Making the Land Productive

R. B. Schneider, who has a 1400-acre farm near Fremont, Nebraska, has the distinction of having put in the largest amount of tiling on any private farm in the United States. He has eighty-five miles of tiling on land in the Platte river bottom. Some of the land was worthless as a revenue producer until it was tiled. One dollar an acre was about all it brought to the owner. This year Mr. Schneider has one wheat field comprising 110 acres. Although this is the first crop, the wheat will yield fifty bushels to the acre.

What Farmers Are Doing

Bulletin No. 15, issued in August, 1909, by the state bureau of labor and industrial statistics shows some interesting facts concerning Wayne county farmers. It reveals the fact that the grain shipments last year were 474,000 bushels of corn, 64,800 bushels of wheat, 510,000 of oats, 1100 of barley, and 1,185 of rye. The stock shipments were 58,620 hogs, 4,600 sheep, 220 horses and mules, and 17,100 head of cattle. In poultry and meats something was also doing. Dressed poultry to the amount of 1,645 pounds was shipped and live poultry 349,100 pounds, dressed meat 680 pounds. Eggs, butter and cream also made a good showing, there being 16,820 dozen eggs sent out of the county, 6,370 pounds of butter and 132,490 gallons of cream.

Last year Wayne county had 144 farm mortgages filed, covering $470,830.90 and 382 farm mortgages released covering $466,871.83. Of city mortgages there were 78 filed having a value of $58,008.40 and 90 released to the amount of $57,515.39. In chattel mortgages there were 868 filed having a value of $406,106.37 and 574 released worth $370,486.43.

Crop Rotation

N. B. Kendall, discussing alfalfa and crop rotation in the Nebraska State Journal of Lincoln, says:

"Alfalfa has the power to collect from the atmosphere and store in the soil more nitrogen and humus than any other plant of common use by man. Also an average field of alfalfa will produce after two years growth four good crops of hay per year, and with the modern invention of grinding and sacking, insures the ability to find a profitable market for every pound of the product. Whereas under the old system of feeding it in the shape of loose hay, it was a rare thing if animals were fed liberally, to have much more than the leaves eaten."

"It is calculated that an average field of alfalfa five years old, has stored in its roots nitrogen and humus enough to have its effect felt on plant life for five or six years or more, after plowing it up and seeding to corn on small grain. This is a fact, it is the plan for the preservation of our heritage here in Nebraska every farmer should study and plan to divide his farm into fields on a crop system, of say, five years in alfalfa, then follow with corn one year, oats one year, winter wheat one year and repeat corn, oats and wheat. Then after that six years of use, seed to alfalfa again for five or six years."

"Experience will demonstrate what produces the best results, and when once determined the landowner can and will use that experience in a way to preserve for himself and posterity 'our garden of Nebraska'."

"This robbing of the soil by the one crop process and the bad methods of plowing our hillside fields, are two of the wasteful ways for which we are breeding trouble for ourselves. It has been demonstrated that one of the causes of our late years' disastrous floods has been the filling in of our natural drainage channels, partially caused by our blundering plowing of our hillside fields. The prudent, intelligent Nebraska farmer must so plow and cultivate his land, as to prevent this washing away of his rich top soil. And he must also study this question of alfalfa crop rotation, with a view to preserve and increase the fertility of the land."

Passing of Summer

Denver Republican: One more week of the resorts, of the popularity of the summer gardens, the show places on the city's rim, the public parks, then Labor day and the opening of the schools! Two days more—this one and the next—and thereafter to wear a straw hat is to be viewed with suspicion. "So fleet the"—you don't need to be told the rest. Nothing was thought of it when the downtown theaters threw open their doors, but when the wind begins to shower the leaves over the sidewalk and the morning air holds a bite that makes one wonder whether last winter's will be good enough, when the coal man begins to drop his insidious suggestions about when to lay in the supply, then must the fact be admitted that the good old summer time is packing its grip and getting ready to move south.

Not but that the prettiest time of all the year, according to what some folks think, is yet to come. Did anybody ever really enjoy wearing a straw hat? It comes as a makeshift and a necessity and can never be worn for itself alone. Summer is necessary and drops in as a decided relief from what has gone before it, but when man wants to get the most out of life he takes the season of the falling leaf, the crisp morning air, the autumn glow and tints that suffuse all but of doors. Suggestive of the downward slope of the hill of life, the ripening of the years may be, yet also of the harvest, of the battle won, of the sweet stored life, of the reward and the balm of injuries received. The autumn may recall the pass-

THIS AND THAT

The aviation fever is catching. If you do not know what that is it is a desire to ride in the air, either on an aeroplane or dirigible balloon.

If you wish to import an Aeroplane from any foreign country it will cost you a duty of forty per cent to do so. They come high but some will have them.

When President Taft visits Omaha September 20th he will be given an automobile ride over sixteen miles of paved streets cleaned and put in excellent repair.

The state supreme court of Tennessee has decided that the sale of liquor, wholesale and retail, may be stopped, thus deciding that the state law is constitutional in all its parts.

Canada is talking of taking steps to prevent the exportation of wood pulp to the United States. Let us see, we believe there is something about reciprocity in some of our tariff laws.

Ala there! It is said that you will have to pay 20 cents per quart for your 1909 cranberries for Thanksgiving. Last week Jack Frost got most of the crop and the cranberry merchant does the rest.

A great many sceptics are beginning to demand proof of Dr. Cook that he really found the north pole. A large number are saying that it is nothing but a fake story. He ought to have some kind of proof if it is a fact.

Diamonds, both the kind you burn and the kind some people wear, have been advanced in price. The latter kind are too rich for a newspaper man, and still if it did not cost so much to buy some of the former kind a man might have some of the latter.

Down in Mississippi when they get after a negro they are not very particular whether they get the right one or not so they get a colored one. Because a mob in that state could not find the man they were hunting for Sunday they took his brother and hung him. They probably thought it was all in the family.

Parental love does not appear to have a very deep hold on the hearts of Pennsylvanians, or at least some of them. A man died in the county poor house in that state Thursday who was the father of thirty-eight children. It looks as if some of his numerous progeny might have cared for him and not let him become a public charge.

