

NEBRASKA IS GIVEN TOUCH OF BLIZZARD

RAILROAD IS BLOCKED No Railway Service All Day Monday - Telegraph and Telephone Lines Down.

A storm that came nearer reaching the proportions of an old-fashioned blizzard than any experienced in this country for several years reached its height Sunday night. The snow-fall is estimated to have been between twelve and eighteen inches, and it was tossed into huge banks, rendering the way of the traveler arduous and unpleasant.

Railroad traffic on the Norfolk and Bloomfield lines was interrupted. Late Monday a snow plow opened the road to Norfolk, and the first passenger train following the storm came down from that point Tuesday forenoon, headed by a snow plow and three engines. Trains between Chicago and Norfolk resumed schedule on Tuesday afternoon. The Bloomfield line was not opened for traffic until yesterday. All telegraph wires were down, and of the twenty-six toll lines of Nebraska, telephone company entering Wayne, only one that between this point and Emerson, was left in working order by the storm. The work of the city schools and State Normal was generally suspended Monday afternoon. The roads were closed by the storm, and the attendance at both institutions was consequently so light that those in authority decided to quit for the day. Walks were generally cleared by Tuesday morning, and the city schools and State Normal were able to resume their sessions with about the usual attendance.

Fortunately the cold was not severe, and the heavy snow was blown away here and there. The storm was general all over the state. The heavy blanket of snow is valuable for the ground and will help it in good conditions for coming crops.

HARTINGTON, NEB., FEB. 2 - Hartington is snowbound. It has been snowing furiously for the last forty-eight hours and snow lies in the street two feet deep. Communication with the outside world is practically cut off and all city schools are closed. The most inhabitant is unable to recall a heavier snowfall than the present one. District court was to have convened in the morning, but was postponed on account of the storm.

CITIZEN YIELDS TO STROKE OF APOPLEXY

A stroke of apoplexy caused the death of James Sneath at the home of John L. Soutes in Wayne Sunday, January 31, aged 75 years. He was born in Pennsylvania and his services were conducted at his late home yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock, conducted by Rev. B. P. Richardson of the Baptist church, and interment took place in the Pleasant Valley rural cemetery. Mr. Sneath was born in Huntington, Pa. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted as a wagon master. After peace had been declared he moved to Iowa. From Iowa he moved to Pennsylvania and then to Wayne. He was in business here for a number of years, and for a time was engaged in farming. He leaves one brother, Robert Sneath of Pender, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Miller of Bellevue, Blair county, Pa. His sister is 92 years of age.

For several years before his death, the deceased was an invalid, and it is a noteworthy fact that he bore his affliction with patience and fortitude. He was as much as usual the contrary had a smile and a happy word for everyone. He had far more than his share of misfortune, but the fact did not sour his regard for the world. He accepted life philosophically, and lived to the end with manifest courage and good cheer.

HEART FAILURE WAS CAUSE Deceased Starts for Wayne With Neighbor When He Suddenly Falls and Dies.

August H. Brune died of heart failure just after leaving his farm home, five miles west of Wayne, to come to town about 11 o'clock yesterday morning. He had carried a can of cream to the home of his neighbor, Fred Schulte, with the intention of accompanying him to Wayne. While talking to his neighbor, Mr. Brune suddenly fell to the ground and expired. He was immediately taken home and relatives summoned. It is the belief of Dr. G. J. PROGRESS MADE FOR HOSPITAL IN WAYNE

CAMPANY IS ORGANIZING Believed Proposed Institution Will Prove Big Benefit to This Territory.

The movement for a hospital in Wayne has many more workers notwithstanding delay in the effort on account of unfavorable weather and the impossibility to canvass the surrounding country. It is proposed to organize a company and sell stock at $100 per share. One $50 share will be collected. To properly swing the proposition it will be necessary to raise $20,000. The property to be bought and equipped for the purpose will be amply worth the money paid, and thus the investment will be safe in addition to the assurance of returning sufficient dividends. Of the amount needed, the sum of $1,500 has already been subscribed. It is believed an understanding has been reached with respect to raising the balance required.

A local hospital would serve convenience and decreased cost in performing operations. Imported local surgeons could be employed to perform the service in accordance with the wishes of patients. The hardship of going while sick, to outside hospitals would be saved. It would seem that the proposed enterprise would be a signal benefit to this territory.

