MISS MORGAN'S TRIP ABOUT TRIP ABOARD

POINTS OF INTEREST VISITED Wonderful Alps Described by Wayne Traveler - Greatness of London - Homeward Bound.

August 27, 1913. Dear Herald: - There is an end to all things, and an expedition trip to Europe is no exception. It has been one of great interest. Parts of the trip have been by land and other parts by sea, and we have had great opportunity of seeing how the other half lives. I think we shall have to go into Asia before we find any type with which we are not fairly familiar in America.

Our journey from dirty, noisy London to the Alps was made in twenty-four hours. It led on the big Mediterranean. Our visit at Milan was interesting in extreme. The cathedral there with its myriad of spires and pinnacles, crowning the roof and filling the air with its shadows, and its summits of marble and stone, is one of the most wonderful things I have seen. Napoleon, placed there by his own order, is the most beautiful structure I have seen.

Our visit to the grand little town of St. Moritz, Italy, and Switzerland, where there are no more but such persons who are not in the Alps, was most interesting. The great separation of the Alps was crossed the Alps. For some of the way it seemed that we were in France as much of the time as we were in the Alps. The mountains are so wonderful in the Alps that they are not to be missed. The St. Gothard is nine miles long, with double track and ventilated. It took us twenty minutes to pass through, using two engines. We climbed the Rigi on a funicular. It is now what is known by a view of the Alps. The Swiss cities of Lucerne, Interlaken, etc., are full of attractive shops, the greatest source of income being the tourists. We passed out of Switzerland through a country that is very productive in Southern Germany where they were busy with their harvest and here the fields were larger than we had seen before and in a few places harvesters were being used. There were more or less harvesters there.

Our visit to Heidelberg gave us a good understanding of the university and the building system. The most interesting of all, however, was the trip down the Rhine. We provided ourselves with a map showing all the castles and towns and a book of Rhine legends and spent one day in fairyland.

Chicago showed us another wonderful cathedral of quite another type, though of Gothic architecture. - We then passed rapidly through the Netherlands. Our first stop in Amsterdam was particularly interesting by a former townsmen and member of my university class who is in the consular service there. The country is very flat as we read, and might, I think, be called the land of canals, waterways and Holland. They have some interesting things in way of cathedrals, galleries, and quaint costumes. - The city of Brussels is very substantial and progressive. The journey to Paris gave much the same country that we had seen in Germany. Paris was our mecca. It must be called the city of superlatives. The largest square, the finest opera house, the largest gallery, the highest tower, etc., and it is beautiful. Small wonder that France was a very pleasant one, and one can easily realize how Louis XIV. brought France to build and maintain his court there. London is the preface of all with its many and its buildings such as the British Museum, Bank of England, National Gallery; its historical structures such as the Tower and London Bridge, and its quaint old haunts such as the Old Curiosity Shop and places made famous by Dickens and the Charles Dickens, an old lion which is kept just as it was when Samuel Johnson and other celebrities used to dine there. It is famous for its buildings which are served three days each week, and for its well-kept streets and the Charles Dickens, an old lion which is kept just as it was when Samuel Johnson and other celebrities used to dine there. It is famous for its buildings which are served three days each week, and for its well-kept streets and the Charles Dickens, an old lion which is kept just as it was when Samuel Johnson and other celebrities used to dine there.

At Windsor Castle, we had an opportunity of comparing the royal apartments of England with those we had seen in Germany. I think the grandeur lies in Palace. The boys' school at Eton, or so much as they show visitors, is a relic of the past. They take boys from 10 to 14 years of age. There are 300 boys in attendance and the school is always full, some places being taken for 1855. Some American names are put on the walls, which are covered with names of American royalty.

there is a man who is hired for the purpose of it. Oxford is a group of twenty-two universities, and is interesting. We met our first real suffragette there, though we had seen them selling the paper on the streets of London. Stratford, Warwick and Chester came in for their share of attention, and administration. Liverpool, with its seven miles of dock, is a curious place for a Saturday. The houses, nothing of things belonging to the sea. Our homeward journey is begun, and promises to be a very pleasant one. I shall be very glad, however, when I get on "vice versa," as the old lady said when she came up to a mine. Sincerely, Sara J. Kilien.

