

FINAL PROGRAM OF WAYNE CITY SCHOOL BACCALAUREATE SERMON

Class Play Scores Gratifying Success—Graduating Program Tomorrow Night.

Commencement week for the Wayne high school started Sunday evening when the baccalaureate sermon was delivered at the Baptist church by Rev. C. L. Myers of the M. E. church. All members of the graduating class and high school faculty were present, together with a large crowd of friends.

Rev. Myers took for his text the proverb "I have more wisdom than rubies." His discourse was replete with noble and inspiring thoughts and wholesome advice, in which the dominating idea was that of independence and correct opinions reached according to right principles. This he insisted would determine future speech and activity, and therefore affect the success of the individual. He concluded by saying "This is an age of activity, and act you will. The world will soon show you powers if you husband your strength; for 'he that saveth his life shall lose it.' If you become philosophers, leave some grain of truth to be discovered by those who come after you. If you come to greatness, a niche is waiting for you. You are about to receive the credentials of your graduation. Go then, give your names to immortality, you hands to the church and your hearts to the God of all grace."

Music for the occasion was provided by the choir of the Baptist church under the direction of Prof. M. Davis, and added much to the enjoyment of the large and appreciative audience present. Rev. P. Richardson, Rev. Alexander Corkey and Rev. F. E. Blessing assisted in the services of the evening.

Class Play.
The play entitled "The Touchdown," given by the senior class of the high school at the opera-house Tuesday evening attracted a large crowd of spectators. The play, written and acted by those who attended, and in their praises of the participants, whose skill reflected the careful training by their directors, Mrs. M. C. Phillips and Miss Phyllis Brant. The play was a comedy and portrayed two selections in its usually pleasing manner before the curtain went up on the first act. The story is presented in four acts, and deals with the life of students at college.

Act one presents a club rehearsal, during which the clamor solo by Ralph Bohner, accompanied by Ensign Young, delighted everyone present. These two young gentlemen are artists of whom the city may justly be proud. After the concert, Grant Hayden is urged by the football team to take the place of Wolfe, a star who through gambling and drink has become unworthy of trust. But Hayden refuses because of lack of time, for he is modeling a figure to be entered in a cash prize competition, hoping to win, that he may keep his invalid brother in college; now that his mother has become invalid.

Wife-out-of-revenge, plots to destroy the work of art, and through deception induces Watassa, a sensitive girl, to do the deed.

In act two the work of domestic science is accomplished. Wolfe's treachery discovered, and Watassa, to make amends, poses for Grant, that he may make another figure in time to enter the competition.

In act three Grant Hayden returns to Omaha to take part in the ball coach and when a match game is all but lost, makes a spectacular run and saves the day for his college.

In act four a dance is held in Grant Hayden's honor. During which a telegram announces his winning of the prize; news is brought in that his father is again solvent; a misunderstanding with the girl is cleared up, and the climax of more than one story is reached, and all ends well, even Wolfe having promised to reform.

The parts were all well acted. Miss Mary Shannon was the most successful in her portrayal of the noble character of Grant Hayden while Wm. McEachen portrayed the invalid brother to perfection. Frank Roe as the professor, Earl Schroeder as the contractor, Temple the pastor, the villain and Irwin Sears as the football coach each made a decided bit with the audience. Fern Oman, acted the difficult part of the Indian girl, in a highly artistic manner. Clara Liedtka, the leading lady, fully met the expectations of her friends. Hattie Crockett was the school's main character true to life, while all those filling the other parts, even the minor ones, acted their parts so well that the entire production was pronounced a decided success by everyone present.

The play was a worthy high school class play, being thoroughly clean and possessing a well developed plot and a pleasing variety of characters. Members of the class of 1914 have every reason to feel proud of their last effort as high school students.

Commencement.
Tomorrow evening at the M. E. church the commencement exercises of the high school will take place. The program consists of the class address by Chancellor C. A. Fuller of the Nebraska Wesleyan university, and the presentation of diplomas by Prof. I. H. Brill, president of the board of education. Chancellor Fuller will take for his subject, "The Vision." The public is invited.

The School Exhibit.
Many Wayne people went to the city school building Tuesday and Wednesday to inspect the neatly arranged exhibitions of work done during the year by students of the Wayne Normal. The evening and drawing by the younger children showed surprising skill, and gave proof of how readily they responded to the painstaking efforts of their teachers. Work from the grades impressed on the minds of visitors the improved educational methods used and the greater results attained in comparison with experiences years ago. Products of the manual training and domestic science departments showed excellent accomplishments. The exhibition which must be seen to be fully appreciated, is a credit to students and teachers alike.

C. M. Craven has remodeled, enlarged and in all respects improved his photograph gallery. It is probably no exaggeration to say he has more floor space than any other gallery in the state. He has the several departments arranged and furnished for facility and perfection in doing photographic work, and has looked out for the convenience and comfort of the public. A visit to his gallery will show everything modern and first class. The Craven gallery now has quarters that accord with a long established reputation for artistic skill of the highest order.

The court house lawn, under the management of James Harmon, janitor, is an example of what can be accomplished in the way of getting rid of "dandelions." There is not one dandelion in the whole block, and Mr. Harmon says freedom from the pest is due to use of a sharp instrument with which every plant that appears is dug out, root and all. His experience disproves the idea that digging out dandelions multiplies them. His example in keeping the beautiful court house lawn free from dandelions can be followed effectively on any town lot in town by the exercise of energy and use of an old knife.

REQUIRES MANY MULES.
Adjutant General Logan yesterday received word from the war department that 35 escort wagons have been shipped to the Iowa military department so that the Iowa National Guard will have a full equipment for actual service.

The Iowa department has 64 wagons on hand. It requires 99 to transport the equipment needed by the four regiments doing field service.

Each escort wagon requires four mules to supply this motive power. In addition to the 99 wagons the Iowa Guard has four ambulances, so that 412 mules will be needed for the entire outfit. The government will probably go into the wholesale mule market to secure the animals.

The 35 wagons ordered sent to Iowa by the government will be needed from the warehouses in Indiana. As soon as received in Des Moines they will be stored at the state rifle range.—Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa.

NEBRASKA SYNOD OF GERMAN MINISTERS

WAS INTERESTING SESSION

Mayor C. A. Chace Welcomes Ministers to Wayne—Auto Ride Delights the Visitors.

The Northern conference of the German Nebraska synod of the Evangelical Lutheran district which met in Wayne May 14 to 17, was attended by a body of twenty-two visiting ministers.