THE WEEK WITH THE CHURCHES

The First Baptist Church

(Rev. B. P. Richardson, pastor.)
"The Support of His Presence" will be the subject of the common address Sunday morning. It will be an endeavor to analyze the religious aspect of a Christian's faith. What real vital value does Christ bring to your life?

We are especially anxious to have members present at this service. Its purpose is to help you in your real hour of need. It is possible to attend the morning worship.

"Gideon, the Deliverer" will be our theme for Sunday evening. It would be well if you could read the brief account of how this man was led by his angels to slay the king of Moab, and then through unwise acts largely spoil what he had done.

Every member ought to bring a suggestion to the young people's meeting Sunday evening. It will be led by Miss Grace Adams. The subject is "What is the Purpose of Our Young People's Meeting?" Your presence will be one thing that will help these meetings. Your prayers and your testimony will also help.

The ladies of the Mission Circle had a good meeting last week at the home of Mrs. Adams. They have made splendid progress in regard to their budget this year. Already nearly all of it is raised.

If all our members will be faithful to their trust and give their share of the church's budget, it, too, will be taken care of this year. Let us all pay up during February. See Mr. Wade, the treasurer.

Do not let any little thing keep you from attending our prayer meetings. We are interested in developing in those Bible studies. Bring a paper and pencil if you want to keep some of the facts for future help. Topic next week: "Old Testament Prophecy."

Do not forget to shake hands with strangers at the church. If people would be as careful about greeting visitors at their church as they are at their home, more visitors would make the church their church. Many a life has been led higher by the warmth of a Christian handshake. Do not hide this talent under a bushel. If you do not see anyone else to shake hands with, then shake hands with yourself. Whatever you do, always shake hands.

Presbyterian Church

(Rev. S. Xenophon Cross, Pastor.)
Let the purpose of every department and every member of the church be to work all together in a united movement toward greater efficiency. Let us set for ourselves the highest standards. Let us emphasize the most urgent moves. Let us help make them with largest success.

Every member should, if he has not already done so, survey the possibilities and needs of the field which the church is permitted to serve. Every member should adopt a program for his own efforts for the year and for each month. Every member should do something for each department of the church.

All are invited to attend the united service of the church, beginning at 10:30 each Sunday morning. All who cannot come to "preaching" services, may attend Sunday school, come at 11:30 sharp. All will want to come at 7:30 next Sunday when the young people will have entire charge of the services.

This meeting is the first in the "Underweek" series. This is one of the most important events of the church year, if people will just help to make it such. The meeting next Sunday evening will have as one of the most interesting features the installation of the new officers of the church.

It is especially desired that officers and members of the boards of the church be present next Sunday evening. It is necessary, for the highest church efficiency, that every church official should be interested in the Y. P. S. E. It is one of the best agencies in modern church activity.

Make no arrangements for February 12 that might hinder your attending the annual church conference. Make it a point to be there for the special pleasure to be derived and to encourage the Women's Missionary society who will serve the dinner. Make no mistake about the date, and bring $2.00. The standards of modern church work are advanced standards. Look forward, not back. Modern conditions and problems require modern ideals, large plans and new methods. Have faith and courage. Large tasks are easier than small. Undertake great things for God and expect great things from God. Nothing is impossible if rightly undertaken.

St. Paul's English Lutheran Church

(Rev. E. E. Blessing, Pastor.)
Sunday school at 10:45. Morning worship at 7:45.

The subject for the sermon Sunday morning will be "The Master's Charge to His Disciples." Luke 24:48. Man had lost his way. He had strayed from the home of God, from the field of truth from the path of holiness from the fountain of joy. He was wandering blind and miserable.

His guidance was being established in the dark mountains of error and sin. From His throne in heaven, Christ looked upon man in his error and sin. The miserable condition of man stirred Christ's great love. His master passion, "Thou art mine," led Him to restore to man His lost heritage. In His conversation with the Publican Zacchaeus, Christ relates His compassionate in His works. The great man came to seek and to save that which was lost.

The evening sermon will be dedicated to the "Representatives of the Old Testament." A very interesting and interesting subject at Luther league; come and enjoy them.

The Ladies' Aid society will meet at the home of Mrs. A. D. Erickson on Wednesday evening. The program is arranging a Lincoln program for the occasion.