Dakota City Eagle: Prof. and Mrs. H. G. Leavens and child arrived from Michigan this week, where they were visiting relatives. They are now on their residence in the Mrs. Martha P. Adair home. Prof. Leavens will be principal of the Dakota City schools, which will open next Monday, his assistants being: Miss Marguerite Shreiner, Miss Margaret, Miss Lenora McKinnis, Miss Lenora McKinnis, Miss Mary Robertson, fifth and sixth grades; Miss Anna Snyder, third and fourth grades; Miss Esther Ross, first and second. Prof. Duensing will again act as janitor.

What's the matter? - We continue to get numerous inquiries as to the advisability of feeding wheat to hogs when it is selling at the same price per bushel as corn. When wheat is worth no more than corn, pound for pound, we would not hesitate to feed it to hogs. When fed whole, and dry, wheat is not quite equal to corn as a hog food. But if it is soaked or ground, it is fully equal to corn, and in some experiments has been found superior. In a Nebraska experiment, it was found that wheat, after being soaked for twelve hours, was worth four times as much as dry wheat. It had slightly less food value than ground wheat. Other experiments indicate that ground wheat gives more results than any other form. Under many conditions, it is probable that soaked wheat is the most practical form to use. What has about the same nutritive value as corn. For that reason it is not so good for hogs as corn. It is not so good for hogs as corn. It is not so good for hogs as corn.

John Aron left Monday for Magnolia, Ia., after spending a two weeks' vacation at home. Fred Miller and Julius Schroeder and wife and young son motored to Orchard on Thursday last. Mrs. Fred Nelson returned Thursday from a week's visit with relatives at Homer and Allen.

FIRST, JOHN WOULDN'T.

Then He Guessed He Would, but Found He Couldn't. A former resident of Ohio, now living in this state, recounts the following incident as having occurred in the neighborhood in which the narrator's youth was passed. The scene is the kitchen of a comfortable farmhouse in central Ohio; the time, early morning of a bright day some fifty odd years ago. The owner of the farmhouse, a well-to-do Quaker, had just seated himself at the breakfast table.

Silence ensued for a few moments. The members of the set of Friends, are and always have been noted for "No, no, this can't be it, John!" the plain, unadorned ecologist of their living, and this family was no exception to the general rule. The appealing odors of the good country food proved too much for the hungry neighbor, who had hurried over from his feeding without waiting to eat his breakfast at home. Rising, he approached the table.

Today's Actions. What a man chooses today he chooses for tomorrow; what he overcomes today he is overcoming for tomorrow; what he yields to today he is still more likely to yield to tomorrow.

Victoria and Her Dram. One wet day her late majesty Queen Victoria took refuge in the cottage of one of her Balmoral tenants. The guide wife brought a glass of whisky to the queen. "What the royal lady graciously took to her lips. With Highland hospitality the good woman asked the queen to take more, to which her guide man replied: "Here, woman, at a press, her majesty. She smelted had a drap afore she came here."

Satisfaction. During the South African war letters from by British soldiers had to pass through the hands of a censor. A certain private had sent four of five letters home, and portions had been illustrated by the censor and were therefore illegible on their arrival at their destination. He drew to every account with the censor, and at the foot of the next letter he wrote: "Please look under the stamp."

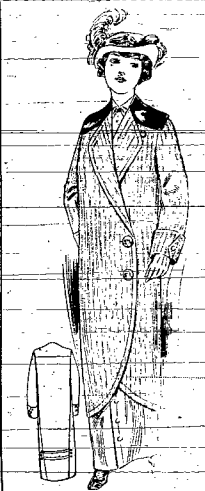

Not Wasting Any Coin. In a pretty little town in the east, so avers a senator from that section, there is a well-to-do brewer who has the price of a bag of junk and can pass up a bit on a single penny token around a "junk store" where he plays Great games, of course, and the rakeoff the caddy gets is 10 cents an hour.

