparing to move to other states, while many farm owners have placed their property on the market with the avowed purpose of leaving Kentucky. The murder of Farmer Hedges in Nicholas county Saturday and the raids in Woodford and other counties last week have increased the alarm.

In announcing their determination to go elsewhere the tenants declare that it will be impossible to submit from the proceeds of crops of hemp, wheat and corn.

In the neighborhood of Mt. Sterling many farmers have received threatening letters with which were bombs, powder and poison and in both farm districts and tobacco towns armed guards have been placed at threatened points. Conditions throughout the state are declared to be worse than at any time since the tobacco war began.

KILLS MOTHER FOR MONEY

Indiana Boy and Companion Spend Bloody in Drunken Carousal.

Crover C. Blake and Orsel Reynolds, of Anderson, Ind., were arrested here Sunday on the charge of murdering Blake's mother Saturday at Anderson. Blake made a confession after his arrest implicating Reynolds. He said he had been drinking with Reynolds and they had needed money. He went home and entered the kitchen where his mother was cooking dinner according to confession. Reynolds standing guard outside, Blake says his mother accused him of having been drinking and he went into another room and got a hammer. He returned, noiselessly crept up behind her and struck her on the back of the head. She fell insensible.

He says he then opened her dress and grabbed a bag she had fastened around her neck which contained money and jewels. While he was upstairs changing his clothes he heard a scream. He returned to the kitchen and found Reynolds standing over his mother's body, hammer in hand. He says Reynolds admitted having struck her when she moved. The two young men then came to Fort Wayne, spent the night in carousing and were arrested just as they were about to board a train for Michigan. Blake says he secured $160 in money and some diamonds rings.

GERMAN POSTAL BANK PLAN.

Government Decides to Introduce Check System.

The German government has decided to establish a postal check system modeled after the Austrian system. The government proposed the introduction of postal checks eight years ago but the requesting demanded certain conditions which the government was unwilling to accept. The present system is to be put into operation by decree, which will remain in force till 1911. This will give the government time to accumulate sufficient data to serve as the basis for a general law on the subject. At present it is intended to open check offices in only one of the larger cities. These are Berlin, Bremen, Cologne, Danzig, Frankfurt, Hamburg, Hanover, Karlsruhe and Leipzig.

Each person wishing to avail himself of the check system regularly must deposit 100 marks and always keep his balance up to that sum. He receives a number for his account which must be used on all his checks. Payments to his account may be made not only by other account holders, but by any other person at any post office in the imperial system. Payments upon account may be made by means of cashiered pay cards by ordinary postoffice money orders, or by means of transfer orders from other accounts.

An account holder can ask to have all monies received at the post office for him carried to his account. He can draw against his account in making payment to other account holders or to outsiders. In the latter case the post office will send the money to the receiver through a messenger. Small fees will be charged for various forms services in connection with the service. They are placed just high enough to cover the estimated cost of operation. Checks cannot be endorsed and passed from one person to another.

TRY TO RECOVER NOTES.

Give Them to Omaha Doctor and He Sells Them to Bank.

Three suits have been filed in the county court at Hastings for the replevin of promissory notes given Dr. H. Fowler of Omaha, and discounted by the Farmers Savings bank of George, Ia., and the Prosler State bank of Prosler, a town near Hastings. The plaintiffs are Hobie Chan, William A. Phillips and Fred A. Knobell. The petitioners assert that they entered into contracts with W. A. Knobell, representing himself as a doctor employed by the Northwestern Medical and Surgical Institute, of Omaha, who undertook on behalf of the firm to cure the patients for a stipulated figure. They called on them, depecting that Winslow was not a physician and that he had no right to enter into the contracts being merely a student of the institution. Dr. Fowler, it is alleged, and that because of his medical diploma he could not undertake to effect cures for the amounts named in the contracts. He fixed low prices and the patients on the belief of the terms of the stipulated notes agreeing to pay at the new rate for the service and treatment. These notes were sold to the bank in George and afterwards carried to the hands of the Prosler bank.