Church rehearsal on Thursday evening at the church. Catechetical class will meet at half past two Sunday afternoon. There will be special music at both services.

You are welcome to all services.

Methodist Church

(A. S. Buell, Pastor.)

The revival meetings continue through this week. Mr. Simonds of University Place, Lincoln, and Rev. E. A. Worthley, state university student, will be with us. All of the regular services will be held next Sunday. Children's missionary service Sunday afternoon. The Ladies' Aid society will hold a supper andazaar the Thursday before Easter. The ladies of the church are invited to contribute articles.

The special numbers given at the opening of the Sunday school last Sunday by members of Mrs. Blair's class was a very interesting feature of the school's program. We were glad for the hearty response last Sunday morning on the part of both parents and young people to the special work of the church. We trust that this is but the beginning of some very definite work in the church for the expansion of our Master's kingdom. There will be religious services both morning and evening next Sunday.

German Evangelical Lutheran Church

(Rev. Rudolph Moehring, Pastor.)

There will be no church services next Sunday school next Sunday as the pastor will be at Winside.

IRISH PAPER TREATS LATE WAYNE PASTOR

The Witness, Belfast, Ireland, Nov. 6, 1914. Three pupils at times into my field of vision the picture presented by the inner life of the Glenfermot manse. To the outward eye it is pleasantly situated on the crest of the hill, embosomed among the trees, flanked by a fragrant fruit-garden, canopied by a boundless sky, brightened by the smile of the river, and relieved from solitude and aloofness by that river's ceaseless song—now loud as a war-note and now low as the murmur of the zephyr among the summer-leaves. But one need not speak of solitude or aloofness in respect of the training camp of eleven children—eight sons and three daughters—the scene of their childish plays, their make-believes, their mimic warfare, their oratorical and musical contorts as real to the actors as the struggles of mature years—especially as the presiding genius of that camp were a father and a mother, each of whom in a way, was as much of a child as any of their children, and each of whom possessed a highly-educated mind and a nature in sympathetic touch in all that was noblest in the world of thought and endeavor.

But the picture which, above all, persists in coming to me is that of the family assembled round the ample table for the evening meal, retreating the day's doings, discussing the month's magazines, and a hearing read by one of their number in turn a chapter from some standard volume dealing with the scientific aspects of the temperance problem. That over, all knelt at the domestic altar—as they knelt in the morning hour, when the father pleads on behalf of the young lives surrounding him, not for wealth or fame, but that they may be useful in their day and generation. The paternal loveliness as it was, proved shy of indifference in relation to the particular field in which it longed to see them useful; but the mother had, on the advent of each successive son, dedicated him to the ministry, and each of her daughters to service as near kin to the ministry as God might see fit to indicate. In due time the eight boys fared forth on a pathway which led to the pulpit, not always by a direct course; sometimes, indeed, by a circuitous route, and by painful steps and slow. Some set their faces toward the goal in childhood, and in the case of some the years of manhood had arrived before the call to service to which their mother had consecrated them was recognized as clear and proved to be irresistible. But as soon as the call came, not one of them was disobedient to the heavenly vision, nor was lacking in faith—as to the ways and means of providing facilities for a lengthened acedemical and theological course of preparation.

Alexander Corky was the fourth child and a third son of the Glenfermot manse. Twenty-six years ago he entered Magee College, where he won most of the honors which came his way, one of which was a valuable scholarship extending over all the sessions of the curriculum of Arts; but, strange to say, he did not want to finish his course or to draw the full instalments of the prize he had won. In company with his elder brother he crossed the Atlantic, joined a relative in the state of Michigan, and spent half a decade in American mercantile life, which was unable to satisfy the aspirations of his heart, or to afford scope for the exercise of his admirable energies—all the more that through the influence of his brother James he had at length opened his heart to the truth as it is in Jesus.

He began to work at once by addressing, at meal hours, companies of men working for the firm he served, and he was given to see that the Lord was working with him. Then he confided to his friends the reason why he had abandoned his college course—he had no heart for the work to which it pointed. Then he wrote home: "If I had eternity for time and the host of the redeemed for my audience, I have now only one theme—Jesus Christ and (Continued on page 10.)