We do not know that there is any occasion of our Uncle Samuel feeling very cheery over the fact, but whatever of land, icebergs, and even the North Pole, belongs to him by right of discovery by Dr. Frederick Cook. It is no little honor that has come to us as a nation through the efforts of this hardy explorer, that that which has been sought after for 1,000 years should at last be attained by an American.

ing of the years as it will: is that not why we live to see them pass, to let them bring in the end what they may? And does not the passing year bring what is well worth waiting for, just as the years as a whole bring their harvest of what is good to have in life? Sad it may be in its somber tones, in the falling leaf, in the browning of the earth; yet it is a sweet sadness and the burden of its message is peace. Youth may indeed demand its spring, the renewal of the germ, the summer and its jaunty straw hat, but maturity demands the touch of wool, the coziness of the felt, and the world is getting on in years.

Frost Record

With old timers claiming that Nebraska will experience an early frost, people are speculating when the frosts of past years have come. According to the records at the weather station, the average date for the first killing frost was October 10. CHAPTER X. The young heiress was much upset, and, besides, she had felt for some time what she would have termed an "aching void" for want of a confidante.

"No, not at all. He is as steady as a rock, and very proud. But most men find their wives, especially when they have brought them no advantages. I never thought Hugh Saville could fall in love and forget himself.

"Then, you see, when I heard about Hugh saving that man's life, I thought I might make use of the story to wake up Mrs. Saville's good feelings. It would be rather an heroic proceeding, but I was to reconcile the mother, son, and wife. George Lumley said I was splendidly generous."

"What did he, too, know all about Hugh? I mean Mr. Saville?" cried Hope, more and more displeased.

"Oh, yes; we had quite interesting talks about him. I told him confidentially how fond I was of Hugh, and when, of course, he wished he was in Hugh's place; so we set on very well. He is always coming over to the Court, except when he goes away for a few days' shooting. I am not quite sure my father likes it. You have never met Lord Castleton? He is very nice—rather old-fashioned, Lord Evelyn was a great friend of his in early days. Now, my dear Hope, you know my heart history; and you will notice Captain Lumley's manner. You know the Lumley estates are rather encumbered, and I dare say he feels shy of approaching me—poor fellow! but if I like him that is of no consequence."

"I am always interested in what you like to tell me, Miss Dacre, in your own words, but I am not very observant, and some older and wiser person would be more deserving of your confidence than I am."

"Nonsense! I could not tell all these things to a stiff old fump. Now, mind you ask Mrs. Saville if you may come and practice every morning for the concert. I intended to ask her, but my anxiety about Hugh quite put it out of my head. That is always my way. I never think of myself."

"I should be very happy to be of any use to you," said Hope, seeing she pointed for a reply.

"I knew you would. I am so tired of feeding on my own heart! I want a friend. Now, I dare say you are surprised to see how eagerly I advocate Hugh Saville's cause. Ah, there is a little tragic story which will color my whole life."

"Indeed!" with awakening interest. "I trust your life will be free from all tragic ingredients."

"Ah, no; that it cannot be. You must know that I saw a great deal of Richard and Hugh Saville when I was a little girl; my father worried a great deal about politics, and I used to live at the Court all the summer, that he might see me sometimes (my mother died when I was a baby, you know). Well, as soon as I left off playing with dolls and began to feel, I was in love with Hugh, and he was very fond of me. Then he went to sea, and we did not meet for years, until after he had been presented, and had refused half a dozen times, when he returned from—oh, I don't know where. He was so pleased to see me; but soon, very soon, I saw that he who was the best of my friends was the one man of all I had met who excited the attraction I generally exercised. Here she paused in the volume utterance and looked at her betrothed to her eyes.

ELECTRICAL BELLS. Among the curiosities of natural history are the electrical eels. They belong to the torpedos, and their power of giving an electrical shock is what makes them of interest. J. E. Warren, the author of "Para, or Scenes and Adventures on the Banks of the Amazon," tells in his book some amusing stories of the specimens which he brought home to this country.

A friend, at whose house we were waiting, had a small eel of the electrical kind, which he kept in a tub of water placed in the yard. A thirsty duck, in rapping about in search of water, chanced to see this vessel, upon the side of which he perched himself and began very inconsiderately to drink. In a moment he received a shock which made all his feathers to stand on end, and which magnified him twice his ordinary size. But the duck was more voracious than any one would have supposed, for he returned to the attack with such violence that he would have soon despatched his slippery enemy had not a servant intervened and prevented so tragic a termination of the battle.

The incidents as amusing as the foregoing took place on board our vessel while we were on our return voyage to the United States. Among our living curiosities we had two quite electrical eels, which we kept in a large tub on deck. Washing one day to change the water, we upset the tub, leaving the creatures for a few minutes on the dry boards. Having approached the vessel with fresh water, we requested one of the sailors to put them in. As he proceeded to do so, he received a strange thrill, which caused him to let the fish fall from his hand in a moment. He stamped it again, but with no better success.

Infinite was the consternation of the other sailors, who all tried in turn to put the diabolical fish into the tub, and truly laughable were their looks of wonderment occasioned by the mysterious sensations which they had severally experienced. No one, however, was more amazed than the captain's mate. Being himself wholly unacquainted with the properties of the fish, he was unable to imagine any other reason the sailors could have for dropping them than the difficulty of holding such slimy and slippery things in one's hands.

Forthwith with this opinion, the mate walked boldly up to the largest eel and seized it with a powerful grasp in order to prevent the possibility of escape on the part of the fish. He was soon forced to let go, his hold and to yell out as lustily as if some one had touched him with a bar of hot iron. After much laughing, the captain finally procured a shovel, and we returned the eels to their native element without any further difficulty.

MEN OF ACTION. "How did you like Professor Newman?" one of the summer residents of Willowby asked Hiram Gale. "I saw his name on the list of lecturers in your last winter's course."

"Mr. Gale stroked his chin reflectively. "Well, some thought he was kind of stiff in his speech at first, but I'll be what happened."

"He got kind of worked up telling us what men of action meant; what the government of these United States was doing in Alaska, the Philippines, and so on; and he stepped a mile to the right of the platform and lost his balance; but as he began to fall, Sam Hobart and Pick Willis, that were in the front seat, stood up and 'kicked him, one by each arm, and brought him up standing. He bulged out at the knees for a minute, but nothing to speak of."

"And says Pick to him, 'The last word you spoke was 'amphibious,' and maybe before you mount again you'll give us some kind of a hint what it means.'"

"The Professor looked from Pick to Sam and back to Pick again, kind of dazed, and then he began to laugh. "You let me mount, he says, 'I'll see to it that the rest of my talk is such you won't need a dictionary'—can't be kept, his promise."