The opening services were held Thursday evening at 7:30. Mayor C. A. Chace was present and welcomed the ministers to the city of Wayne. William Piepenstock also gave an address of welcome in behalf of the congregation. Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock the ministers were conveyed in automobiles about the city. They were very enthusiastic in their praise of Wayne, especially its beautiful public buildings and residence districts. At the business sessions, which were held mornings from 9 to 10 o'clock and afternoon from 2 to 3 o'clock, excellent papers were read on the following subjects: "Baptism," "The Four Services," "Our Answers to the Question of Doubt and Infidels," and "Is Jesus a Historical Person?" Following the services Sunday morning, holy communion was administered. At the close of the session, Rev. F. Rabe, D. D., gave a brief address in which he thanked members of the congregation and the city in general for their kind hospitality to the visiting clergymen. Rev. R. Moehring, local pastor, fittingly responded.

The Mission Festival Sunday afternoon was largely attended. Officers were elected as follows: Rev. F. Rabe of Bloomfield, president; Rev. F. Schult, Fremont, treasurer; Rev. M. Koolen, Leigh, Neb., secretary.

SUPREME COURT PUTS END TO DAMAGE SUIT

The supreme court handed down a decision last Friday, reversing the judgment of the district court for Lancaster county where Victor H. Deholt had been awarded $1,000 damages alleged by reason of the revocation of a teacher's certificate some years ago. Deholt had been engaged to teach school at Winside, and it seems the state superintendent, J. L. McBrinn, caused his certificate to be revoked, compelling him to give up his position. Accordingly Deholt alleged misrepresentation against McBrinn and sued him for damages. The supreme court sustained the action of the state superintendent, holding that if an officer performs an act in the exercise of his office which it is his plain duty to perform, his motives for such action cannot be questioned in an action for damages.

OXFORD EXPERIENCE
BY WAYNE YOUNG MAN
AS SEEN BY W. F. CROSSLAND

Narrow and Crooked Streets and Old Customs Excite Interest of Americans.

Oxford, England, April 10, 1914.

I am afraid that I have been rather negligent in writing of Oxford and its surroundings, but the place so grows on one and improves on acquaintance that what I would have written a few weeks after I arrived would hardly have been an accurate account. One must live in Oxford for some time, must become accustomed to the perpetual clouds and drizzle, and must overlook a few of the inconveniences before the real beauty and delightfulness of the place can be appreciated. It is then that one's impression of Oxford as seen from a distance comes back, and with it a deeper sense of the richness of the place, of which you never tire.

Oxford is one of the older towns. It grew up without any of the conveniences of broad and straight streets as most American towns have. For the streets are the old Saxon roads, narrow and crooked, which have been used for a thousand years to bring the produce and to drive the cattle and sheep to market—a practice, which, I believe, is still in vogue in some of the towns of forty thousand, is quite frequent. It is rather a queer sensation for an American, who is accustomed to straight streets, to become bewildered in this maze of streets and passages. The streets are every block or two, and usually end in a blind alley or a stone wall. The business section is scarcely more fortunate, for there all traffic is frequently blocked by a small herd of sheep, or by the ancient horse carriages, which are such a very poor substitute for walking. It is only recently that the town fathers have permitted a few gasoline buses to operate, but the horse-car traction service is still operated by a large majority of the older generation, who have ridden in the old trams for so many years, and who prefer to trust the animal conveyance in bringing them to their destination. On Guy Fawkes Night, which is celebrated in England in America, the Oxford students take complete charge of the service, and institute various new routes, which had not been scheduled. The towns take these disturbances very much to their hearts, of course, having become accustomed to them through five or six centuries.

A very striking feature of nearly every building, whether it be a shop, a story or a home, is the elaborate system of fortifications, which seem to be proof against all attempts of burglars. In the evening each of the shop and store windows is heavily barred and barricaded, all the collection of windows and doors giving the general appearance of prisons; each home is surrounded by a high stone wall, decorated with pieces of broken bottles—of which there are many in England—and crowned with a row of very menacing rows of rusty spikes. It does look as if the Englishman's home were his castle—at least a very highly fortified place. But one learns that these precautions are not taken against either the graduate or against thieves, but are the relic of a hundred years ago, when Oxford had but one or two policemen. The police service of today is very efficient, the policemen being exceedingly obliging and polite and capable of keeping everyone in order except the undergraduates.

One of the really humorous institutions, which you are aware of before you have been in town half a day, is the town band, a very organized music composed of half a dozen squeaky violins, a flute, one cello and two base horns, the latter instruments being the only ones that are audible when the musicians are performing. The general musical effect is by no means improved by the half a dozen barrel organs, which are manipulated by Italians, or rather by their wives, the latter turning the crank and pulling the strings. The instrument is placed in a laborious task of picking up the pennies. When two of these organs come within speaking distance of the another, the effect is wonderful. The most striking of all is the plaintive wail of a sick violin, played by a starved beggar, who is a master at bringing out the most mournful and pathetic tones, which cannot but touch your heart and pocketbook.

It is to the university, rather than to the town that the interest of the visitor attaches. Instead of a number of buildings on one large campus, as an American might expect, the twenty-three colleges, which comprise Oxford university are situated in various sections of the town. Each is a large edifice of crumbling gray stone from two to six hundred years old, which with its high wall and barred windows, might very easily have been mistaken for a prison. The porter admits you through the heavy oak-and-iron gate into an enclosed grass plot called the quadrangle, which the rooms of the students face. You visit the church—with its beautiful stained glass windows and the Great Hall, where the professors and students take their evening meal. The portion of the establishment which will please you most is the beautiful gardens, which are the pride of every college of Oxford and are one of the many subjects of rivalry among them. It is here in the stately trees, the ivy-covered walls, the grass, which is green during the whole year, and the many tastefully arranged flower beds, that you see one of the many blessings of the disagreeable rainy weather.

Each of the twenty-three colleges is in itself an independent institution, subject to the university in the question of degrees. Each college prepares the student for the grand examination, the passing of which entitles him to a degree, and the university confers this degree. This leaves to the colleges the complete supervision of all matters of discipline and other phases of student life. The preparation for the final examination is effected largely by means of the tutorial system in which the student presents his propositions to his tutor three or four times, the result of his week's reading and study. As the work is exceedingly thorough and covers even the minute details of the subject, no small amount of the reading must be done in the question of degrees. Each college of the terms, and during the long summer vacation. This is a little inconvenient for the American who would prefer to spend all of his vacation in travel on the continent. The professors do take vital and personal interest in anyone who is willing to work, and are willing to devote any amount of their time to him; but they do not strongly insist on working, if a student is disinclined to apply himself. Oxford is a regular paradise for the man who desires to study; and it is also a very pleasant place for the man who wishes to loaf.

The surroundings of Oxford form a very appropriate setting for the life itself. The high towers and their hedge fences, the extended parks, which are green throughout the winter, the athletic fields of the various colleges, the quaint stone farm houses, and best of all, the Thames river with its tributaries, which are a sort of pleasure resort during the spring and summer. There are several hills overlooking Oxford, from which a delightful view of the city may be had. Two of these hills are the site of the old city wall, an old Roman camp and various other places are a source of interest to visitors.