The petitioners assert that they are victims of fraud. They say they had not been cured and that the physician was not the right kind, others critics in that country are similarly deceived of securing notes and he has given given to Dr. Fowler.

After picturing the president's youthful vigor and his love for struggles against wrongs and abuses, Tardieu quotes from the president's utterances to him, especially in connection with his "crusade." The president declared his struggle against plutocracy was because he was an enemy of socialism and anarchy.

"I am after my fashion a conservative," Tardieu quotes Roosevelt as saying, "and it is for this I combat the abuses of plutocracy. I know that the people think I am a good patriot. I am not a sentimental. Let them attack me. I will defend myself by appealing to the spirit of Justice in the country. I will return the blows."

WARN'S YOUNG LOVERS.

County Judge Will Prosecute Those Misstating Their Ages.

Grooms with the first fuzz of manhood on their lips and brides that look as though they should be wearing short-skirted will have to produce positive evidence of their age before they can wed in Omaha under a regulation just promulgated by County Judge Leslie. The affidavit of the bridegroom will no longer go with the license department, where there is any reason to doubt the couple are under age.

The reason for the rule was the marriage Tuesday afternoon by Judge Leslie of John K. Mershon, a barber at the Merchant hotel shop, and Gottlieb Theuerkauf, a butcher.

Judge Leslie, who is 21 years old, was married his mother, Mrs. Oliver Mershon, called Judge Leslie up by telephone and told him the boy would be 18 Thursday. The Nebraska law positively forbids the marriage of a boy under 18, consequently, if the mother's statement is true, the marriage is invalid.

THE PRICE OF LIFE.

Woman Explorer Tells Some of Her Experiences in African Wilds.
Of all the countless hosts of the African bush men, I have hearded than the "driver" and "mowrare," not more than half an inch in length, but of the most venomous and pestiferous kind, whose pet trick is to invade the bamboo huts of the whites and natives and literally force them to vacate their homes, writes Miss M. A. A. Simonton, a daring Pennsylvania woman lately returned from a trip in the wilds of western Africa.

The night I was awakened by something crawling over me, and upon hearing the yells and shrieks of the natives, was horrified to see an army of ants swarming into our hut. There is only one thing to do when these insects take possession of your house, and that is to move out at once. Even as I jumped out of bed they covered the floor and stung my feet. Their shrieks are something awful. They had been drawn into the hut by the smell of the palm kernels that I had been cooking and by the candles, for they always have a sense of all kinds. Well, they simply took complete possession, and when we entered our home in the morning it was clean as a geyser. They had eaten every bit of food and last, but not least, most of each, making a road through the jungle. They are the great scavengers of Africa and perform a service of vast value in this respect.

These ants travel in armies, throwing out sentries and scouts, the latter posting around to discover good feeding grounds and running back to report to the main body. Their speed is little short of electric. They also have a sort of instinct, while a certain host is to travel upwards over obstructions and crevasses, hundreds of ants buzzing masses of leaves which they place as barriers and filling up the floor of the bridge with grass and earth. Then the millions of ants move over with incredible swiftness. Often they travel scores of miles on a single front. Their tiny forms may be seen all through the African bush. Often an army of them can be seen, each one carrying a twig or piece of earth on his back. At such times they are migrating to a new home and carrying their building material along. Miss Simonton's first experience with them was when a string of the nests descended from a tree and literally covered her, inflicting a score of painful stings. Fortunately these stings are not poisonous.

There is no defense against them except fire, said she, and it was one of the grandest, most spectacular sights of the jungle to see the blacks breathing back the ants with handfuls of bamboo. With the forests and picturesque bamboo huts as a background and the forms of the men slumped against the gloom by the flickering flames of their bamboo torches, the scene was one that would have made a wonderful photograph could it have been taken. The blacks looked all the world like so many devils fighting spirits. As they advanced with their flaming sticks they had to keep brushing off the ants from their bodies with their hands and elbows.

Besides these little red brown ants, which the natives call Nyanya, the bush is full of other pestiferous creatures, some of which are deadly poison and a menace to human life. Among these are scorpions, huge spiders and house lizards. Watchful vigilance is the chief protection in those vast, uncolonized wilds.