One Afternoon a member of the club was seen, during absence to be the busy bee. He approached first one member and then another. Finally he stacked up against Smith.

A Realistic Kick Right. Florence Rockwell tells how a certain actor well known on the American stage engaged in a most effective battle with one who was paying Othello. The players met, and Othello, setting, lasso by the throat, began to choke him. The stage fight was real, and it was so much so, in fact, that after the performance a friend approached the erstwhile Othello and spoke to him.

"That was a most effective fight you put up tonight," he said. "In fact, you seemed to be very much in earnest." "I'm ashamed," Othello said. "What confused the fellow, he was trying to knock me out of the spotlight."

WHAT WE KNOW AND WHAT YOU OUGHT TO KNOW. The Modern Bakery. The fact is that the modern bakery, with the assistance of the greatest scientific talent of two continents, is almost daily improving its processes. From Ponsa Journal, September 27, 1883:

We were at St. Helena a few days ago. That town has been a lively place and has many good citizens. Since the death of Mr. H. H. Kunkle, the citizens rightfully consider that their prosperous town must go to the wall, and that they must move to the new metropolis.

In company with Atty. Gen. Powers of Dakota City, we shall tomorrow commence the publication of a newspaper at Hillington, to be called the Hillington Herald. This enterprise will in no way interfere with the publication of this paper, which will continue to issue with the return of each Friday as heretofore.

During the night of Saturday last the treasurer's office was broken into and the party was a robbery attempt. The origin of the money taken by the thief was not known. The safe had a combination lock, but it did not seem to be of much account, as the thief, by means of a file, was enabled by trying to force the handle to throw back the bolts. The inside lock, which is a time lock, was sent away for repairs several weeks ago. Had that been in place, the thief would not have been able to get at the money. The money was found on the floor near the safe, and the door of the safe was discovered to be shut and securely fastened so it could not be opened. Mr. Knapp telegraphed to Omaha for a lock expert, who arrived in Hillington, and opened the safe, and then it was first discovered that the money was missing.

From the Ponsa Journal, September 23, 1890:

When robbers broke their way into houses and slung round and away off goods, with terror going before them and leaving destruction in their footsteps, then it is that the hearts of the honest people are filled with indignation to avenge such an outrage as this, and although near by, at Sioux City, burglars have often tried their hands, and got away with considerable swag, yet here at Ponsa we have escaped thus far, as to speak, from such a fate. It is reported until one evening last week. On that night certain events transpired: history of which it becomes our duty to relate.

In the northwestern part of town resides a family named Brooks, on the first of these, the Brooks himself was away from home, and there was no man about the house except his son, a youth of about twenty-two summers. As the shades of evening fell down, and wind and shoddy darkness set in, the family dog lay upon the steps, the family horse that was expected to leave a rich colostrum in the upper part of their house. They had been away during the day, and this fact, together with the fact that a small sum of money was deposited upstairs, induced young Brooks to go to the door that robbers, bold, unscrupulous and remorseless, had invaded the peaceful precincts of his home, and were now lying in wait and would when night further advanced, and sleep had wrapped up the household, here forth in their furious, rash and bloody manner, and murder him and steal the money. Consequently, the young man immediately took measures for offense and defense. Grasping a formidable butcher knife he ran to the front door and stationed himself therein, having first opened the front gate, thus wisely remembering that one of the first duties of a sagacious general before commencing battle is to provide avenues of safe retreat in case defeat should become necessary. Having thus formed his line of battle in the doorway, he deemed it expedient to send for reinforcements before opening the contest. He therefore sent his brother-in-law, about six years after, Rev. Mr. Smith, who heard the news but who was now downtown. Accordingly, he had come down on a run, and hunting up Mr. Smith, told him that robbers had broken into the house, and that he had been back with him. On their way, they overtook Mr. Clark, Jr., and impressed him into the service, and all soon arrived at the scene of danger. Here they found Brooks still intently holding the post in the doorway, and in a thoughtful manner, though with a shivering lip, waiting for the assault. On asking about it, it was seen that the only weapon of war the whole army had was the butcher knife. The little brother was therefore sent to a neighbor's for arms, and he soon returned with a revolver. It was an ancient firelock, and might possibly have been young at the sight of Troy. Yet, in the darkness, its slight defects were not evidenced, as will be seen in the search it did just a good execution of its duty. Mr. Smith's rifle was also found to be in good order. The boys and arms all being provided, General Brooks before leading them to the field of battle, took the pistol, and addressing his men, pointed out the dangers to be encountered, and directed Mr. Smith to take charge of the butcher knife, which, however, he declined in favor of Clark. The general then said that as soon as they met the heads of armed and desperate robbers upstairs, the boys were to fire, and when that happened, he wished Mr. Smith to take the revolver and finish the battle.

