SYNOPSIS.

Dean Blount, son of 'Boss' David Blount, Senator of the State of Georgia, had been elected by Patricia Amers, Dig, Cady, and a position with the Transcontinental railway, which is through the...

For the first few miles the trail was as difficult that aged was out of the question, but later in crossing a high lying valley the horses were pushed, and ten or twelve miles were covered in a gallop.

When the canyon trail came out upon broad uplands and became a sandy road, with ranches on either hand, Blount and his horse were directed there were no familiar landmarks to tell Blount whether his saddle was leaning out of a window.

As he was able to determine by holding his watch face up to the moonlight, it was nearly midnight when the small party of four turned out from the main road into an avenue of huge cottonwood trees.

At its head the avenue became a dimly lit driveway, and from the driveway a stately house, with a massive Georgian facade and colonnade portico, rising its black shadow across the white gravel of the carriage approach.

There were lights in one wing of the house, and another appeared behind the eaves in the entrance hall, when the leader of the party, a woman, had stepped upon the steps and touched the bell.

Blount had a fleeting glimpse of a black head with a crown of silver hair, and a pair of eyes that looked at him with a steady, unflinching gaze.

"What's his last chance for better treatment?" Blount asked, as the night and once more broke with its traditions.

"Uncle Barnabas, suppose you tell me what you think of this?" Blount suggested, "Whose horse is this?"

"It was all done so quietly," Blount was still awkwardly holding the hand of welcoming when his late father's riding jacket, down the cottonwood shaded avenue. When he realized that he was doing as well as any of his father's friends...

"There is nothing like a tavern with its twenty miles for the night," Blount said, "I don't know how for some one else, I think, and for reasons best known to themselves they brought me here, if you could direct me to some place where I can get a night's lodging."

"The card is hardly necessary," she said, and then, to his complete bewilderment, she very like your father, Mr. Blount.

"You know my father?" he exclaimed. She laughed softly, and every one knew that his father was not only a man of letters, but a man of letters who had been riding for years in the background.

For all this forgetfulness the little lady with the dark brown eyes was so good natured, and so kind, that he knew it Blount found himself chatting companionably with her and finding her charmingly receptive to his tales of his adventures in the desert.

"With a touch of hospitality which carried Blount back to his one winter in the desert, the hostess, with him as far as the staff, food, and her 'good night' was still ringing merrily in his ears when the old negro lighted a candle in the guest room, but another stick of wood on the small fire that was crackling and snapping cheerfully on the hearth and bobbed and bowed his way to the door.

"Blount saw his last chance for better treatment," Blount asked, as the night and once more broke with its traditions.

"Uncle Barnabas, suppose you tell me what you think of this?" Blount suggested, "Whose horse is this?"

"I suppose that is Matheo Majah," Blount said, "What's the name of the little lady who was sitting up late and why she had the ten things out. She was looking at me. Then to the thorough quartet, threatening to erupt and keep him awake: 'See! Go away! Call it a pipe dream and let me go to sleep!'"

CHAPTER V. THE WARRIORS.

WHEN ERAN Blount opened his eyes on the morning following, he found the sun shining brightly in at the bed's head window, and the fresh air from the hearth, and his father's head, a little grayer, but with the same rugged face and kindly eyes, was standing at his bedside.

"Eran, boy, and 'Father' were the only words of greeting, but the night had griped them both with was for Eran a renewal of the boyhood and a sufficient promise for the future.

"Did the little-er-did Mrs. Blount tell you that I was here?" "She did not say," Blount could tell me much more. How on top of earth did you happen to blow in at midnight with Jack Barbo for your head leader?"

"Who is this abolitionist Barto who comes around preaching the holiness?" "He is a sort of general utility man for Hathaway, the head-packer of the town in that line, and I suppose he is supposed to be a timber cruiser and log scaler, but I guess he doesn't work at his trade."

"The big man was leaning against the foot of the bed and growling thoughtfully. 'He is about the same as you into Lost River, did they? He'll have to look into that a little, I say. Who set them on, son? Got any idea of that?'"

"I have a very good idea—a man who came across in the Pullman with me from Omaha; tall and rather stumpy and with a hatted face and big eyes. I didn't know his name, but he said he was interested in mines and timber."

"What's why the little lady who was sitting up late and why she had the ten things out. She was looking at me. Then to the thorough quartet, threatening to erupt and keep him awake: 'See! Go away! Call it a pipe dream and let me go to sleep!'"

"I've kept it just as it came to Eran," his father said gently to him.

THE EARLY WORM.

A father had been lecturing his young hopeful upon the evils of staying out late at night and getting up late in the morning. 'You will never amount to anything,' he continued, 'unless you turn over a new leaf. Remember that the early bird catches the worm.'