DISTURBING INNOVATIONS

It is not always wise to force upon a people new customs, even those of advanced principle, in the face of long-established tradition. Lady Burton discovered this truth when she attempted to introduce European courtesy into the Orient. She tells of her experience in "Inner Life of Syria." The incident occurred at one of her own receptions.

"It is de rigueur every time coffee, tea or sherbet comes in for every franchise of visitors that I should take it with them and drink first. When I first arrived I used to get up as a matter of course, make the tea and coffee and carry it round. The dragoons would sit huzza and watch."

One day I asked them to get up and help me. They were pleased to do so, and willingly handed the refreshments to any of the Europeans, men or women, but not to their own ladies who flushed, begged their pardon, and were quite confused when I made it known that my attention was for them as well as for others. The women looked appealingly at me, and stood up, praying not to be served. One maid who was really in love with my wife, a beautiful creature, gave her teacup to me. It was a good joke with little snicker. She bent, kissed his hand, and begged his pardon. I felt quite indignant with the men so behaving to their wives, mothers and sisters, but she said to me: "Play, Mrs. Burton, do not teach our young ones they do not know about it; never say."

"Never that I held my tongue, but I let them know that with Europeans it was the height of bad taste not to wait for any woman."

Animals and Music.

Tarantulas do not dance to the sound of the violin, but let the people they do the dancing. Scorpions, however, enjoy fulfilling according to the Westminster Gazette, and lizards go crazy for music of any kind. As for serpents, the poor constrictor and pythons are senseless to melody, but the Sora is fascinated by the flute and all more by the fiddle. Polar bears enjoy the violin, so do ostriches. Wolves will stop in the chase to listen to a concert. Elephants will sing, and especially the upper notes. The while appreciating violin and cannot stand the harmonica. The musical seal shows no emotion on hearing any instrument, not on the bass drum.

Some men think they are martyrs to love if they scratch their hands on a girl's dress.

PEACE OR WAR THEY ALWAYS COME HERE.

PREDICTS A FAILURE.

Former Chief Engineer Stevens Says Panama Canal Will Not Help.

John F. Stevens, a vice president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, and a former chief engineer of the Panama canal, has issued a statement prophesying the failure of the canal undertaking. Mr. Stevens says: "God willing, the canal will not help the United States in its trade with South America, as practically all of the inhabitants of the southern continent are located to the east of the Andes, so that it would be of no advantage to make use of the canal to reach them."

Mr. Stevens also says that in our commercial relations with the islands of the Pacific and Far East the canal will be of little value. Our coal and wheat centers are inland. Their products have to be shipped on their way by rail. When once loaded on cars it would not be cheaper to ship to the Atlantic and then sail to the east by the way of the canal than it would be to send directly to the ports on our Pacific coast and then get on board ship. Mr. Stevens believes that one coal supply is fast diminishing and that China will be the coal country for the future. Siberia, he says, will be the wheat country of the future, with India a close second.

Mr. Stevens maintains that the Panama canal cannot hope to become anything other than a money-making expense. It will not meet expenses and will cost more than expected. It will not be an advantage, he says, to European countries, but not to us. The date of the finishing of the canal he fixes as January 1915.

The idea of the canal being of great value to us in times of warfare since our naval forces can be quickly sent from one coast to the other, he says, is utterly absurd. It would take days for the ships to get around, and during that time hostile ships could have done their work.

Church System Not Right.

Rev. Dr. William N. Bocock, pastor of the First Reformed church of Bayonne, N. J., created no slight sensation when he declared from his pulpit that the doctrines and ecclesiastical system of the church to-day were unsuited to the needs of the twentieth century; that the doctrinal system of the church was a heresy from the sixteenth century; that while it contained at soul of truth, the world was unsuited to those times. The church, he said, was too founded upon a book and referred to the story of Daniel in the lions' den, the opening of the Red Sea before the fleeing Israelites, etc., as figurative and very exaggerated language. He said: "The prophets of the old time sought the best means of conveying to the minds of the sort of people then living the religious spirit, but the things that were vehicles of those days cannot be vehicles of to-day." He declared his intention of asking the authorities of the church for permission to preach the truth for the next two years. While the older and more staid membership of Dr. Bocock's church are against his opinions, it is said that many members of his flock are standing loyally by him, and a split in the society will probably ensue.