"Yes, sir, he gave us a fine talk after that, and he's coming again. We had him to breakfast next morning, and my wife said she wouldn't wait to hear anybody talk more sensible than that of our common man, friendly than he did. But there was a piece in the Sentinel next week referring to Pick and Sam as Willowby's Men of Action—'an I reckon the name'll stick to 'em long as they live.'"

Favorably Impressed. "Why do you insist on having a native of Italy to work on your farm?" "Because I've read 'so much about them fine Italian hands.'"—Washington Herald.

POLE QUEST AGES LONG

Dates Back to the Ancients, When Arctic Region Was the Land of Thule.

THE RECORDS OF 1,000 YEARS. Known Story of Explorations Is Recital of Dire Adventure and Tragedies.

The known records of Arctic explorations run back 1,000 years—a story of adventure and many tragedies—to the time when the Irish monk, Dicuil, with a number of his clerical brothers, sailed as far north as Iceland and found, as the writings of Dicuil state, that there was no darkness in Iceland during the summer months.

But long before the ninth century the ancients, according to Phleas, had a legendary knowledge of a far northern island, known as Thule. In the first book of his translation of Orosius, King Alfred told of the first voyages for discovery made by Other and Wulfstan. While the localities mentioned cannot now be located, it is probable that Other rounded North Cape and visited the coast of Lapland.

From the time of the monk Dicuil to the earliest record of the Arctic in the history of the North, there is a lapse of 400 years, and from then on the history of polar explorations comes down by centuries until the middle of the sixteenth century, after which the expeditions were so numerous and so closely related to the material progress of the nations of the earth that a fair record of them has been kept.

Carved Stones Far North. The fact that the Norsemen in the thirteenth century colonized a part of Iceland and Greenland, and that at one time their explorers reached a latitude of 75 degrees, is known by inscriptions in stone that were discovered by other explorers hundreds of years later. One of these inscriptions was found in latitude 73 degrees north, and it indicated that it had been left there in the year 1265. Another inscription contained the record of a party of bold spirits who had penetrated as far as 75 degrees and 40 minutes north latitude in 1266.

The fourteenth century was marked by a voyage by Ivar Bardsen, the Norwegian. He was steward to the bishop of Gardar, and was sent to Greenland in 1349 to relieve the colony that had been forgotten during the two years of the "black plague," which broke out in Norway in 1347. Bardsen compiled sailing directions to this colony, and these directions form the oldest work of Arctic geography.

In 1816 a polar expedition found a pioneer in Sir John Barrow, who offered a reward of £20,000 sterling to anyone making the northwest passage, and £5,000 for reaching 85 degrees north latitude, which would be sixty-nine miles south of the pole.

Two years later, in 1817, two expeditions set out, one by way of Spitzbergen, the other by Baffin's Bay. The Dorothea and the Trent, on the Spitzbergen route, were commanded by Captain David Buchen and Lieutenant John Franklin. The other expedition was in charge of Captain John Ross and Lieutenant Edward Parry. Neither expedition was a success. In 1827 Parry on his third voyage made his historic dash for the pole from Spitzbergen by sledge boats and reached latitude 82 degrees and 42 minutes.

In 1845 Sir John Franklin made his tragic voyage. His ships, the Erebus and the Terror, were seen by a whaler in July, 1845, and that was the last trace. For three years the British admiralty spared no effort, but the discovery of the gruesome relics of a frightful tragedy. One vessel had been crushed in the ice, the other had been

IN THE ARCTIC QUEST

Explorer Believed to Be Lost Returns from Trip That Was Crowned with Triumph.

North Pole Is Discovered

Start Made in Summer of 1907

Dr. Frederick Albert Cook, the American explorer, reached the north pole April 21, 1908, according to a telegram received at the colonial office in Copenhagen from Lerik, Norway.

Unless the cables lie, unless Cook has been the victim of polar madness, unless he has perpetrated upon the world the biggest hoax of a generation, the search for the north pole has ended in a manner as dramatic as the race. Almost alone, unsupported by any great scientific association, his name unaided and unopposed, he has done what the world's greatest nations have failed to do.

The adventures of Fridtjof Nansen, the Norwegian explorer, who in 1896 got as far north as latitude 86 degrees 14 minutes, are recent enough to be comparatively fresh in the public memory. He sailed from Christiania to Fram, with the intention of reaching the New Siberian Islands, and then drifting to the pole.

A party was sent out to establish supply stations to which the explorer might retreat, if necessary, and the most country work was to be done on skins. Nansen was absent a long time and was expected to return with the news of his success. He did not return, and his party was believed to have perished.

In 1900 the Duke of Abruzzi, nephew of the King of Italy, sailed from Christiania in the Stella Polaris. He was considered an amateur, but he planted his standard in latitude 84 degrees 34 minutes, a new record that stood until Peary penetrated to latitude 87 degrees 6 minutes six years later.

Northwest Passage. Captain Roald Amundsen in 1903-6 made the Northwest Passage, which had been vainly sought since the discovery of America, and which had never been accomplished by ships alone, although MacClure is credited with making it by ships and sledges. In a tiny sealer, the Gjøa, he entered Lancaster Strait and proceeded to a harbor 100 miles from the magnetic pole, which is in or near King William Land. For nineteen months, day and night, the party made uninterrupted magnetic observations. Two members of the party in the spring of 1905 charted the east coast of Victoria Land as far as the seventy-second parallel and discovered an unknown tribe of Eskimos, the Killipmians. The expedition spent a second winter in the ice in the summer of 1906 reached civilization through Bering Strait.

In 1901 Baron Toll, a Russian, led a polar expedition party by way of Siberia, but all the members perished from the cold.

In 1903 Eriksson, a Dane, headed an expedition and got as far as Saunders Island, where they were rescued in a desperate condition. In the same year Anthony Fiala, a young Brooklyn explorer, sailed on the ship America and proceeded farther north than the Duke of the Abruzzi; this party endured great hardships before they were rescued.

Dr. Cook was accompanied by a Norwegian when he left Etah, Greenland, in March, 1908. He took with him eight Eskimos, four sledges, and twelve dog teams. He was to make his way through Etah to Land. Dr. Cook was well equipped for his attempt, and started on his dash to the north with the utmost confidence. In a letter written from his winter quarters on Dec. 6, 1907, he explained the plans which he had conceived for reaching the pole.

Cook had a large experience as an explorer previous to the present trip. He is a physician and New Yorker. He was educated in the University of New York and the College of Physicians and Surgeons there, but instead of entering upon practice to any extent he took up exploration. When 28 years old he was the first journey to the north as a member of one of Peary's expeditions. He organized several other trips, gaining fame each time among scientists in many countries. Dr. Cook's home is in Brooklyn.