The faces having formed for the purpose of advancing upstairs, the general lifted his voice and in words trembling with brave emotion, warned the robbers that their work was all done about to be killed. And, rattling his revolver, he resolutely pushed forward legs which seemed to want to go another way. Then came Clark with the butcher knife, with which he occasionally prodded his leader in the back, when he knifed or wobbled. The next should have been Rev. Smith, but alas, at this critical period he hauled off and retreated from the field. Thus, the army was depleted one third, without firing a shot. Nevertheless, notwithstanding these circumstances, the remaining two continued their march upstairs, and after some time, being often required to pause to reform the line and brace up, they arrived at the top. And now of three or four rooms containing the money of Mr. Marshall, Ponsa, they descended the well-cut floor, and there made a dash as though a whole regiment was at their heels; then they partly opened the door, peered in and, without making a sound, the robbers with in never let on, never said a word or made a sign of their presence. Then the general ordered Clark to deploy in and re-entrench. While he waited here the post at the door, Mr. Clark accordingly made out, and explored the mysteries of the room. The robbers still making no resistance, the general moved to Clark's assistance, and together they examined the premises.

They stripped off the bedsheets from the bed, and searched the drawers, boxes and trunks, and with the bedposts punched and jammed into every nook and cranny where a robber might be hidden. Only once, when pushing and prodding under a bureau, did they think they had caught the head of a snake. Heaped the ready revolver in the general's strong right hand, and he prepared to shoot at once. Things were evidently approaching a crisis. Fortunately, at this juncture, it was discovered that what had been supposed to be a robber was a bag of old clothes. In fact, no robbers were found, nor anything with the disposition of one, except a mouse which crept timidly along the wall, to see what all the uproar was about.

Having thus defended the domicile, the general confidently ventured to what he would have done had he seen the robbers. Then they went downstairs, and the conflict ended.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Lincoln Journal: If the falling off in attendance at this year's state fair had occurred in a normal September week, the fact might have a dire significance. It would signify a people downcast by corn failure. But what we have is the attendance running equal to the best records up to this year's date, though somewhat less than the last two years, in spite of extremely unpropitious weather. Dust, wind, and abnormal temperatures are more than enough to account for the slump in attendance. There isn't a crack in the situation wide enough to admit the story that people stay at home because of bad crops. We couldn't imagine more of them braving the elements to come if the corn ears were thick as stone-piles and heavy as lead.

Back of intense depression has probably lessened of late, in fact, both here and in the east. In spite of widespread gloom to crops, other than wheat, conditions seem to be shaping themselves for steady business with prospects of a somewhat better year in local crops. World conditions have lessened the money stringency somewhat. The fall figure of the last three years has left business in light marching order. And political uncertainties have now given away to certainties.

The last factor is important. Six months ago nobody knew what to expect of the new administration. Business had to mark time, uncertain what was to be done at it. Now everybody knows where the government is to go. It is pretty generally conceded that there is to be currency legislation on the lines of the bill soon to be introduced in the house of representatives.

Wilson has been steeled up as a progressive but not a radical, and such a man holds things in hand—of evolutionist rather than a revolutionist. So the banks know what to expect, and the manufacturers know what to expect. Trust legislation has not been outlined, but nobody supposes that the trust laws will be brought back, in all, by jackknives rather than crowbars. Nobody is dumbly apprehensive any more, and no reason remains why business and industry should not go forward quietly prosperous in the coming fall and winter. There cannot be a boom on such short crops. Granger railroad stocks may even sag a bit with no corn to haul. But there are no breakers in sight.