My Christmas vacation was spent entirely in London with two Americans, Mr. Keys of Kansas and Mr. Biggs of South Dakota, in seeing the innumerable places of interest Westminster Abbey, where all the British sovereigns are interred, was the most impressive place of all. St. Paul's Cathedral, the British Museum, the Old Curiosity Shop, the Tower of London, the Great East End or slums and a host of other places afforded a varied series of sights. The most-fascinating of all was to see and study the crowds of the poorer people, who congregate at Hyde Park Corner on Sunday afternoon to listen to the harangues of any speaker who wishes to speak. Some of the speakers were pitifully weak and illiterate, but the crowd was always good natured, never interrupting them with the sympathetic words, "Shame, Shame," which ever an especially touching scene was portrayed. The undergarments speakers seemed to attract the largest crowds, and as a rule these gatherings were more or less turbulent. A very extraordinary aspect of any argument put forth by any speaker was the persistent use of quotations from the bible, which was usually first instilled into the public alike as final authority in the controversy. On Christmas eve, we three Americans, for want of a better occupation, decided to go out and sing Christmas carols for the general edification of the public, in the manner of the beggars, who had serenaded us several times during the evening. We discarded our hats, and turned up our coat collars to give a moral effect of our suffering from the cold. After five or six more or less successful performances, we found that we had collected the fabulous sum of four cents in barings and halfpennies, which I divided equally between the two shivering beggars, whom we met on our return to the boarding house.

As this account has already reached enormous proportions, I will refrain from prolonging it further. Very sincerely,—Weldon F. Crossland.

RIGHT SORT OF TOWN.

In a recent issue of Harper's Weekly, Edward K. Graham expressed this idea of the proper town to live in—

"We do not ask for the biggest town or the richest town, so that the people at the top can have enough money to stop work. We do not ask for wisdom enough to know the means, which are the means of every good thing—to work for it, the civic will to work for them, and the material prosperity to put wheels under them to make them go."

What we have learned is that it is wise to work together for a good place to live—a good town, in a good country, in a good state. And we mean by a good place to live, a place both to make a good living and to live a good life—good money, good water, good streets, good schools, good churches. A good place to live is a place to invest money and get bigger returns, and to invest life and get bigger returns.

Whatever promotes the material welfare of the largest number of people is an essential of good government as it is of good education and of good religion. Good citizenship is not a fierce struggle in our business to take all the other fellow has and then endow a school and church for him to go for consolation. Big men in business are more and more coming to discover that the vacation which follows in business itself, and fortunate will be that community which extends to every detail if its economic life that same doctrine of fraternal cooperation which has so dominated government and the Christian religion.

"With this city, as with the individual, there can be no prosperity worth while that is not based on order, equity and a sincere devotion to the common good. A good town implies a town that is rounded out equally in all desirable features."

Some other statesman may succeed But as the night now goes, Charles Bryan seems to have the lead.

Far to the front I see him surge, With most majestic strides, While far behind comes Mr. Berge And John G. Maher besides.

Of candidates there are no lack. The end one may foretell, Since Charles has the inside track And travels to beat the oldest.

John Maher's coatails stand out straight, George Berge's speed is fair, But Charley has a winning gait And never sweats a hair.

Upon the democratic mile I see him cross the line; But will he let the people rule? So pleads this heart of mine.

I shall bemoan the sorry lack Of both my other friends, But Bryan is the smoothest duck And here my story ends.

Because no one is immune from accident or sickness. They are no respecter of persons. Accidents of the most serious character often times arise from the most trivial causes, causes that can not be averted. They lurk in every footstep. Our 20th century improvements have taken more numerous and naturally accident and health insurance is becoming popular and a necessity of the thinking man. Whether democratic editors who have been defeated by popular vote for postoffice appointments are justified in now opposing Congressman Day V. Stephens, takes of a plan, or not, we do not know. It is a fact that democratic editors, entering the primary, were invariably defeated. It is also a fact that such editors are, without exception, against Stephens' future political ambition.

THE FARM HAND

A Story of a Filartious Couple

By MARY C. EIMERDORF

Nancy Burrows was such a desperate flirt that her mother, who deprecated her treatment of young men, determined, instead of taking her to pieces for the summer where she would meet them, to pass their outing season on a farm. Mrs. Burrows selected a place in a very attractive region, but distant from any summer resort. Indeed, Nancy was obliged to remain within a few miles of whatever unless her passion for winning hearts should lead her to prey upon the farm men.

There was one in the house where Nancy and her mother boarded except the farmer and his wife and several little children. The front porch led from the window looking out over the fields Nancy could see nothing that resembled a man except a scarecrow set up in the midst of some growing crop. "If I remain here long enough," she said to herself, "I do believe I'll be spooning with the scarecrow. Oh, my goodness! What shall I do?"

The thought of the summer life full of guests, the country places of friends who had visited, the tennis, the boating, the music and dancing, and heaved a deep sigh. Then she went to her mother and promised that she would be good, very good, if she might be permitted to spend at least the month of August elsewhere. "You'll be good here," because you can't help yourself, "simply because you can't help yourself. I shall certainly not again trust you where there is a man within a hundred miles."

"I certainly do expect you to be married," her mother remarked. "I have brought you here. When you get the sense into your head to understand that marriage is the most serious event of a woman's life I will tell you to again among men. At present you seem to have no appreciation whatever of your own life."

From this speech it may be inferred that Mrs. Burrows was a strong woman, quite capable of controlling her own life. She had a very high opinion of herself when Nancy married to have something to say about the man she should choose for a husband. With these conditions going so low could she be sure that her daughter might not be caught in some one of her own traps? Once caught, it might be impossible to extricate her.

And, since Nancy was still fancy free, it seemed that this course was the best. "Every year she was older than the one before," she thought, "and she would have some appreciation of the importance of marriage. She could be trusted to be induced to select for a husband a man to be depended on to give her a position in the world rather than one whose only recommendation was that he was an excellent dancer or tennis player."

All this is full of wisdom and might have been carried out had not a certain day in the month of June come to a stopper as Nancy herself heard the matter talked about—a young certain girl he had never seen or heard of, but the name of the country was kept her away from men because she had a man for breaking hearts for pasture. The young man who heard of the matter by the hearing one of the boys of the country, was selected with a desire to have his own heart broken.

She asked the young lady's name and where she had been buried. The former he had no difficulty in learning; the latter required diligent investigation.

One morning when the July sun was shining down on a waving wheatfield Nancy Burrows heard the sound of a distant mowing machine. Going to a window, she saw a pair of horses drawing the machine in question along the field in front of her. The driver was dressed in a woolen suit, trousers and a hood trimmed, faded straw hat. Doubtless, the harvest laborer who had been hired to mow the grain.