Horse Drags Him to Death. Nebraska Farmer Pkilled in Front of Train by Bally Kaitual. John King, a young farmer, was killed by a Union Pacific flyer near Central City, Neb., in an unusual way. He was leading a horse across the tracks when the halter wrapped around his arms. The animal balked on the track and although Reeps was safely across he was dragged back and under the wheels when the engine struck the horse.

One Little Year

It is one year since we said our first word to the readers of the Wayne Herald. It does not seem as though twelve months had slipped away since first we came to Wayne, but such is a fact. For fifty-two weeks we have had our little say about the current events among a busy people, telling of their comings and goings, their hopes and plans, and in all this have tried to speak a kindly word for all and held up Wayne and its advantages, improvements and industries to the outside world. Perhaps we have not measured up to the anticipations of a good many, and no doubt someone else could have done better, but we have honestly tried to give our readers a good paper, one representing the best of the community. Having become better acquainted we shall no doubt be better able to gather up week by week all the happenings. We appreciate the kind words and good will extended in the past and let us altogether reach forward to a larger and better Wayne in the months that stretch out into the future. Vain reminiscences of the failures of the past will not mend them; the things we meant to have done and have not we may yet attain unto. Asking your aid in making the Herald a better and more representative paper of a growing town and county and thanking you all for the efforts of the past, let us hold fast to the faith in ourselves, our town, our county, our state and nation, each in his own way, doing the daily tasks assigned him in the spirit of fraternity, charity and loyalty, thus shall our work prosper, and our labors shall not be in vain.

A Queen Bug
Last Thursday afternoon Herman Vohlkamp, one of our good farmer readers, on route four, brought into our sanctum something new in the bug line, to him and to us. It was not overly large and was on the beetle order, but the peculiarity about it was the food it seemed inclined to eat. It appears to be fond of the seed pods of the cocklebur, a weed that everything heretofore has seemed to shun. The beetle crawls up the stalk of the bur and eats a hole in the seed pod, with the result that it soon turns brown and drops off before the seed has a chance to ripen, thus proving a benefit and blessing to the farmers, as this class of weeds are a pest in many ways. Mr. Vohlkamp sent the beetle, or bug, whatever they may term it, to the Iowa state agricultural experiment station at Ames, with a written account of the insect and he hopes to learn more about it and ascertain whether it is something new or that this particular one had gotten a perverted taste.

J. H. Kate spent several days at Omaha the past week, where he purchased a gasoline engine and other machinery for the X-Ray incubator factory.

Death of Mrs. P. L. Miller

On Saturday evening, August 4, 1909, at her home in Wayne, Nebraska, Mrs. P. L. Miller, after a long illness, passed quietly away, at the age of fifty-eight years, eight months and five days. Her health had been failing rapidly for the last year. Last June she was taken to a sanitarium at Lincoln, Nebraska, accompanied by her husband, who was constantly by her side, where everything was done for her that medical skill and careful nursing could do, but her disease would not yield to medical treatment. It became evident that she could live only a short time. Two weeks before the day of her funeral she was brought home that she might spend her last days with her friends.

The funeral was held on Monday, August 6, 1909, at 3 p. m. from the family residence where a large number of neighbors and friends gathered to pay their last respect to the departed. The funeral was conducted by Rev. C. J. Ringer. The remains were laid to rest in Greenwood cemetery by the side of her five-year-old son who died in 1884. There was a large floral offering by her many friends.

Lucy Louise Perrine was born December 29, 1850, at Monroe, Wisconsin. On November 14, 1877, she was united in marriage to Mr. P. L. Miller, of her native town and where they resided until 1884, when they came to Wayne. To this union two children were born, a five-year-old son dying in 1884.

There remain to mourn her loss the husband, one son, James, of the mercantile firm of Miller & Jones, of this city; two sisters and four brothers, Mrs. Colaba, of Monroe, Wisconsin; Mrs. Halsey, of Oklahoma City; Mr. Henry Perrine, of Wisconsin; Mr. Erastus Perrine, of Creighton, Nebraska; Mr. Hale Perrine, Oklahoma City; Mr. Elgin Perrine, of Spokane, Washington, all of whom were present at the funeral except the two last brothers, named.

Kindly Spoken
The Osakis, Minnesota Review has the following regarding two of Wayne's boys, the sons of Rev. E. B. Young and wife, who with their mother have been taking an outing at Osakis: "The assembly room and annex of the M. E. church were crowded to the doors last evening by a music-loving audience that were delighted with the program given by little Ensign Young and brother Paul, assisted by Miss Emily Grace Howard. The selections were of a high grade and the way little Ensign Young, thirteen years old, performed on the violin and piano marked him as a musician of phenomenal accomplishments for one of his years. His older brother, Paul, is an accomplished cornetist, and his selections were greatly enjoyed."

Corn Show Prizes

The Executive Committee of the Commercial Club met Tuesday night and perfected arrangements for the premium list of the Big Corn Show to be held here the first week in December.

The report of Messrs. Cherry and Brown on a premium list was read and a vote of thanks extended the gentlemen for their good work. Premiums are to be given for 1st, 2nd and 3rd prizes in Corn, Spring and Winter Wheat, Oats, both early and late, Sweet Corn, Pop Corn, Large Field Corn, Best Early and Late Potatoes, Largest Potatoes and Alfalfa. Five varieties of home grown apples are also on the list. Prizes are also to be given the girls of school age for the best exhibits in cooking and also plain and fancy sewing.

In all cases the rules governing the exhibits will conform to the requirements of the Agricultural and Domestic Branches of the State University and judges from the University will be here to pass on the exhibits and lecture on the work.

The Commercial Club has the benefit of the co-operation of our County Superintendent in this work and she is lending valuable assistance toward making the show a great educational as well as entertaining success.

A committee to secure premiums was appointed and up to date have met with the greatest success. Cash and merchandise premiums to the value of $400 have already been subscribed.

Premium lists will soon be issued giving full particulars. The Show is to be held in the opera house for 3 days, the first week in December.

NORMAL NOTES

The different graduating classes have not been fully organized as yet but from what we now know, the Scientific class will out-number any previous Scientific class.

Prof. Percy Thorne, of the Mathematics Department of New York University, is here as a guest of President Fred Pile. These men were roommates in Colby College, at Waterville, Maine.