After a heavy meal, take Doan's Regulat and quiet your stomach, liver and bowels. Regulat is a mild laxative. 25 cents at all stores.—Ad.

Office Declined. English as she is 'spoke' will ever have its pitfalls for foreigners though some do not so deep as the following: A Frenchman was forced to go to a friend for advice.

"Can you tell me," he asked, "what been in the pot and a pole bear? For is a pole bear?"

"A pole bear, you mean?" "Yes, yes; what is he called?" "Oh, he is a bear that lives on the ice and eats fish."

"Mon Dieu! And me do that? Never! Never!" "You do it? What do you mean?" "Well, a man in de house were to force me die, and they say me will die, I do not bear certain poles more and eat fish! Not even for a dead man! Never! Never!" - Chicago Record-Herald.

Misunderstood. She was a plump widow with two charming daughters. She had been a "fretful" just a year and was beginning to wear her cheeks' light.

With the same, when the new curate called upon her she sighed: "Ah, I feel the loss of my poor, dear husband very much; I never have any appetite for anything now."

The curate was all sympathy and in the endeavor to cheer her by pointing out what a comfort to her two daughters must be replied:

"I can quite understand that, but you are a widow, and a young lady, and 'S-S-S' - interrupted the indignant lady, "allow me to inform you that I am not used in at all!"

Agreed With Him. J. M. Barrie, the popular novelist and playwright, glorified in smoking more than one, but on a certain occasion tried to induce a snucker to desist. It happened thus:

Mr. Barrie returned to his room one day and discovered his page boy puffing hard at a dirty clay pipe.

"My boy," said the novelist, "it is very bad for you to smoke that coarse black twist. You will make yourself old before your time."

And so he went on till he had delivered a long and what he believed to be a telling lecture. A day or two later the youth left without giving notice, and shortly afterward Mr. Barrie brought some friends to his flat. Being using them a special treat, he went to a cabinet where he kept a store of very choice cigars.

You can imagine his chagrin when he discovered that the cigars had vanished, and in their place were the boy's clay pipe and the following note:

Dear Sir - I agree with you that it is bad for a boy to smoke that filthy pipe, but I am more than willing that I have finished your cigars.

She Told Him a Lie. He had been dining well, but not too well, and the next morning his conscience as well as his head smote him pretty considerably. Yet with dignity to struggle down breakfast, and to make an attempt to toy with the dainty and tempting dishes which his dear little wife had so thoughtfully provided.

He sat at the table, and he thought as she watched his ineffectual endeavor to do justice to the maternal repast, an afraid that I told you the yesterday, and I want you for my dear me."

"A lie," he asked wonderingly. "Yes," she told him, "because you will remember I said to you, 'You'll be home early, darling.' Well, it wasn't true!"

And he went out a sadder and wiser man.

It Came Back. Weedon Grossmith in "From Stadio to Stedon" tells us that he was partially responsible for the incident in "Charlie Auld" where the latter is made to lend the money for his own tip.

Grossmith at the time was living at Cannonbury, and Branch Thomas, proprietor of "Charlie Auld," was one of his friends:

"I had had a dinner party, and as the guests were leaving Branch whispered to me, 'Old chap, could you lend me 5 shillings?'"

"I said, 'I have the money for it, but I don't like to lend it to a man who has just said, 'Daughter!' I replied, but discovered I had no change. 'One minute,' I said, and got hold of Smith, the butcher, who always carried about a bag with a goodish amount of silver therein. 'Smith,' I asked him, 'have you got 5 shillings about you?'"

"Yes, sir, certainly, sir." And he handed me a large new five shilling piece. "I am happy to lend you that five shilling piece, but I would rather have it smaller. It's sometimes difficult to change. He said as I took it, 'I'm glad to see the number and I'll give you five shillings more.' He thought me and wished me good night."

When all the guests had departed I observed Smith printing, and he said, holding the five shilling piece in hand, 'I'm glad to see the number. See what Mr. Thomas gave me?'"