Nancy put on a shade hat and strolled out to witness the operation of cutting the grain. She called to the machine she noticed that the man driving it was not old. Indeed, he was not older than the boy who had been hired to mow the grain. He was dressed in a woolen suit, trousers and a hood trimmed, faded straw hat. Doubtless, the harvest laborer who had been hired to mow the grain.

"Well, I declare!" muttered Miss Burrows. "How little sense of politeness these country lads have!"

When the farm hand returned he found the lady standing directly in his way, and he was forced to pull up or run over her. "Would you mind moving aside, miss?" he asked. "You're directly in my way."

"Yes, I would. I asked you to explain your machine to me, and you're treating that way."

"Having been brought to terms, the young man did not seem averse to a bit of dialogue."

"Are you working for the man who owns this farm?" asked Nancy.

"I am."

"Are you going to stay at the house?"

"No."

"How long do you expect to work here?"

"As long as I'm wanted—till the end of the season, I reckon."

The man made several attempts to start his team, but every time was stopped by a question which Miss Burrows conjured up for the occasion. At last she permitted him to go on, with the injunction that thereafter when a lady asked him for information he was to stop his team and listen deferentially.

Mrs. Burrows one morning, sitting at a window reading a novel, saw her daughter emerge from the house, looking so irresolutely, pluck a spear of grass and chew on it, then proceed down into the wheatfield where the farm hand was driving the mowing machine. On Nancy's arrival the machine stopped and a brief dialogue took place between the man and the girl. The man descended from his seat and helped the girl into it. Then he drove from the ground, walking beside the machine for some distance, when Nancy held out her hands for the reins. They were passed up to her, and with difficulty she maintained her seat and drove the team.

"Great heavens!" exclaimed the mother, "the child will fall off and be cut to pieces!"

But Nancy managed to maintain her balance, and her mother, having heard her breathe a sigh of relief, descended from her perch, breathed easier.

"If he were any one but a country bumpkin," said the mother doubtfully, "I should feel sure that he would be a gentleman."

The country bumpkin remained about the farm for some time, though he did not appear to work very steadily. Nancy found him far more capable to amuse her than the scarecrow and visited him frequently while he was at work. But she usually did so when her mother was not looking on, so that she wasn't observed.

One day the farmer said to his hand: "I'd like to hire you to amuse city boarders. I reckon you can light out. Here's what I'll do for you. The hand made no reply, but, taking his wages, departed.

After he had gone, seeing Nancy leave the house to go to work on the estate, he sauntered toward the fence. She saw him and, approaching, asked him why he was not at work.

"I'm discharged," was the reply.

"Discharged? What for?"

"The farmer says I spend too much of my time and money on the estate."

"You've been hired to amuse city boarders. I'm awfully sorry. I didn't mean to take you away from your work."

"Can't he be helped now? If he'd take me back I'd do it all over again."

"It's very nice of you to say that," said Nancy, looking him over. "I'm indebted to you for a great deal of pleasure. It's very lonely here. I'm awfully sorry you won't be here any more."

"I don't think I'll go right away. I'll stay where I am for a while to see if I can't get more work about here."

"I'm glad you're not going right away."

About the time Mrs. Burrows was thinking of taking her daughter back to the city, she was visiting one evening from the supper table. The mother went to her daughter's room, but did not find her. Seven or eight o'clock came and no Nancy. Burrows went over to some scattered houses across the road to make inquiry. She was informed that about 8 o'clock in the afternoon the discharge of farm hand, driving on the road in a resplendent mood, picked up Nancy and disappeared in a cloud of dust.

Mrs. Burrows was very mad.

Nancy didn't show up again at the farm, but in a few days her mother received word by the hearing one of the boys of the country, was selected with a desire to have his own heart broken.

"Well, I declare!" muttered Miss Burrows. "How little sense of politeness these country lads have!"

No Friend of the Militaire.

London has been having a good laugh over a recent incident in which Mrs. Asquith, wife of the premier, figured, and the story has been enjoyed all the more since for once the lady's ready wit failed her in an emergency and she remained dumb and mute instead of hurling forth one of her bright retorts.

Mrs. Asquith, so it is stated, was returning the other day from a shopping expedition and lashed a taxi. Getting in, she gave the order—"Ten Downing street."

But the taxi driver had taken woman fares to the premier's office, and she remained dumb and mute instead of hurling forth one of her bright retorts.

The East Wind.
"A little boy one evening sat down at his father's feet a long while and said:
"Well, what makes you so sad?"
"I'm sad, of course," the father answered with a groan. "The wind is blowing from the east and it's cold."

Then, from the other end of the table the boy's mother said wearily:
"Yes, Tomboy, now your father has said that the wind is blowing from the east and it's cold."

Through the friendly field of trouble
To the stream where pleasures bubble
And the wind is blowing from the east
While we tramp the weary way,
But a measure of our progress
Teaches us to stand before
Every friend who stops to greet us
And to stand before the
Friends are few or friends are many,
But the wind is blowing from the east
Who uplift our bows who do not
Give the friendship which we yearn
For, and to every body,
And to stand before the
Best friend to return.

"What are those?" he asked.

"Cotton seed furnished by the department of agriculture for distribution 'over our way,'" the southerner explained.

A sack was opened, and the Yankee examined the cotton seed with great interest. He picked up some and observed the lint that clings closely to the seed. He pulled at this, but was unsuccessful in removing any of the lint.

"My!" he said. "The department certainly treats you fellows fine. Just bits of wrapping up each seed so carefully in cotton! How do they do that?" Saturday Evening Post.

The Scrap Book

An Unconscious Linguist. Many a man has traveled afloat, if not always plied, through Europe with no other language than English at his command, but few have been so lucky as a correspondent of the New York Post, whose English was actually broken for French by the Frenchmen themselves. He writes:

"Although I speak no language except English, I have never had any trouble in traveling in Europe. In the only instance when I greatly longed to be able to speak another tongue I was helped out of a predicament in a most unexpected way. At a railway station in Paris I could not make the portiers understand that I wanted my baggage. 'Finally, in despair,' I exclaimed: 'Oh, Youssif!'

One of the porters replied: 'Oui, bah-ah! Out, out, bah-ah!' and he soon produced my trunk. That was the first time that I knew that the French have the word 'bahagage' and learned how they pronounced it.

Doing Good. O brother man, fold to this heart thy brother!

Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there. To worship rightly is to love each other. Each man's inborn, each kindly deed a ray of light. Follow with reverent steps the great example of him whose holy work was doing good. So shall the will earth see our Father's name.

Each loving life a beam of gratitude. -Wittaker.