The new year has opened up with a good attendance, even better than a year ago. This certainly is not only gratifying to the management, but to the friends of the school as well.

The reception given by the faculty to the new students at the opening of the term was a most enjoyable affair. Short speeches were made by Profs. Pile, Bright and Hunter, and a reading by Miss Carroll made up the program. After these came the social in the gymnasium which was under the direction of some of the older students.

KATE'S

ONE PRICE OUTFITTERS FOR MEN AND BOYS

NOW, more than ever before, your safety lies in the Kuppenheimer label. During the past few months there has been a rapid increase in the price of wools. Unfortunately, some manufacturers did not anticipate this increase, with the result that they are unable to supply the genuine fabrics---proven and tested---without a proportionate increase in the price of the finished garment, or perhaps the other alternative, the same old price with a decrease in quality, substitution as it were.

You'll find clothes made by the House of Kuppenheimer for Fall and Winter of the usual high standard without any increase in price to you. It is hardly necessary and not altogether in keeping with the policy of a business so favorably known, to dwell upon the fact that inferior qualities, substitutes or imitations, are not permitted in Kuppenheimer clothes. We are not going to dwell upon it now---simply assure you that the fabrics which enter into Kuppenheimer clothes are virgin wool; every one of them carefully selected, and best adapted to the purposes intended.

The Racket

This is a cheering item of news: Hard coal has already advanced 15 cents a ton on all grades and will go higher from now on until winter, at least. It is already so high that no one can really afford to touch it.

The Grain Department of the Interstate Live Stock Fair, which will be held in Sioux City, the week of September 20th, will be in charge of John Sundberg, President of the Iowa Corn Grower's Association. The Fair will take place late enough for fine specimens of corn to be secured and Mr. Sundberg will have exhibits from several states.

Following its custom of previous years, the Interstate Live Stock Fair Association this year will give the traveling men full swing on Saturday. Already this army of traveling boosters is working out its plans. It is likely there will be a big parade down town in the morning, a special program at the fair grounds in the afternoon, and the traditional "hot time in the old town" at night. Sioux City on the closing night of an Interstate Fair, once seen, is never forgotten. Fun is king and merriment runs riot. The "last night of the Fair" in Sioux City is a close relative of Mardi Gras night in New Orleans.

Let every business man in Wayne hoist for a greater Wayne. Why not? We have the best town along the line, the shipping facilities are good, surrounded by an energetic class of farmers, and they are blessed with a bountiful crop; no hailstorms have visited this section; no cyclones have devastated the country, and while we have been sweltering with the extreme heat for some time, even the heat has given place to the nice cool weather and we have many things to be thankful for, and we should just keep on boosting for Wayne and vicinity where the farmer, be he renter or owner, is doing well and in many cases doing far better than people are doing in other states.

Sheriff Mears was at Wakefield Friday serving notices on the residents of the Wayne county addition that Wakefield is trying to annex to its corporate limits. Those who are residing therein do not see where they are to be benefitted by the union and propose to fight the matter in the courts. It looks as though the village of Wakefield had undertaken more than it could accomplish for it is seemingly an evident proposition that you cannot annex property without the sanction of those who are to be taken in. Besides if the village shall succeed in making a legal union it will not be a union of heart and purpose and the result will be that they will lose more than they gain.

We are in receipt of a letter from a subscriber in the northwest part of the county, asking our advice as to whether he should pay his road tax of $12.50 and then fix the road beside, or what he should do. As he puts it, the case is like this: No grader or road scraper has been used on the road for the way for the past two years, and the road boss has not been out that way only once in that length of time. Besides there is a bridge that they have not been able to drive across for over two months. They were notified by the postoffice officials last year to put the road in better shape or the rural route would be taken away from them. Well, we think that we should fix the road, put in a bill to the county for the amount of work done, bounce the road boss and get one that would do something. The commissioners are bound to see something is done and will do it if the subscriber will make noise enough over the matter to wake them up.

Care in Preparing Food.

In recent years scientists have proved that the value of food is measured largely by its purity; the result is the most stringent pure food laws that have ever been known.

One food that has stood out prominently as a perfectly clean and pure food and which was as pure before the enactment of these laws as it could possibly be is Quaker Oats; conceded by the experts to be the ideal food for making strength of muscle and brain. The best and cheapest of all foods. The Quaker Oats Company is the only manufacturer of oatmeal that has satisfactorily solved the problem of removing the husks and black specks which are so annoying when other brands are eaten. If you are convenient to the store buy the regular size packages; if not near the store, buy the large size family packages.

The big rain that has just soaked the state from end to end is welcomed because it gives the corn a chance to fill out some on the home stretch, but mainly because it helps the fall pastures and gives the farmers a chance to get in their winter wheat. The wheat once safely in the ground, it almost always makes a big crop.

Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Theobald returned Monday from a very pleasant and successful buying trip to Chicago. Cards are out announcing the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Dorsett to Earl B. McMullin, the same to take place at the home of the bride's parents in Wayne on September 21.

ROBS TREASURE TRAIN, NEW PENNIES AS BOOTY

Bandit Holds Up Express on Pennsylvania Road in Western Style.

ELEES AND DROPS THE COIN

Deed Committed Near Lewistown, Pa., at "The Narrows," a Mountain Fastness.

The robber stopped a west-bound express train on the Pennsylvania railroad at "the narrows," eight miles east of Lewistown, Pa., at 2 a. m. Tuesday, robbing the express car of $25,000, but was compelled to drop most of his booty and escape to the mountains. He carried off, so far as has been ascertained from $100 to $1,000 in Liberty pennies, which he probably mistook for gold. Conductor Hoffberger of Harrisburg was shot through the hand in a fight with the robber. The deed was carried out in the regular west-bound style.

The train held up was No. 33. It left Philadelphia at 9:02 Monday night and Harrisburg at midnight. The spot where the robbery occurred was ideal for such a deed. The tracks occupy a narrow strip between the mountains and the Juniata River. Heavy timber covers the mountains and paths lead to almost impenetrable fastnesses in the woods. The train consisted of two engines, three express cars and two sleeping cars. A signal car pulled on the track brought it to a stop. Engineers John Lohr and Huber Peakin, both of Altoona, on alighting from their cabs were confronted by a masked man with two revolvers, who ordered "Halt!" They obeyed promptly. The conductor came up at this juncture and taking in the situation started to run for the rear of the train. The robber fired five shots at him, but he did not stop. Then he ordered the express car opened, threatening to blow it up with dynamite if not obeyed. The car was opened and at the direction of the robber the money bags were carried to the side of the tracks. When as much money was stacked up as one man could carry the trainmen were ordered back to their positions and the train moved on. It is believed that about $1,000 was taken. Several of the bags contained pennies, which were found in the morning near the scene of the robbery.