New Record in Gunnery.

Lieut. John H. Ferguson, in charge of the gunnery department at the U.S. Naval Academy, has made the new record at Magdalene Bay, having made a 25 hits in 25 shots at the rate of 2.83 shots per minute.

Attack on Army and Navy.

Some structures on the army by army officers and on the navy by naval officers have been made recently, thus on the navy being far more serious than the others. All ought to receive the careful attention of the government. The criticisms on the navy which have been made by civilians may or may not be of any consequence, but those which are made by men in the service are worthy of note.

NUBINS OF FARM NEWS.

Farming in New Mexico has been given a great impetus during the past few years by the work of the farmers' institutes and many unproductive values have been turned into rich grain and fruit fields.

Frank Donnelly of the town of Oak Grove, Barron county, Wis., was bitten four weeks ago by a vicious bear, and blood poisoning set in, from the effects of which he died after three weeks of suffering.

Forty young Indians have been received at the government Indian agricultural school at Walworth, N. D. Most of the young students are from Fort Berthold, but a few of them are from the Sisseton reservation.

A movement has been started for the organization of the various farmer elevators in South Dakota. A meeting has been held in Sioux Falls and about 90 per cent of the managers have expressed themselves as favorable to the plan.

Prof. Shepherd recently shipped to Russia samples of North Dakota corn for the purpose of aiding in growing it.

After Bryan returned from Europe a year ago, it was, "Mr. Bryan has no party," as not a Populist, or an Independence League man, Mr. Bryan did not carry in his two presidential efforts.

This year there is a difference which weakens the force of old figures.

All disconnected elements, all the loosely attached elements and all the Republican stay at home elements are to be considered as possible Democrats.

It is to be forgotten that each of the Bryan propositions, however eccentric it may be in the judgment of the well-informed, has a certain attraction for voting masses and this has been advanced with a not wholly ill-founded view to that practical, if temporary effect.

Poplar faith in social reforms and principles of government is always shaken in times of sluggish industry. No man is able to propose how far even greenbackism will be accepted by the spirit of "anything for change" which will be present during the coming campaign.

Mr. Watterson has lately quoted a remark of John G. Carlisle made just before Bryan returned from Europe a year ago. It was, "Mr. Bryan has no party, but he has a following." Mr. Watterson's remark is an effort of party lines to increase his following.

It is to be forgotten that each of the Bryan propositions, however eccentric it may be in the judgment of the well-informed, has a certain attraction for voting masses and this has been advanced with a not wholly ill-founded view to that practical, if temporary effect.

Poplar faith in social reforms and principles of government is always shaken in times of sluggish industry. No man is able to propose how far even greenbackism will be accepted by the spirit of "anything for change" which will be present during the coming campaign.

Value of Tariff Duties.

In the present campaign Mr. Bryan will again count Populist support and also an alliance with Mr. Hearst.

What, then, is a Bryan Democrat?

As truly as not a Populist, or an Independence League man, Mr. Bryan's test of party fidelity is this: "Say and do precisely what I order."

He made speeches in Kentucky in behalf of the Goethe law, a conspiracy against the ballot. What about abolishing the power of the people by abolishing that put the vote of a citizen at the mercy of politicians, regardless of what goes into the ballot box?

Mr. Bryan has done now, his attempt to oblige party lines as far as he can conceive the operation to be productive of votes for himself.

He was as much as for greenbacks as for the silver standard, as much for Populists as for Democrats, and as much for silver Republicans as for either.

In declining for party regularity let him state how many parties he expects to speak for in this year's campaign.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Value of Tariff Duties.

A pretty good idea of the condition which would prevail in America with no tariff.

If there were no strong tariff schedules to protect home products, the value of foreign goods would be increased.