See the Joker? Eddie Fredrickson, the cautious spendthrift, is Miss Blanche Ring's manager and was formerly her second husband.

"The present husband is Charles Winninger, her cousin and her present engagement. Miss Ring's first husband—and this is the point of the story—watched her carefully. He was Mr. Nichol, a house decorator of Washington.

Recently when Miss Ring played in Washington her third husband, the comedian Winninger, called up her second husband, McKay, the manager, and told him Miss Ring was displeased because advance sale for the opening ticket was very small.

"That's all right," McKay telephoned back. "Get Miss Ring with my compliments, to call up Mr. Nichol and get him to paper the house." -New York World.

A "Hiss in Himself." Senator Pittman of Nevada tells of meeting a man who was indeed a "hiss in himself." The senator said he found himself at a small out of the way station, where he would have to wait several hours for another train.

"You'll find it a rather dull place," said the conductor, as he descended the steps of the car.

"But, you'll have company. The ticket agent, the operator, the bagman, the stovekeeper, the postmaster, and the agent of the accident insurance company are all inside."

Senator Pittman entered the station and looked around. In the dim light he could distinguish only a very stout red haired man at an instrument.

"Where is everybody?" the senator asked.

The man looked up questioningly. "Who are the others?"

"Where are they?" he questioned again.

"The man at the telephone instrument grinned again.

"I'm up, come in and join us," he answered.—Exchange.

"Do Not Jump at Conclusions. Do not jump at conclusions and do not be hasty in judgment," said Strickland W. Gillilan.

"To illustrate my point I will tell a story of August, my pet dog. August was always jumping at conclusions.

"He would run out into the street to jump at them."

"When a horse went by August would jump at his conclusion.

"When a cow went by August would jump at her conclusion.

"One day a mule went by, and August jumped at the mule's conclusion, and the mule kicked.

"That was the last August.

"And the next day was the last of September." -Chicago Post.

Thomas C. Logan of Philadelphia is sometimes pessimistic about things in general and always particular about what eats. One day he went into a restaurant in Chicago and, after scanning the menu, said to the waiter:

"Don't you here you have some calf's heart."

"Yes, sir," agreed the waiter.

"Well, how about that?" pursued Logan at the waiter.

"Yes, sir," the waiter assured him.

"Then," ordered Logan, "bring it to me. If there is in this world such a thing as a tender heart I want it." -Popular Magazine.

Birds' Observance. "If have often wondered," remarked Mrs. Rogers, "how a horse feels."

"Horse hasn't any idea what is going to happen to him when he is harnessed. He doesn't know how far he is going or what he is going for. To be driven lather and thrifter, blindly, seemingly without purpose, with no idea of what it's all about or when it will be over—how must the poor creature feel—what must he think about it?"

"I suppose," said Mr. Rogers wryly, "that he must feel just as I do when you take me on a shopping expedition with your me!" -London Mail.

Notwithstanding his death, the will and the courage of Dr. Constantin kept his nerve and was able to turn his aeroplane about, guide it back to the Bulgarian lines and bring it down among his friends. # THE WEEK WITH THE CHURCHES

Presbyterian Church. (Rev. Alexander Forbes, Pastor.) "We and Peace" will be the subject of the Memorial sermon at the Presbyterian church next Sunday morning. Special prayer will be offered in the interest of peace, and the relation of the Kingdom of God to war will be set forth.

In the evening the congregation will unite in the union baccalaureate service at the M. E. church where the address will be given to the graduates of the State Normal school.

Children's day will be observed on June 7, the first Sabbath in June. There will be a united service in church and Sunday school, and an appropriate program, entitled "The Banner of Love" will be given by the members of the school. The ordinance of infant baptism will also be administered by the pastor, and the cradle-roll membership will be presented with the customary floral gifts.

During the absence of the pastor this summer the pulpit will be supplied for a month by Rev. Henry W. Siebert, Ph. D., of Newark, N. J. Dr. Siebert is the able pastor of the First German Presbyterian church of Newark, and is also editor of the Deutsche Abtheilung, a paper which has large circulation amongst the German people of America. He speaks both English and German, and his visit in Wayne will be an interesting one not only for the members of the Presbyterian church, but also for the entire community. He will begin his ministrations on June 14. He will also be one of the speakers in connection with Wayne's celebration of the glorious Fourth.

The communion of the Lord's supper will be observed on Sabbath, June 13, at which time there will also be a reception of new members into the fellowship of the church.

First Baptist Church. (Rev. B. P. Richardson, Pastor.) The musical numbers given by the choir, under the leadership of Mrs. W. Davies, last Sunday were unusually good. With the help of all our singers it is not difficult to furnish excellent music. All members of the choir ought to appreciate the help they can render in the choir regularly. By helping here, you are materially aiding the worship of the church. The congregation appreciates your services. The Lord is blessing you thus and will prosper you in his house.

We hope to give one entire Sunday evening service, to the forty-four of song, in June. Christianity is the world's greatest singing religion. Christian people are being called to have a rich legacy of gospel songs. When you come to church, get your heart and lips in tune. Join in this song service every time.

"The Enlargement of Zion" will be the subject—Sunday morning, June 14, at the church. There are two ways for Zion to enlarge: see the text, Isa. 54:2.

Children's day will be observed by us on June 14. We will give the evening hour for the Methodist church. We are planning a great time at the morning hour of that day.—It is to be "Family Day." We want parents and children all to come and sit together. Wouldn't it look nice to see every family connected with the church present at this service? It is worth striving for.

Next Sunday evening our people will join in the baccalaureate service of the Normal at the Methodist church. For this reason the young people's lesson hour will have to be short. Let us begin on time.

subject of the sermon will be "Jehovah Our Banner," Ex. 17:15. Man at one time was a warlike creature, but as the centuries passed on, he changed his attitude and now he looks upon war with an expression of hatred. Yet there have arisen times when he could not but fight; thus we hear Paul say, "he beareth not the sword in vain." That is whenever it is lifted by a righteous and duly authorized hand, for the cause of justice and humanity. Thus, it was when Moses led the children of Israel into Rephaim, and the Anakimites came against them, fighting was called for. It was not a case like that at the Red Sea, when the Israelites could do nothing to help themselves. The command therefore was not—stand still and see the salvation of the Lord—but rather "go out and fight." Obedient unto the command the children of Israel went out and fought, relying upon Jehovah for their strength and thus Jehovah gave them the victory. Afterwards, Moses built an altar and called it his name "Jehovah-Nissi," meaning "Jehovah is my banner."

There will be union services next Sunday evening in the Methodist church. The Ladies' Aid society met at the home of Mrs. Rogers last week. The meeting was well attended and a profitable and very pleasant afternoon was spent. The ladies completed their plans for the dinner and supper which they will serve Decoration Day. The next meeting will be held with Mrs. A. D. Erickson on Thursday, May 26. Church rehearsal every Tuesday evening.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who wish to worship with us.