FAST TRAIN IN FREAK WRECK

Machine of Lake Shore Limited Collapses and Stops Coaches.

The Lake Shore Limited, the twenty-four New York-Chicago flyer on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, was in a freak wreck at Millersburg, Ind., while running at a speed of sixty miles an hour. The big engine, sagging broke a number of connecting rods and in an instant was reduced to a mass of wreckage. The broken rods released others and in the final collapse the big driver wheels went down the embankment. The wheels of the locomotive were scattered into a shapeless mass of scrap iron. As the engine collapsed, the coupling with the first coach broke and the delicate line of sleepers was stopped by its own length. The sudden stopping sent passengers from their seats into the aisles, but no one was hurt, aside from slight bruises.

EXPLODING THE MYTHS OF CAPTAIN KIDD

Actual Facts in the Legendary Career of the Scotchman Who Was Accused of Piracy and for Whose Fabulous Buried Treasure Adventurers Are Still Seeking.

The buried treasure of Capt. Kidd is one of the greatest myths of modern times. Kidd's gold has been sought for 200 years. The waters of bays, rivers and lagoons have been swept for the bulk of his sunken ship. Quest of the treasure of Capt. Kidd must always be in vain, for Kidd buried no treasure, says the Philadelphia Ledger.

Neither of the two vessels in which he cruised during his years of free roving was sunk, so there can be no sunken hulk of Capt. Kidd's laden with gold or otherwise.

The Adventure Galley, in which he began his cruises, was condemned as unseaworthy and burned at Madagasc-car. His other ship, the Quodah Merchant, was burned at Hispaniola (San Domingo) after Kidd's arrest in Boston. The sloop San Antonio, in which Kidd came north, was seized in Boston.

Fanciful stories have been told of Kidd's visit to Gardiner's Island and the burial of treasure there. The only authentic account of his visit there is in the testimony of John Gardiner, given under oath at Boston, about three weeks after Kidd's visit. It makes no mention of the treasure having been buried. An official abstract of Mr. Gardiner's testimony was as follows:

"About 20 days ago Mr. (Emott), of New York, came to his (Gardiner's) house and desired a boat to go to New York; furnished him one; that evening he (Gardiner) saw a sloop (the San Antonio) with six guns riding off Gardiner's Island; two days afterward in the evening Gardiner went on board the sloop to inquire what she was."

"When he came on board Capt. Kidd told him unknown to him, asked him how he was going to Lord Bellomont at Boston, and desired him to carry two negro boys and one negro girl ashore and keep them until he returned or his order called for them; about ten

WOMAN HELD AT SNAKE'S MERCY

From one danger into another woman, Lydia Smith's predicament when, in trying to escape a snake, she caught her hair in a wire fence and badly lacerated her scalp before she could be extricated. Mrs. Smith, who lives in Clayton, Del., while on an errand at Rehoboth, went to a small house in the back yard to catch a chicken for dinner. As she entered the wire inclosed yard she found a large blacksnake lying at her feet. The frightened woman jumped back, catching her hair in the wire netting overhead, while the frightened snake glided out the other way. Mrs. Smith's head was badly torn, some of the hair being pulled out by the roots.

hours after he had taken the negroes, Kidd sent his boat ashore with two bags of goods and a negro boy.

"Next morning Kidd directed Gardiner to come on board immediately and bring the sloop with him for his voyage to Boston, which he did; then Kidd desired him to secure a barrel of cider, which he consented to do; Gardiner sent two of his men for it, and while they were gone Kidd offered Gardiner several pieces of damaged muslin and penon as a present to his wife, which Kidd put in a bag and handed to him; about a quarter of an hour after, Kidd gave Gardiner two or three pieces of damaged muslin for his own use. An outline of the events that led to Kidd's being charged with piracy is necessary to an understanding of the situation in which he now found himself. For some years Kidd had been a shipmaster sailing out of New York, and for a time had commanded a privateer, cruising against the French in the West Indies. He was prosperous, and tradition places in his house in Liberty street the first Turkey carpet seen in New York. In 1695 fate ordained a change in the life of Capt. Kidd. In that year he was in London, commanding the brigantine Adventure, of New York, when the King appointed Richard Coote, Earl of Bellomont, Governor of New England and New York. Bellomont was ambitious, and saw in the suppression of piracy, at which the Colonial Governors had been winking, a field for personal advancement and gain. Before leaving England he asked that an English frigate be sent to suppress the pirates, and not getting it he decided to fit out a privately owned ship. He went about for a captain, and Robert Livingston, founder of the New York family of that name, who was then in London, recommended Capt. Kidd as the proper man. Kidd was disinclined to take the position, but Bellomont intimated that Kidd's own vessel would be retained in the Thames if he did not, and he yielded. For two years little was heard from the Adventure Galley, either in New York or London, but that little was bad. Ships brought stories that Kidd had turned pirate. One report was that he had taken a great ship, the Quodah Merchant, and had left his own ship to cruise as a pirate in her. This was had news for Capt. Kidd's wife, faithful and anxious in their New York home, waiting with their two children for his return. It disturbed Kidd's noble partners also though for a different reason. Kidd was compromising them. He was not careful enough. He must be dropped. So they sent warships to hunt him

The Director of the Census is Edwin Dana Howard, a Michigan man, born in 1871. For two years he was legislative librarian of the New York State Library. For another year he was assistant professor of administration and finance at Stanford University. From 1900 until 1902 he was secretary of the industrial commission, and for a short time before going to the census bureau as special expert he was instructor of economics at Harvard.

The history of census taking in this country may be divided into three periods, determined by fundamental acts of Congress. The first of these extends from 1790 until 1850. During this period the Department of State had charge of the work, while United States marshals and their assistants supervised and collected the data. In the second period, extending from 1850 until the law of 1902 was passed, the Department of the Interior had charge of the work. The laws of 1902 and 1903 providing for the permanent organization and changing the bureau from the Interior Department to that of Commerce and Labor mark the beginning of the present epoch.