TRIED TO SNEAK UP.

But Every Avenue of Escape Has Tried Was Barred. While the Iveson platform has no monopoly of the pole bear business, it has its full share of them. One of the worst-dreaded of them is being called to the notice of some enterprising children who has a daughter afflicted with polio.

Bob Fairbanks recently told a story that Opie had told him about Opie's experience in trying to sidestep the trial of this nature in an Illinois town.

"Opie had finished his evening's story telling when a fifteen-year-old child, a combination of him and sister:

"'Mr. Read, we have a daughter who, I think, is very talented in the electric line. I wish you would come to our house tomorrow morning about 10 and hear her.'"

Opie and agonizing provisions of things that you would not want to include "Lansie," so he said:

"I'm mighty sorry, but I have to leave tonight for the west." "But there's no train."

"Yes, there's the 12:34." "But it goes east." "Did I say west? I meant east."

"But it is a freight, you know." "I have permission to ride on it." "But it is a freight train and I don't stop here."

Originally no. But I have permission from the superintendent, as he notified the local agent, and it is to stop."

"Well, that's funny. I'm the local agent." "Opie looked at the man a moment in utter defeat, then said:

"There's just one more thing I can say, and that is I'm the biggest liar in Illinois. Where is your house?" Judge.

Confidence. Deep seated confidence in the mysterious spring that sets in motion the scenery within us. By man lives much more by the bread he eats. -Charles Wagner.

Sheridan's Comment. An American gentleman, recently went over the field of Waterloo with a guide who boasted that he executed General Sheridan over the scene of Napoleon's great defeat.

"Wasn't that General Sheridan say?" asked the American. "Oh, nothing."

"He must have said something." "Well, he only said it was a good place for a fight."

His Position. At the beginning of the season Charlie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, got a letter from an anonymous source, which, upon modestly stated that he was the best ball player in his native state and that he desired to join Mack's team without loss of time.

"I'll write you a polite note, asking what position the youth played, a small detail the young man had omitted to mention in his letter.

In a week or so there came back an answer from the ambitious one, including a photograph showing him in uniform, a crumpled sheet of paper and - here - with his hands upon his knees and a set, determined expression upon his face. There was a note also. It read as follows:

Dear Mr. Mack - As you can see by my picture, I play in a stopping position. When that is ready - Saturday Evening Post.

With a Preview. An old Scotch potter was asked to try to win a match in which he was likely to be the better.

"No, no," was his reply. "Gowlin's game is degraded by the vice of gambling, hek your horse-makin', your plover shoot and the like. It is to be played for the pure love of the game."

"Fiddle," he concluded, "there's no first use in it, but I'll try you as a fiddler."

When Archdeacon Hudson Stuck first went to Alaska he found that two motives were current in that country - one commercial and the other moral. The commercial one was, "Nought for nothing" and durnd little for a dollar."

And the social one was, "Cheer up! It won't be yet to come."

"Even when they robbed you," the archdeacon said, "they did so openly and frankly, that it was hard to get angry unless you happened not to have the price."

"The man who mired my baggage a week, first at Sitka, and then at Anchorage, gave me a dollar piece for six packages answered when I said it was a robbery. 'Yes, it's robbery, but I want to see the packages first.' See what Mr. Thomas gave me?"

John in the laugh.

SCHALL & THOMAS

Wayne, the county seat of Wayne county, has been specially favored by nature. It is surrounded by the best and richest agricultural territory in the state. The city was originally settled by the highest type of citizens, and through successive years has attracted the same high class. Its business men are wideawake and progressive, and on the alert for improvements along all lines. The city has public waterworks, electric lighting plant and sewerage system. Paving and electric works will come next. The Nebraska Normal school, located here, is growing rapidly, and the state is appropriating thousands of dollars for new buildings and new equipment to meet increasing demands. Following completion of the new Science Hall last year, the state has lately appropriated $100,000 for a new central building. This growing situation, sustained and managed by the state, insures a bright future for Wayne. The city schools, in a palatial new fireproof building, are equal to the best in the state. Six churches, with substantial, modern edifices, encourage right living. They are: Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, English Lutheran, German Lutheran and Catholic. New city hall and library building erected last year. Now depot in course of construction now. Many modern dwellings going up. Wayne has a population of 10,000, and is the most conservative business head. Where could you find a more desirable city in which to live?