Methodist Church. (C. L. Myers, Pastor.)

Next Sunday we will open the doors of the church to receive into full membership such as are prepared. If any desire, by letter, also probationers.

Junior church at 4 o'clock. Special program next Sunday. Some appointments will be made. Eighteen names were enrolled at the last meeting.

A large number were at the Wednesday evening study and interest increases with each meeting. A committee of ten has been named to secure entertainment for the delegates who will attend the district Sunday school convention. When they call on you do your best by them. Perhaps we will have 250.

If you have a receipt for a lot at the Epworth Park, Lincoln, please hand it to me that it may be signed, and a record be made as the assembly record has been burned in a recent fire.

Memorial addresses will be made in all the churches next Sunday, and the public is urgently requested to be present.

Address by Chancellor Fulmer at the church Friday evening.

St. Mary's Catholic Church. (Rev. Wm. Kearns, Pastor.) Sunday morning at 9 o'clock will be the beginning of the forty-hour devotion. Mass will begin at 9 o'clock. In the evening benediction at 7:30. Mass Monday morning at 6:30 and 8 o'clock. Benediction at 7:30.

The German Evangelical Lutheran Church. (Rev. Wm. Moehring, Pastor.) Services at 11 o'clock next Sunday morning and Sunday school at 10 o'clock.

POLITICS WARMING UP IN DIXON COUNTY The Ponca Journal-Leader has surveyed the political field in Dixon county, and finds that the following chiefs expect to file for offices: H. F. Shumway, republican, of Wakefield, Mass. to make an effort to succeed himself for state senator.

G. L. Wood, republican, of Ponca, will run for representative which office he now holds. Sheriff H. Maskell who has been sheriff for twelve years, will be a candidate to succeed himself again.

C. A. Kingsbury, county attorney, will run again. A. Y. Reed—who has been county superintendent for many years, will run again. Owen McQuillen will file for a second term as county treasurer.

E. E. Rice—who has served the county clerk for a long series of years proposes to retire from office, and will probably be succeeded by his deputy, A. N. Porter, who will file for the office. County Judge Piles will be a candidate to succeed himself.

The Scrap Book

Bad Both Ways. Dan Balfour was describing to a New York reporter some of his adventures with the British in the Sudan. "You hear our bill of fresh meat," he said, "I would from a flesh dose in the lawn to find a bus actually sitting at my feet. I reached for my rifle and with a whoosh the lion was gone."

Words of Love. Many a heart is hungry, starving, for the joy of those who bear it. Send it radiance down life's way, and the world is better for us. For the loving words we say.—Elean E. Hearard.

Bold as a Lion. Captain George B. Jenness, who was for years editor of the Ottawa Republican, was an aristocrat. During the war he took a fancy to a young colored girl and hired him for his servant. Jenness had just got a new uniform and after putting it on he said to Sam: "How do I look?"

"Elegant, cap. You look as good as a lion, sir."

"Bold as a lion? How do you know? You never saw a lion?"

"Yes, indeed, cap! That place was not at all other than the lion's den."

"How do I look?" replied Sam.

"And the lion's old comrades wanted to hear him swear they used to tell this on him.—Lem A. Woods in Kansas Editor."

Nye's Queer Compliment. Bill Nye was once introduced to Wagner, the composer. "When and how?" Dean Nye related. "Nye, the American humorist, brilliant as the best, whose comedy never falls to dejection. Max, who was tired, said: 'Never cease to mourn, told me that when he met Wagner he said to him: "Your music is beyond my comprehension, but it always feel sure when hear it it is really much better than it sounds!"

Dropped the Bagpipes. Boon after the occupation of Cairo by the British troops the late Nubar Pasha took a predilection fancy to the music of the Black Watch and had the idea of having a servant taught the use of the bagpipes. Nubar dispatched a French friend who spoke English very well to interview a piper on the subject.

"Would you play 'Weel, he micht learn or he micht no', BIC let me tell ye, it needs wad an' mickle strength ye fill the bags o' the pipes an' keep them tight, an' the bagpipes, the bagpipes shake the job on wad need be bagged a' o'er's like ye 'o' this said unmaunies, or maybe he'd burst himself."

This conversation was reported to Nubar, who took the piper's remarks seriously. So he gave up the idea of having a striver attached to his household, as the use of the bagpipes was attended with the prospect of such danger to the performer.—Westminster Gazette.

A Flinty Hearted Bishop. An English clergyman once applied to his bishop for a living, saying that he would prefer an English benefice to the French one. The bishop told the story to "The Old English County Squire." The bishop demanded the reason for this preference, and the clergyman replied: "I should require an English living, since my wife does not speak Welsh."

"Your wife, sir! What has that got to do with it?" she said, but preaches does that. "No, my lord," replied the parson, "but she lectures."

The parson got his living, but it was in the wilds of Wales.

The court favorite appealed to the king, who replied, "Steele, Steele, those who live in glass houses should be careful how they sling stones!"

Rare Ben's Text Restored.
Mr. Justice Ely's vindication of the healthiness of laughter did not tempt his lordship to a familiar quotation, most usually misquoted. The common form is "Laugh and grow fat," but the correct text is "Laugh and be fat," put by Ben Jonson into the mouth of Pan in "The Penates." The fitness does not strictly follow from the laughter in Jonson's line, but the proverbial quotation has imported that meaning.—Pall Mall Gazette.

His Cousins

They Came to See Him at College at the Wrong Time

By F. A. MITCHEL

"What's the matter, Alec?"
"Matter enough! I've an exam coming off on Wednesday on a subject I know nothing about. I'm practicing for twirler for the varsity team and have left preparation for this exam for the last three days before it takes place, when I propose to bone day and night, braced by strong tea (and sandwiches during the night), all the bell rings for the ordeal, go right to bed! I spill any of it out of my cranium or it has a chance to evaporate and so through just as if I had been studying."

"Why do you need to be so well prepared? Couldn't you scrape through by answering the minimum number of the questions?"
"I've got to take an oral exam, and you know very well what that means. I shall be called on to start in and where, hapuzard, and read it out by the yard. If I happen to strike a place I don't know anything about I'm finished."

"Well, then, why don't you carry out your plan to stuff yourself?"
"Why don't I? Read that!"
Alexander handed his cousin, William Chandler, a letter from his mother stating that his two cousins, Belle and Lucy Winchester, the daughters of her late brother, had come from Colorado, where they had always lived, to make her a visit. They had served some large uncles and were especially anxious to visit one. She had proposed to them to go to H. to inspect the college, and they were delighted with the plan. They would come down Monday morning and remain till Wednesday afternoon. Of course they would need some one to pilot them, and she had their attention directed to their stay in H. The writer thought that since the end of the term was at hand, when the breaking up was about to take place, he could not much do. Alec would have plenty of time to devote to his cousins.