Instead of seeing their across-the-water competitors compelled by reason of the tariff duties collected, to sell the imported goods at prices commensurate with the cost of producing the merchandise here, the American factory owner would have been faced with a market stocked with products selling at lower prices than his own goods cost him from the hands of his own well-paid laborers.

It is significant showings of this sort which prove not only the value of tariff duties to the nation as a whole, but which also point unerringly to the dire result which would come from a change of this great American economic principle.

The Last Time They Reformed It.

The last time the Democrats reformed the tariff is so comparatively recent that men still young have a vivid recollection of it.

Those who were old enough to realize the disasters of the Wilson bill as a personal experience have learned of it as a bitter tradition.

Whatever sentiment there may be for tariff reform, it is safe to say there is not much demand for tariff revision at the hands of the Democratic party.

Governor Johnson argues that because the Democracy has won twice in forty years on a tariff reform platform it can do so again this year.

The logic of the situation is the other way about.

A burned child dreads the fire.—Jersey City Journal.

HOOSIER KITCHEN CABINET

Come in and see our Hoosier Kitchen cabinets, look them over. Observe how the flour comes out through the sifter, so none can be wasted or become mouldy—see the dust proof sugar bin, the metal cake and bread boxes, the spice cabinets, the extention aluminum work-table top all the Hoosier Special Features.

This Elwell Kitchen cabinet, $11.75

These are some Hoosier Special Features

Flour Bin

The flour is put in at the top, passes through the entire bin and is taken out entirely sifted at the bottom, thus no mouldy flour can accumulate. The bin is self-cleaning, made of metal and white wood.

Sugar Bin

The sugar bin is the most cleverly devised bin in the Hoosier. The bulk of the sugar is held in the upper part of the bin, as the opening is only large enough to allow a small quantity to run in the lower part. When a scoopful is taken out the same quantity drops down.

Recipe Cabinet

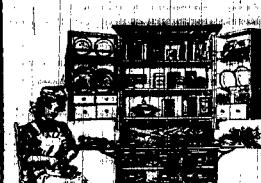

This outfit consists of 100 recipe cards 10 guide cards, labeled bread, cake, Desserts, Eggs, Fish, Meats, Miscellaneous, Salads, Sauces, Soups and Vegetables. The cards are in a neat rack attached to the same door as the spice tins.

Aluminum Work Table

This extension top can be drawn out or extended beyond the front of the cabinet over 11 inches, adding more than 1/3 to the working space.

Bread and Cake Box

The place for keeping bread fresh and moist is one of the best features of the Hoosier. The Hoosier bread box takes the place of the lower drawer. It is 8 x 11 x 24 inches, made of metal and has close, fitted lids. One end is partitioned off for cake.

Nearly every seat was taken at the opera house Friday night to hear the South Dakota State Band, and the audience seemed well pleased. Some of the pieces were exceptionally fine. While we don't lay claim to be a music critic we believe the Wayne Commercial Club band can make just as good music as this crack band considering the number of instruments used and we believe the people of Wayne would have paid out their half dollar with better grace had this concert been given by the Wayne band.

When fogs prevail in Boston harbor, the attention of passengers on the Nantucket Beach line of steamers is attracted by a faint metallic sound which might be mistaken for the sound of a bell. But it is not the clanging of a bell which the passengers hear. Suddenly through the mist there appears ahead, like a specter, a large tripod from the apex of which is suspended a big steel triangle. It is this which causes the strange sound and signals vessels as to how to guide their course through the difficult channel of the fog.

CHAPTER XII.

It struck the doctor a little comically, that one of Guy's habits should offer to turn school teacher, but Maddy was so glad that he was glad, too; and doubly glad that across the sea there was a Lucy Atherton. How he wished that she was there now at Mrs. Guy, and he must tell Guy so that very day. Seated in Guy's library, the opportunity soon occurred, Guy approaching the subject himself by saying:

"Guess, Hall, what wild project I have just embarked in."

"I know without guessing; Maddy told me" and the doctor's eyebrows were elevated just a little.