OBITUARY.

M. R. Rickabaugh was born in Jackson county, Ohio, on March 17, 1848, and departed this life on April 30, 1911, aged 63 years, 1 month and 13 days.

He spent his boyhood days in Ohio, and at the age of 16 he came west with his parents, settling in Mills county, Iowa, on the very spot where the town of Malvern is now located. At that time the town had not yet been started, and the young man engaged in farming, but after the town was built he engaged in business there. In 1873 he was married to Anna Knapp, and from the union there were born two children, Wilson, whose home is in Wayne, and Edith, now Mrs. C. F. Potter of Minneapolis. Shortly after this, Mr. Rickabaugh entered the bar business, later removing to Fremont where he was in charge of a law office for five years. After spending two more years in Iowa, at Silver City, he finally moved to Wayne, in April, 1888, where he has since resided. During this time he has been engaged in the bar business continuously, except for two years, during which he served as sheriff of Wayne county. He was married in 1889 at Silver City.

—Emma Richmond, who survives, is left. From this season she will have two boys—Boel Rickabaugh, of Wayne.

Besides his three children and his wife, Mr. Rickabaugh leaves to mourn his loss, two brothers, L. P. Rickabaugh of South Omaha and B. P. Rickabaugh of Tabor, Ia., and one sister who resides in Minnesota. On account of sickness in her family, one daughter, Mrs. Potter, was unable to be present at the funeral.

While a young man Mr. Rickabaugh was baptized as a member of the Baptist church, although he afterwards identified himself with the Methodist Episcopal church. As he was one of the early settlers in Wayne, he had a wide acquaintance and was respected by all. Devoted to his family, with an even disposition, careful of his speech, and seeking always to live honorably in the sight of his fellow men, he leaves a large circle who have been greatly grieved and shocked by his sudden departure from this life. Although the cool came suddenly at last, he has not enjoyed good health for several years. A rheumatic trouble of about fourteen years' standing caused him much bodily affliction, though he was patient and uncomplaining, so that even his family did not know how much pain he had to bear. His late illness began on Wednesday of last week. On Thursday he was down town for the last time, although so one then thought his condition serious. On Sunday at a little after noon the end came sudden, but painless and quiet. His body was buried, and his long struggle with bodily weakness was past. The death of this loved one suggests these words of faith:

One sleeps so calmly, thought,
—Guesses me'er or a'er;
I'm nearer home today,
Than I ever have been before.

Nearer the sound of life
—When we've had our burden down;
Nearer leaving the cross—
Nearer wearing the crown.

Savior, be near when my feet
—Are slipping over the brink;
For it may be I'm nearer home—
Nearer than I think.

The funeral services were held at his late home Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, after which they were conducted by Rev. Alexander Corkey of the Presbyterian church. Music was furnished by the Baptist choir. Interment took place in Greenwood cemetery. A large concourse of sympathizing friends attended, and many beautiful flowers were placed on the casket in which the deceased was held.

WILL NOT BE CANDIDATE.

Sheriff Grant Means says he will not be a candidate for the sheriff's office, nor any other county office, at the coming primary. He further says he has no aims at this time to seek the office of Wayne county for their hearty support of the last election, and also to thank the many friends who will want him to be a candidate, and also the editors of the different newspapers of this county for their fair treatment in past campaigns.

CARNIVAL TO BOOST LOCAL BASEBALL

Number of Ball Games Among Attractions of Event—Wayne Team to Be Stronger Than Ever.

GEORGIA MINSTRELS

Appearance is everything. You can not help but be impressed with the appearance of Richard A. Fringle's minstrels when they visit your city.

No old hand-me-down, faded, worn-out minstrel, no shabby, slip shod paraffin. Instead you will see the latest dressed minstrel parade you have ever seen on your streets.

The performance given by their white company, unlike many given by their black competitors, is strictly clean and refined. Not a suggestive word, song, joke or action finds a place in their program.

The motto of cleanliness is doubtless the keynote of their success, for they are packing the theaters throughout the country.

There will be a big free street parade at noon, headed by the best minstrel band in America, and a concert in front of the theater at 7:30 o'clock in the evening.

Make a note of the date, at the opera house, on May 11.

ORIENTAL MAY PARTY

An Oriental May party will be given at the opera house Monday, May 15, for the benefit of the library fund.

A special feature of the entertainment will be the Professor and Mrs. H. H. Bright, talk, who the Philippines, and they will appear in native costumes.

The school board met Monday evening to organize for the year. The following officers were elected: W. W. Moran, president; Paul Kohl, vice president; and W. M. Orr, secretary.