CORN IN PARTS OF STATE TOTAL LOSS

Yesterday's Omaha Bee: Some rain fell in parts of Nebraska Sunday night, but it was not enough according to the reports to the railroads. At Clay Center, out in Burlington territory, there was an inch of precipitation. Across the country from Stensburg there was about one-half inch, with the same amount in the vicinity of Elgar, and one-fourth inch at Holdrege. A light shower fell in Omaha yesterday morning.

Over the Union Pacific and North western there were light and scattered showers.

Bullhead men that study the crop situation say that it is now too late for rain to be of any benefit to corn; but add that a heavy shower would revive the pastures and put the ground in condition for plowing for fall wheat. With the railroads the Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and western Iowa crop conditions continue to grow worse in stead of improve, so far as corn is concerned. All over the territory in the central west, say the railroad crop experts, last week was hot and dry, destroying all hope of an average corn crop.

Corn Crop a Failure.

Superintendent Allen of the Burlington, who has kept in close touch with the condition of the crop, reports practically a failure of the crop in Nebraska. In his soil and crop report for last week, just issued, he puts the corn yield in Nebraska the lowest in years. Throughout the Omaha district, which includes the country north of the Platte river, he estimates the yield at 38 per cent of the normal; over the Lincoln division, 29; the Wynome, 20; and the McCook division, 10 per cent.

The weather has seriously affected the potato crop, and now the yield is about half of the normal. Potatoes continue to dry up and in many instances feed for animals is becoming scarce.

The state will be a trifle short of good old yellow corn.

THE DROUGHT

(Sixty in Lincoln Journal.)

Dear friends, how does the rice in vain While some, deploring, groan, But I see certain signs of rain That bid me wait and hope. The moon is low toward the south, The morning breaks in haze; But perhaps a broken drought Inside of thirty days. And when this "rough" is at an end, When pastures have new birth, When soaking rains again descend To bless the thirsty earth, Let every man with open mouth Sing songs of praise and mirth! A rain has fallen, and the drought No longer haunts the earth.

This means that pastures will revive, That fall what may be sown, And everything that lives will thrive And come back to its own.

I've tried a thousand fancy drinks to drive my large green things away, and some were mixed in Twenty minutes, and some required a half HYDRANT a day. I've taken drinks of JUICE from Asah-wah-to-Broken-Bow, and up to Namer, and some were served in flagons tall from which I might like the fountain-like "fountain" where "holding" springs abound, and swallows stuff that made me jump and nothing better have I found than water from the village pump.

The soda fountain is a peach when men in summer suits to heat, when he's on dry his lungs are scorch like windmills that are meeting out; the fountain is the corner store and one of my favorite daily haunts; and this is not so far and away as the soda fountain. I drink the more I want. My wife pretends to want soda, to raise the money for my (size and said): "You'll drink some cheap soda, such as my first man in (size and said):" I'm surprised then of the revenue which had kept me from the dump, I should say the soda fountain and draw my soldier from the village pump. And now I'm boasting Adam's ale in seven languages and more; the only drink that costs no kafe, and leaves you better than before. I argue strongly that the fountain water is the best thing I've ever drunk. I talk I swing a can of water from the village pump.

The signs all indicate hard times are coming, straight; the corn is dead, the grass is red, the groves have met their fate. For works there was a man, and on the taking plain the cattle stood and bawled for food and stood bawled in vain. The pumpkin vines decayed; the squash died in the shade; all Nature sighed, the weather dried the eggs; the farmer looked after a few fields that he raised and sighed. "Oss-fish-gee how I wish I had no touring car!" The town man wailed, "Ah me! and also Hully Cheel!" He did not hound that. "Hully Cheel, I had to go to the matron cried, "Indeed, it makes my bones bleed!—Had I not blown the pollen here for things I do not need!" Hard times are at the door; the heart of man is sore; he mourns the plunk he blew for just a week or work before. "Retrenchment" is the word that everywhere is heard; and it calls to spenders all "Retrenchment!" is a bird. Hard times will come and then, will do much good to men; we'll bend our backs and to brass tacks we'll all get along again.