"And so you don't approve?" was Guy's next remark, to which the doctor replied: "Yes; it's a grand thing for her providing she knows enough to teach her, but Guy, this is a confounded gossiping neighborhood, and folks will talk. I'm afraid. She's too handsome, Guy, for Madame Grundy to let alone. If Lucy were only here, it would be different. Why, in the name of wonder, are you two not married, if you are ever going to be?"

"Foolish, as I live," and Guy's hand came down playfully on the doctor's shoulder. "I did not suppose you had got as far as that. You are afraid of the effect it may have on me telling a sweet-faced little girl how to conjugate amo; and to cover up your own interest, you bring Lucy forward as an argument. Honestly, doctor, I am doing it for you. I imagine you fancy her, as well you may. She'll make a splendid woman; but she needs educating, of course, and I am going to do it. You ought to thank me, instead of looking so like a thundercloud," and Guy laughed merrily.

The doctor was ashamed of his mood, and could not tell what prompted him to ask:

"I am obliged to you, Guy; but, as far as I am concerned, you may spare your trouble. If my wife needs educating, I can do it myself."

Guy was puzzled. Could it be that, after all, he was deceived, and the doctor did not care for Maddy? It might be, and he hastened to change the conversation to another topic than Maddy Clyde.

The doctor stayed to dinner, and as Guy watched him closely, he made up his mind that he did care for Maddy Clyde, and this confirmed him in his plan of educating her for him.

Magnanimous, Guy! He felt himself very good, very generous, very commanding, and very forgiving, the early portion of the afternoon; but later in the day he began to view Guy Remington in the light of a martyr, said martyrdom consisting in the scrofulous toss of the head with which Agnes had listened to the open opposition of Mrs. Noah.

"Was he beside himself, or what?" this worthy asked. "She liked Maddy Clyde, to be sure, but it wasn't for him to determine himself by turning her schoolteacher. Folks would talk awfully, and she wouldn't blame them; besides, what would Lucy say to his being alone in a room with a girl as pretty as Maddy? It was a duty he owed her, at any rate, to tell her about it, and if she said 'was right, why go it.'"

This was the drift of Mrs. Noah's remarks, and as Guy depended much on her judgment, he decided to write to Lucy to see if she had the slightest objections to his teaching Maddy Clyde. Accordingly, he wrote that very night, telling her frankly all he knew concerning Maddy Clyde, and narrating the circumstances under which he first had met her, being careful also to repeat what he knew best. Lucy, to wit, that though poor, Maddy's father and grandfather Clyde had been gentlemen, the one a clergyman, the other a sea captain. Then he told of her desire for learning, and his plan to teach her himself, of what the doctor and Mrs. Noah had said about it, and his final determination to consult her. Then he described Maddy herself, feeling a strange thrill as he told how pure, how innocent, how artless, and beautiful she was, and asked if Lucy could be freed from his association with her.

It would be some time there to this letter could be received, and until such time Guy could not honorably have Maddy's lessons as he had agreed to do. But Maddy was not suspicious, and accepting his trivial excuse, waited patiently, while he, too, waited for the letter, wondering what it would contain.

"Because, doc, I have a project on foot. Lucy Atherton is living with what they call consumption. I don't believe those old fogies understand her disease, and if you will go over to England and undertake her cure, I'll give you just double what you'll get by remaining here. They are going to Naples for the winter, and, undoubtedly, will spend some time in Paris. It will be just the thing for you, Lucy, and her mother will be glad of your services when they know I sent you. Lucy likes you now. Will you go? You can trust Maddy to me. I'll take good care of her to-morrow, be said, and see what could be done."

As Guy had half expected, the doctor came around that evening, and inviting him into his private room, Guy proceeded at once to unfold his scheme, asking him first:

"How much he probably received for his services as physician?"

The doctor could not tell at once, but after little thought made an estimate, and then inquired why Guy had asked the question.

"If you do," he wrote, "you have but to say so, and though I am committed, I will extricate myself in some way, rather than wound you in the slightest degree."