"Nothing out of the end of the term," remarked Billy Chandler.
"I like that. I suppose your mammy considers exams perfunctory ceremonies. Are your cousins pretty girls?"
"How do I know? I've never seen either of them."
"Oh, you haven't? In that case I don't know but that you had better not having the muscles for athletics as you have, I'm obliged to take an interest in my studies or be bored with them."
"Will you?" exclaimed Alec, thrusting out his fist and taking his cousin's hand in a viselike grip.
"If you like." "I shall be free to do a three day grand get through my exam, and what time I don't need for that I can put into twirler practice."

Alexander was very much interested in the station to meet the incoming train, and seeing a couple of very pretty girls, aged respectively nineteen and sixteen, he stepped up to them and asked:
"Are you my cousins?"
"No, they're not the elder of the two. But you don't correspond with the descriptions we've had of you. We supposed we were going to meet an Alexander, but you're a young fellow. We cover our muscles with loose tops, and it's very deceptive."
"I'm not a young fellow," he said.
"The same," put up his lips to each girl in turn for a cousinly kiss, which was greeted without compunction. They all went to the station to meet the incoming train. They all stepped in, the two girls on the rear seats, and Billy took them to a boarding house. He had a very good idea of what would have been dangerous to his identity. Furthermore, he was not known to the two old maids who kept it, and unobtrusively gave his name as Alexander Pomeroy. Leaving the young ladies there till after luncheon, he went to the party to which he had invited a friend, Tom Ogletorpe, in the act of filling a pipe. It had occurred to Billy that one girl would be far more complete than two, so he let Tom into the secret and invited him to turn a party of three into one of four. Tom was nothing loath and agreed to join the party, and an inspection of cottage buildings in the afternoon, to be followed by an automobile ride.

Never was a pleasanter visit made by two young ladies or enjoyed more by two young men than on this occasion. The party, consisting of the two girls and Billy, went to the act building, the gymnasium, and this and that and the other "hall" donated by alumni, most of whom had been invited to the party. The girls had prepared them and gone to their long homes. There was a class reception to attend here, a debating contest, and it seemed that not one thing had been provided every day for the visitors' entertainment.
Now, it so happened that the real Alexander Pomeroy was preparing himself for an examination in college, and got a brand new practical idea into his head. "Couldn't it be a good scheme to be missed," for me to apply these principles of the ellipse, parabola and the hyperbole to my twirling? Perhaps an hour's practice with a ball would help me to catch on to the principles involved. I would understand better the reasons for our curves, and it would help me in my exams."

Throwing down his books, he betook himself to a shed erected for practice in twirling and began to throw the ball at a hypothetical batsman set up for the purpose. While doing so he heard a voice behind him:
"That's the place where our base ball pitchers learn to do the 'drop,' the 'curve' and other stunts that go to make a baseball twirler."
Looking around, Mr. Pomeroy saw his representative, Billy Chandler, Tom Ogletorpe and his two cousins, the girls, staring at him with the eyes of eighteens. Billy continued his remarks with the intonation of a Roman gladiator expatiating on the arch of Titus:
"This gentleman now practicing is our principal twirler. Twirlers are selected for having their brains in their shoulders, football men for their brains being located in their heads. I see before you Mr. William Chandler, of whom great things are expected during the coming baseball season. He is to be tried by studies conducted solely with the view to understanding the curves that will enable him to put a ball where he likes. Stop that noise, Mr. Chandler, I wish to present you to my cousins."
Alec Pomeroy ceased his practice and lumbered stammeringly toward the girls. He was in a bad way, and there was no hat on his head for him to doff to the ladies, only a forelock that hung down over his forehead. Billy noted Billy's remarks about a pitcher's brains being in his shoulders and resolved to turn the tables on him. "For my cousin, Alec," he said to the girls, "is one of the first men in his class. His intellect is neither in his shoulders nor his legs; it is all in his head. He is a pig in the matter of prizes, he is as modest as a little child. He is the son of honor and the most popular man in college."
The speaker paused for his encomium on himself for breath, and before he could recommence Billy had the girls laughing, remarking that flattery was odious to him.
"Why, Alec," said Belle, with whom he had paired from the first, "I didn't know you were such a prominent young man."
All pleasantry was at an end, and while Alec Pomeroy was scrubbing buttons on his examination his cousins were bidding Billy and Tom goodbye. On their arrival at their aunt's they astonished her by informing her they had received of her son's prominence in scholarship and popularity, which was adorned by his modesty. Mrs. Pomeroy was delighted to be informed that her son had gone into for athletics rather than study.

"This plot might have passed off with no objection had our cousin's administration sprung up between Billy Chandler and Belle Winchester. Billy was dying to see her again, but he could not get to visit her without giving away the deception that had been practiced on her. She wrote her cousin frequently, but letters being turned over to Billy by the school, he never by the name of her son's name, every letter of Billy's grew more and more affectionate. At last Belle wrote her "loved" cousin that she was about to get married. This was too much for Billy, and he started at once to see her. Billy's resignation with regard to an immediate confession, was excellent. The only trouble with them was the difficulty of his carrying them out. He had to inform them that he was Belle and Lucy on arrival and had prepared some jocular remarks when Alec's mother should see a stranger in her own son. But the girls and Lucy were not when he arrived. This upset his plans. However, he was so overjoyed at meeting with his cousins that he forgot the time being. He spent two hours with the young lady, during which, instead of beginning with a confession of his identity, he began with a confession of his feelings.
Suddenly the door of the library, in which the young persons sat, opened. The bridegroom, Mr. Pomeroy, came in close proximity to a stranger. "Aunt," said Belle, jumping up with a blush on her face, "Alec's mother stood mute with astonishment."
"Where is he?" she asked coolly.
"Here, of course. What do you mean?"
"I owe you all an explanation," stammered Billy, with a face as red as a cock's comb, and he began to tell the wrong end of his story, but he got impudently confused. But a series of questions from the older lady finally put him in a position to tell the truth, and he smiled settled on the face of Mrs. Pomeroy and Lucy. As for Belle, she didn't know whether to smile or cry or if her blushing face in a lounge pillow.

Mrs. Pomeroy hurried her mother by thanking Billy for correcting her but left in a hurry for the country to see the eve of an important examination, after which the meeting resolved itself into a reception of the new bride by the hand of Belle Winchester. They appeared to be satisfactory, and the young man returned to his home. The day after the next college commencement, at which Billy took honors, he went to Colorado to call his bride.