I don't say to advertise unless you fully realize that truth's a daisy; preparations will not pay, though you should "print" them.

And will you to that before trying to buy some more, damaged bread, for next day's dinner? Not on your wish-ker! You will say: "I'll try some other joint today, as I'm a junior!" Old Bilks, the baker man, should be that every loaf is up in G, a perfect product, or customers will find out.

COATS FLAYED ALIVE—

Cruel Tortures inflicted on Animals in Many Parts of India.

In an interesting pamphlet issued by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, it is stated that in the Indian practice of flaying the animal, this cruel custom is still prevalent throughout the country. It is done in order to obtain valuable measurements for the market, so called, for coats, containing the finest fur ever produced in the extra length. The dreadful process is carried out by beginning the flaying at the nose and mouth of the animal, and working down the side of the neck and the throat, and so on, until the animal is dead. In one of these cases, which came under the notice of the Hon. Mrs. Chittenden, the flaying was performed in a most cruel manner. The animal, though conscious of its tortures, was miserably in pain, and had endured the initial act of torture for a period of ten days in the shape of a cat in the form of St. Andrew's cross, and the skin, torn away in flaps, fell down the animal's neck.

The practice of using domestic animals for ornamental purposes and flaying the ears and hoofs of dokeys is prevalent in many parts of India. These practices result in much suffering, though they are erroneously supposed to be for the benefit of the population, and to confer some benefit to the animal.

Butchers with one side of the face also inflicted with a heavy iron, and the animal is kept in this position until the eye is closed. These poor animals are insufficiently fed, habitually overladen with work, and their suffering is increased by the incessant working of the clumsy gear in daily use.

KING OF WILD BULLS.

The Gaur Combines Courage and Audacity with the Great Bravery of the Tiger.

The gaur is often wrongly termed "bison." The name is not correct; the bison is the bison-boss of the Himalayas and the Caucasus. The gaur, or Indian ox, is certainly the finest of all the wild bulls; he overcomes all opponents by his courage, audacity and great strength.

He is a huge beast and sometimes measures six feet to the root of the horns. In the Himalayas he is found in all other wild cattle by the prominent hump between the two horns. The latter are massive, flat at the top and ending in black, with very short, the hair.

The gaur is found both in the forest and on the mountain top, in spots of the great tree, he is extremely agile, so that he can run up the mountain slope and climb the rocks with ease.

Like the elephant, he feeds on grass and plants, and when he cannot get these he falls back on bamboo shoots and the bulbs and branches of trees.

The gaur feeds until about 6 o'clock in the morning; then they return to the bamboo forests and clearings to sleep. It is in the afternoon they come out to graze and drink. They are not timid, and several shots can be fired among a herd before they become alarmed.

Second Defense. It seems rather odd, come to think about it, that all of our big coast-defense rifles are only available without an act of Congress to fire on sea.

In their rear they are without protection and would require an act of Congress to protect their rear ends.

These big guns have a horizontal swing of only about ten degrees azimuth.

What is the use of us making these big shooting things that they could swing around the circle, so that they could defend themselves by a great variety of angles?

We could not live long with broken-up coast-defense boats, newspaper jokers, family portraits and various junk and also everything for miles around—Oakland (Cal.) Enquirer.

French Officers Are Ill Paid. The lowest net salaries of the army officers in France, they would starve to death if they had a family unless they could double their official resources by private means.

A captain has an income of $820 a year. The average captain, according to statistics, has an income of $1,000 a year. No wonder the pieces of army officers go begging in France.—Boston Post.

He Dodged. "So Burroughs owes you money?" "Well, I think he'll pay you back some day, but you can't make him hurry."

"Don't you believe it? The mere sight of me walking along the street will bring down his money."