It would be some time there to this letter could be received, and until such time Guy could not honorably have Maddy's lessons as he had agreed to do. But Maddy was not suspicious, and accepting his trivial excuse, waited patiently, while he, too, waited for the letter, wondering what it would contain.

At last the answer came, and it was Maddy who brought it to Guy. She had been home that day, and on her return had ridden by the office as Guy had requested her to do. She saw the letter bore a foreign postmark, also that it was in the delicate handwriting of some female, but that the sight did not affect her in the least. Maddy's heart was far from that day to care for a trifling, and so placing the letter carefully in her basket she kept on to Aikenside.

The letter was decidedly Lucy-ish in all that pertained to her, "dearest darling," her "precious Guy," but when she came to Maddy Clyde, her true womanly nature spoke; and Guy, while reading it, felt how good she was. "Of course he might teach Maddy Clyde all he wished to teach her, and it made Lucy love him better to know that he was willing to do such things. She wished she was there to help him; they would open a school for all the poor, but she did not know when mamma would let her come. That pain in her heart was not any better, and her cough had come earlier than season last. The physician had advised a winter in Naples, and they were going before long. Then followed a few more lines sacred to the lover's eye, lines which told how pure was the love which sweet Lucy cornerstone bore for Guy Remington, and how he had told his heart beat with a throb of pain, for Lucy spoke to him now for the first time of what might possibly happen."

"Well, he could be so good?" and unminning of Guy's presence Maddy laid her hand fondly upon his arm, while her soft eyes looked beseechingly into his eyes. Guy left them together in the lighted hall. Sitting down on the sofa, and making Maddy sit beside him, the doctor demanded Crockett of the rescued stranger.

"Well, colonel," said the fiddler, "I am a student of human nature. When I found I had missed the ford and delayed help, I set out to get it. I might have shouted myself hoarse, and no one out here would have paid the slightest attention to me. But there isn't a man west of the Mississippi who wouldn't come running at the sound of a fiddle in the woods."

"And he was right," said Davy, "for there we were, the lot of us, our horses all of a lather, for running to satisfy our curiosity about that squeaking old dog in this out-of-the-way place."

Perfectly Harmless.

The old bachelor was dining at the home of a newly married friend.

"Have a piece of this cake, Mr. Oldbach," said the fair hostess. "I made it myself."

"Thank you," rejoined Oldbach, "but I—er—solitary cake."

"Oh, you needn't be afraid of it, Oldbach," said the host. "I tried a piece of it on a stamp this morning."

Where He Failed.

Mrs. Diggs—Yes, she is suing her husband for divorce on the grounds of failure to provide.

Mrs. Diggs—Doesn't she get enough to eat?

Mrs. Diggs—Oh, yes; but he failed to provide her with the diamond necklace she wanted.

"She said you would know—that you were expecting her," Mary replied.

"Very well, I will," he said, and down at once.

Mrs. Armes answered. She put the last touches to her pretty afternoon gown and went slowly downstairs, trying to recall any possible forgotten Miss Foster. At the parlor door she stopped. It was an agent—the showy dress, the exaggerated appearance of ease, the sharp, searching glance all betrayed her as an agent, moreover, of the type she most disliked, and who had lied to her. Involuntarily her face grew stern; before she could speak the woman answered her thought.

Maddy was very happy after it was settled, and chatted gaily with her grandmother, while Guy went out with her grandfather, who wished to speak with him.

"Young man," he said, "you have taken a deep interest in me and mine since I first came to know you, and I thank you for it. I have nothing to give in return except my prayers, and those you have every day; you and that doctor. I pray for you two just as I do for Maddy. Somehow you three come in together. The next day, as Guy had proposed, he rode down to Honoldale, taking Maddy with him, and offered so many reasons why she should not be called home that the old people began to relent, particularly as they saw how Maddy's heart was set on the lessons Guy was going to give her. She might never have a like opportunity again, and so a good education would put her in the way of helping them when they were older and educated her more, it was their duty to leave her with them. He knew they objected to her receiving these dollars a week, but he should pay it just the same, and if they chose they might, with a part of it, hire a little girl to do the work which Maddy would do were she at home.