HAD A LIVELY NIGHT.
A Change of Cars That Only Added to the Evening's Enjoyment.
A New Yorker who recently returned from a week of a quiet experience while traveling in Switzerland. He got separated from his party one evening at a railway station, and as the train was about to start a porter grabbed him, pushed him into a dark compartment in one of the cars and locked the door. The traveler stumbled into the arms of a heavy bearded Frenchman and his wife, who received him with a wild torrent of jabbering that sounded like threats, and as the train went out he felt a corner and sank like a seal. He says:
"I was locked in that compartment for two hours, for the train made no stop for fifty miles and time passed mostly with the heavily bearded Frenchman glaring at me in the almost gloom and my keeping my eyes on him, wondering what he would try to do."
"When the train at last stopped my friends came back with the announcement that they had found a berth in a wagon lit compartment, and I thankfully quit the presence of the naggy couple and went into the lit compartment, where I found I was to occupy the upper berth. The lower was occupied by an elderly man. It was a dark night, and he was very much overcast over me. To partly explain what followed I may mention that one pocket contained a heavy silver stick. Stop that noise, Mr. Chandler, I wish to present you to my cousins."
"I was awakened by the most horrible noises imaginable coming from the berth under me. A muffled voice was heard, and I heard a man yelling in French for help, and I could hear blows. At the same instant came back on the door of the compartment and demands in several languages that it be opened."
"And what do you think had happened? That while he was gradually drifting the far cot down until it had fallen in upon the man in the berth beneath. The flask had struck him on the head, and the far cot spread itself over his face and arms."
"Awakened by the blow, which he naturally imagined had come from a woman of your kind, the old man and I had started up to find upon him what I thought was a huge hairy animal of some sort, and he was screaming and kicking and kicking my head and raising such a rumpus that he had aroused the whole car."—New York Times.

Action repeated becomes habit. Habit long continued becomes second nature. We are today what we were accustomed to do yesterday and the day before.—Lynn Abbott.

Not So Awful.
Complications are bound to arise where a deaf man is concerned. The one in this story was being married, and the parson asked the usual question, "Do you take this woman for your lawful wife?"
"Yes," said the deaf man.

Landseer Scared Them.
On the Landseer's early visits to Scotland the great warrior cupped at a village and took a great deal of notice of the dogs, jotting down rapidly sketches of their heads and figures. Next day on resuming his journey he was horrified to find dogs suspended from trees in all directions or down

STOPPED A WEEPING URBIN.
He to the rivers; with stones around their necks. He stopped a weeping urbin, who was hurrying off with a pipe and kicking and kicking in his dismay that he was crying for, and learned to his dismay that he was supposed to be an excise officer who was taking notes of the urbin's conduct in order to prosecute the owners for unpaid taxes.

Whistler and Strang.
Mr. Whistler had an exhibition of his etchings in London, and one day Whistler came to look at them. He went about from one to another without saying anything or showing any sign of appreciation. Mr. Strang began to feel annoyed.
"Whistler stopped in front of a long mirror and, pretending that he thought his own reflection in the glass was one of the other artist's etchings, he said:
"Yes, that's good!"
"Now, that's grand!"
"Yes, Mr. Strang replied tartly, "it ought to be hung, though!"

HERALD EXCHANGE CLEANINGS OF WEEK

The Times urges Pender to build a sewerage system in the interest of health.

Thomas C. Porter who moved to St. James, Cedar county, in 1866, died at his home there Friday, May 18.

Farm Stock and Hume: Faith is that quality of mind which enables one to invest his money in far-off land schemes, expecting to get it back again in the form of interest within two years, while he admits that he can't make his own farm pay six per cent on its value.

Laurel Abate: Two years ago Mrs. P. A. Her ran a piece of glass in her hand while cleaning a lamp chimney and part of it remained in the hand until the first of this week when she had it taken out while in Sioux City. It never bothered her much until lately when the third and fourth fingers began to burn. A piece of glass taken from the hand was a trifle more than half an inch square, and was taken out over an inch from where it entered the flesh two years ago.

Fairbury News: A baseball bat tied into a cornfield thirty-eight years ago by E. K. Ballanyne, here represented in the United States senate, was found recently when excavations were being made for a new building at Norfolk, Neb. The ball had become petrified, but the stems and stitches were visible. The night on one side marked the terrific wallop given by Ballanyne. This was the first league baseball ever bought for north Nebraska and the game which was between Tekamah and West Point had been stopped because the ball was lost.

Emerson Enterprise: The year old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Dostad hanged itself at the Dostad home, east of Nacora, last Sunday evening while the parents sat on the porch. The child, who was in the high chair with a cord and the little fellow had gotten partly loose and climbed or fell over the edge of the chair and in some manner the cord became fastened around its neck, and when discovered it was dead, hanging from the chair with its feet within an inch or so of the floor. A doctor and the coroner of Dakota county were called, but the little one was beyond help. The funeral services were held Tuesday.

Aurora Republican: How many people who advocate standing up for home interests would have the nerve to turn down a profitable business opportunity, or to reject a contract because it might be a bad thing for the town as a whole? Aurora newspapers publishers refused solid page advertisements from a neighboring town this week simply because they had the contrary of convictions in protecting home trade. Scarcely a week passes that The Republican is not offered business of this sort which its policy will not permit it to accept. Is there another business opportunity in Aurora, besides the newspapers, that carries its loyalty to such a point? And is the sacrifice made by the newspapers fully appreciated by those who are benefited thereby?

GRABBING MEXICO.

Chicago Inter-Ocean: The advocates of the grabbing of Mexico are evincing the fine spirit of the Spanish conquistadores. They would put an "inferior" race in leading strings after they had consigned many of its members to the grave by way of preliminary instruction. Their Monroe doctrine is a conqueror's warrant.

They go on from the conquest of Mexico to the conquest of Central America.

They array a continent against us.

They sneer at A. B. C. meditation and adopt a course that would invite medication from A to Z.

They trample on American principles and American traditions.

They forget that the fathers who announced the Monroe doctrine were the champions of the south that were struggling for independence.

The forget that the Monroe doctrine was a declaration of independence for them, a declaration with a guarantee against a government by foreign powers.

Their attitude is that of certain European monarchies toward this country during the civil war.

Liberty has been tried and found wanting. The republican experiment is a failure. Drunk with a little imperialism, they are wild to extend the system. They conveniently slight the fact that the people of South-American states have sought to be solving their problems. They are infatuated with old and discredited notions of arbitrary power that they once condemned as medieval survivals in Europe, and they have taken over these notions second-hand as if they were a great original discovery.

The trash that is being written by these fire alarm publicists, their belated militarism, their amazing ignorance of the teachings of history, their impudent reversal of sound American doctrines, is an offense to the intelligence and the conscience of a nation whose own story is a complete and crushing refutation of their borrowed opinions. They cannot afford to pollute their government and this people. They must not be allowed to make bitter enemies where we want only friends.