As early as 1810 an attempt to include in the census information pertaining to manufactures of this country was made, though it met with little success. The act of 1850 increased the objects of inquiry to include mines, manufactures and agriculture, and with each succeeding decade the scope of inquiry has been enlarged until the mass of information has become too heavy to handle with ease, and much of it is out of date before it is put into available shape. The eleventh census was not published until seven years after it was begun. The census of 1880 appeared in 1889. For each enormous sum of money are spent, thousands of clerks are employed, tons of literature distributed.

The four principal reports of the census of 1900, those on population, agriculture, manufacturing and vital statistics, filled ten quarto volumes, 10,000 pages of printed matter, and with the special reports sustained the claim that in the matter of census taking the United States leads in scope of inquiry, combinations of facts and costs incurred.

as a pirate. While his backers were anxiously waiting to hear of his capture Kidd appeared unexpectedly on the West Indies, where he reached at Anguilla April 1, 1699, heard that he was wanted as a pirate and now decided to find Bellomont and set himself straight if he could.

Capt. Kidd was prepared to swear to Bellomont that he was innocent of piracy; that he had taken only ships which sailed under French papers, and that whatever acts of a piratical nature he had committed were by his crew, who had mutinied, and locked him in his cabin until the pirates were accomplished. Kidd approached the land first in Delaware Bay, near Lewes, and sent ashore for supplies. He did not go ashore here nor did he land any goods. A chest owned by James Gillam, a pirate, who was a passenger on Kidd's vessel from Madagascar, was landed here by its owner and placed in safe hands. Several people who sold Kidd supplies were on his vessel. They were later arrested and swore Kidd landed no goods.

Kidd's movements from this point on can be traced. He was anxious to communicate with his wife and friends in New York, and to that end he steered for Long Island Sound, opening it at the east end and proceeding as far as Oyster Bay. Here he went ashore and sent a messenger to New York with a letter to James Emott, a lawyer, and a message to his wife. Emott, whose practice embraced the defense of pirates, hurried to Oyster Bay and went on board Kidd's sloop, which sailed at once for Rhode Island. Here Emott was landed in Narragansett Bay, probably near Point Judith, to proceed to Boston, Lord Bellomont being there. Capt. Kidd's advocate arrived in Boston on June 13, 1699, and went at once to Bellomont's lodgings. Bellomont promised Kidd security "if he would prove himself as innocent as Emott said he was."

About June 25 Kidd headed for Boston, after taking on a pilot from Rhode Island—one Benjamin Bevins. This pilot naturally had charge of the sloop, and no treasure could have been landed without his knowledge. He was later a witness for the government. The San Antonio put in at Parham's Cove, a convenient harbor on Vineyard Sound, and there Kidd landed "a bale and two barrels of goods," which were "left with the man there," to be called for on his return. The bale and barrels were duly received. Like all the rest of Kidd's property, the value of the goods and articles recovered from Kidd's sloop, less the goods left on the Quodah Merchant, which were sold by Bolton at auction, were sent over to Mr. Gardiner. It is known from an inventory made by five commissioners sent by Massachusetts to collect Kidd's property: "The original of this inventory still exists. The treasure left at Gardiner's Island was listed in it as follows:

- No. 1.—One bag gold dust 60 1/2
- No. 2.—One bag coined gold 12
- No. 3.—One bag dust gold 2 1/2
- No. 4.—One bag, three silver rings and sundry precious stones 4 1/2
- No. 5.—One bag unpolished stones 4 1/2
- No. 6.—One pure crystal and brazer stones, two Corneleon rings, two small agates, two amethysts all in the same bag 1 1/2
- No. 7.—One bag silver buttons and a lamp 20
- No. 8.—One bag broken silver 17 1/2
- No. 9.—One bag gold bars 23 1/2
- No. 10.—One bag gold bars 23 1/2
- No. 11.—One bag dust gold 5 1/2
- No. 12.—One bag silver bars 212
- No. 13.—One bag silver bars 309

Besides this treasure the commissioners seized on the San Antonio and at Mrs. Kidd's lodgings about as much more.

TURKEY GETS REVENGE FOR TEASING 7 YEARS AGO

Does a turkey remember the same remarkable mental faculties as does the elephant? A turkey on the farm of Amos Hollister, near Benton, Wash., was teased into anger over seven years ago by a little girl with yellow curls. The other day the same little girl, now grown into womanhood, wearing the dresses of the day's style, appeared upon the lawn of the same farm and was attacked by a gobbler enraged beyond all turkey sense, and continued the fight until he was subdued and placed in a pen. Over seven years ago Miss Elsie Gunther visited the farm of her uncle and teased the gobbler with a cane which had ribbons tied to it. The turkey chased her around the barnyard.

The incident was forgotten and school work and business kept the niece from again visiting her uncle until seven years had passed. Miss Gunther, free from school duties and languishing for the free air of the country, went to the Benton farm last week. The first thing she did was to trip across the barnyard toward the cow pens as she had done years ago. Before she was across the lawn a big turkey gobbler, the same one which attacked her seven years ago, flew at her feet and struck her a blow that almost threw her into a heap. The turkey continued his attack until Hollister captured and imprisoned him.

It is a happy coincidence that the year which witnessed the entrance of the White Star Dominion Line Luratic should also be the centenary year of the introduction of steam navigation on the St. Lawrence. The idea of applying steam power to the boats which a hundred years ago carried on the limited transportation between Montreal and Quebec originated with the late Hon. John Molson, whose name is perpetuated to-day in one of the banking institutions of Canada, which bears the family name. The "Accommodation" was the name of the Molson steamboat, and she was built on the bank of the St. Lawrence at Montreal in the summer of 1806, and the event was fraught with great importance to the trade of the country, greater by far probably, than the prime mover in its accomplishment even dared to imagine.

The steamboat "Accommodation," which ushered in such an epoch marking period in the history of Canada, was 75 feet long on the keel and 35 feet on deck. She had berths for twenty passengers which was probably would be considerably augmented the following year. She received her impulse from an open double-spoked, perpendicular wheel on deck side without any circular land or rim.

In the Old Days

In the old days' hardships innumerable presented themselves in the land journey, whilst dangers by day and by night stared the hardy voyagers in the face when they made their journey between Quebec and Montreal. The heavy and swift flowing currents of the river made the upward journey very difficult, and many laborious detours had to be made to accomplish the journey.

To go on with the historical side of the narrative, it may be stated, the Montreal Star says, that with all its inconveniences, the mode of travel introduced by Hon. John Molson was a success, for the following year we find him applying to the legislature of the Province of Quebec "for the exclusive right and privilege of constructing and navigating a steamboat or steamboats within the limits of the province for a space of fifteen years."

In 1812 he built another and larger steamer of 130 feet keel and 34 feet beam. The name of which vessel was "Switzerland."

Following the "Switzerland," Mr. Molson proceeded to carry out his idea of operating a fleet of river steamers, and the construction of each one led to improvements in matter of size and accommodation.

Up to about 1848 a great many people preferred to drive in caissons over rough roads between Montreal and Quebec, but by that time the service had been so greatly improved that the steamboat came into more general favor.

A few years afterwards attention was devoted to the building of powerful tug boats on the river against the current. At one time open were croked up and driven to the river side, waiting to assist in addition to the oxen there was one horse as leader. This system prevailed up to the year 1832. At that period wharves did not exist, the boats drew up to the shore as close as possible and made fast to piles temporarily driven in the bank of the river.

The first records of accidents to steamboats on the St. Lawrence are those of the "Waterloo" and "John Bull." The former foundered in Lake St. Peter and was replaced by the "John Bull," a fine boat 190 feet long, which was burned in 1838. It was related of the latter boat that she earned more money while at anchor than while in operation. This arose out of the fact that she burned so much coal that she was unprofitable, but while at anchor was often used as the official residence of His Excellency the Governor-General, Lord Durham.

The third steamboat accident of which there is a record, was that of the "Montreal" which was lost in a snow storm near Beauport in November, 1833.

First Iron Steamers

The first iron steamers came into use on the St. Lawrence about 1842, the pioneers of that class being the "Prince Albert" and "Iron Duke," which were used as ferry boats between Montreal on the one side, and St. Lambert and Laprairie on the south shore. This was long before the Victoria Bridge was built, and passengers from the south by the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railway were landed on the south side and were conveyed across the river by these steamers. These boats were built in Scotland and brought out in sections, being put together in Montreal.

The year 1845 saw the advent of the Richelieu Steamboat Company, which was destined to play an important part in St. Lawrence navigation in after years, much larger than the originators of the service ever dreamed. From the modest beginning of running some market boats to Sorel, to enable farmers to market their produce in Montreal, the company has by steady growth and amalgamation with other companies, developed into one with assets exceeding $4,000,000 to its credit and operating steamers of all sizes, through and local, from Lake Ontario to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

During the recent revolution in Spain the tramway system of Barcelona was attacked by the rioters at many points, the tracks being destroyed and cars overturned and burnt. In the fighting and rioting women and children took a conspicuous part, for the rioters who confronted with troops placed the children in the front line, the women in the second, and the men themselves formed a third. Under cover of the women and children the men attacked the police or soldiers, who were unable to discharge their rifles against defenceless women and children.

FARM DATA TO BE TAKEN

Census Men Perfect a Schedule of Enumeration

IMPORTANT PART OF WORK

Accurate Statistics to be Secured Concerning Agriculture, Manufactures, Mines, Quarries

Washington, D. C., Sept. 5.—Farm economists and statisticians learned in agricultural problems appointed as expert special agents for a brief term, are now in Washington assisting Census Director Durand and his staff in the formulation of the agricultural schedule of the thirteenth census so that the questions to be asked by the census enumerators shall be easily comprehended by the farmers of the country and so draw out the information ordered by Congress to be ascertained. At the same time these practical steps are being taken by the census bureau, the farmers themselves will be called upon to help push the statistical plow over the county wide field of farm data. It will be suggested by Director Durand to the farmers that the work of securing accurate returns at the coming census of agriculture, which will be taken April 15, 1910, at the same time as the count of population, will be greatly facilitated if the farmers will keep record of their farm operations during the year 1909. This effort to secure the farmers' personal co-operation is but one of a number of ways and means chosen in the effort to secure an accurate, expeditious and economical census concerning population, agriculture, manufactures, mines and quarries, which are the subjects of inquiry in the census law.

GREAT GOOD IS EXPECTED

Great good, it is expected, will be accomplished by getting into direct contact and co-operation with the farmers. Some of the instruments which will be used to reach him and which promise practical results are the state commissioners and the state boards of agriculture, the state agricultural colleges, the farmers' unions, the patrons of husbandry, the farmers' institutes and the agricultural experiment stations. In fact, all the existing organizations for the education and betterment of farmers, while the public press will be an important factor in this work. It is estimated that millions of farmers will be reached at their homes or at their mutual improvement meetings by the contemplated method of circulating preparatory information. The questions about farm operations will relate to the present calendar year, 1909, but, on the other hand, the inquiries concerning farm equipment are directed toward the farmers' possessions of this kind on the day and date of the enumeration, April 15, 1910. The latter division of inquiry really amounts to an inventory. The necessity of some written or permanent record by the farmers themselves, of farm operations is obvious and its value in furnishing data more reliable than guesswork is equally evident.

SCHEDULES TO BE FOLLOWED

In order that the farmers may be acquainted as follows what operations are to be recorded, although the schedule is still incomplete in shape. Each person in charge of a farm will be asked to state the acreage and value of his farm; that is, the acreage and value of, and kept and cultivated by him; also the area of land in his farm covered with woodland; and finally, that which is used for specified farm purposes. Each farmer will be asked to give the acreage, quantity produced and value of each crop, including grains, hay, vegetables, fruits, cotton, tobacco, etc., raised on the farm in the season of 1909. Each farmer will be asked to report the number and value of all domestic animals, poultry and swarms of bees on the farm on April 15, 1910; also the number and value of young animals, such as calves, colts, lambs, pigs, and of young fowls, such as chickens, turkeys, ducks, etc., raised in 1909. He will be further asked to state the number and kind of animals sold during 1909, and the receipts from such sales, the number purchased and the amount paid therefor; and also the value of slaughtered food and the value of such animals.

Healthy Sign

The time was when people were permitted to do as they chose with what was their own. And they were considered to own their wives, their children and others as chattels. No one was supposed to have a right to interfere. A later and better civilization limits these rights for the good of the commonwealth. An enlightened public sentiment protests against the injury of the body, mind or morals of its future citizens. A man may not abuse his horse or his dog without laying himself liable to the penalty of the law. Public sentiment will not permit him to make a spectacle that is brutalizing and demoralizing. The world has progressed far since the question was asked, "Am I my brother's keeper?" And while it takes a good deal to drive a citizen to personally interfere in these cases even now, the sentiment of at least one community shows itself in the moral support given those who find themselves compelled to take measures for the good of the community. It is a healthy sign when the public makes itself felt in the support of those who are working in the public interest. —Cedar County News.