RECALLS BASEBALL DAYS

Bixby in Lincoln Journal: Evangelist Sunday spices his sermons with an occasional reminiscence of his life as a ball player. He was with the Chicago nine twenty-eight years ago, at the time of his conversion, playing in the field. Detroit and Chicago were next on the list of teams for the pennant. It was the last half of the ninth inning and Detroit needed but a single tally to tie the score. Two men were down, two were on bases, second and third, Charley Bennett, catcher for Detroit was at bat. Clarkson pitching for Chicago. The umpire called two strikes. At this point let Sunday tell the story:

"I saw Charley swing hard and heard the bat hit the ball with a terrific boom. Bennett had smacked the ball on the nose. I saw the ball rise in the air and knew that it was going clear over my head. "I could judge within ten feet of where the ball would light. I turned by back to the ball and ran.

"The field was crowded with people and I yelled 'stand back!' and that crowd opened like the Red Sea and as I ran I made a prayer; it wasn't theological, either, I tell you that. I said 'God if you ever forgive a mortal man, help me to get that ball, and you haven't got much time to make up your mind, either.'"

It may be interesting to know that Mr. Sunday turned at the crucial moment, leaped high in the air, made a one-handed catch, fell sprawling under a team of horses, but got to his feet without letting go of the ball, and the game was clinched for Chicago. It was one of the phenomenal plays of professional baseball and netted the performer $1,500. In whatever game he plays we will have to admit that the man—is a four times winner. Moral: It pays to be efficient and to do your best.

Overwork- ing the Eyes

It is strange how some people will overwork their eyes. They will rest their backs when tired, but for a tired eye they have no mercy. They will not subject their voices to exercise, by screaming, for instance, but they will read when sleepy, or do fine work, not because they have to, but because they take pleasure in it, though the eyes are rebelling all the time. They will read non-type and small type, though their eyes are meantime on a continual strain. None of these things ought to be done, as they force the owner of the eyes to wear glasses sooner than would otherwise be the case.

If your eyes are bothering you in any way—it is for your own good to take care of them. Come in and let the examining your eyes. I will tell you whether or not you need glasses. I devote my entire time to testing eyes and making my own glasses. Repairing of all kinds done in short notice.

Dr. E. S. Blair had a strenuous experience Monday morning when he started on a seven-mile drive to see a patient south of town. Dr. Blair and a driver started at 10:30 in a cutter, and the first experience was a deep rut in a mud hole. The cutter next was upset and the driver thrown on a barb wire fence, but was not hurt. In the upset the single tree was broken, and the two men walked a half mile through the snow to a farm house, where they were taken care of by her wagon and took Dr. Blair to his patient. Returning he borrowed a single tree and started for town, breaking a tug almost the first thing, then upsetting again, and breaking the borrowed single tree. Dr. Blair's cutter was borrowed and Dr. Blair reached home about six o'clock in the evening, having been seven and one-half hours making the trip. A serious accident was fortunately avoided, as the depth of the snow made it impossible for the horses to run away. F414d

TELEPHONE MESSAGE ACROSS CONTINENT

Less than forty years after the telephone was discovered, January 25, the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans were united telegraphically speaking, when Alexander Graham Bell who invented the telephone in 1875, talked directly to Thomas A. Watson in San Francisco.

Although John J. Carley, chief engineer of the Bell Telephone System, says that hundreds of engineers have worked many years perfecting telephone equipment that would make the great feat possible, the honor of sending the first transcontinental message fell to the inventor of the telephone, and thus it was Dr. Bell and Mr. Watson were at either end of the line January 25.

In a little workshop in Boston, June 2, 1875, it was Alexander Graham Bell who spoke and Thomas A. Watson who heard the first message ever sent by telephone. "Come here, Watson, I want you," were the first words ever conveyed over a wire. That wire was only sixty feet in length. The line ended Monday.

A report of an eminent engineer who entered into the celebration of the opening of the transcontinental line says that the very first wire used in the first talk in Boston was spliced into the New York thirty feet of it at New York and thirty feet of it at San Francisco.

Ever since the telephone was discovered, American, the land of its birth, has kept the lead using more telephones than all the rest of the world. More than twenty-one million miles of wire in this country now unite nine million telephones, 60,000 cities, towns and villages. All the rest of the world has less than five million telephones.

By 1878 the longest telephone line in the world was from Boston to Cambridge, two miles, in 1884 it was extended to New York, 235 miles, Chicago and New York were connected in 1885 and in 1911 New York could say "Hello" to Denver.

For the forty years since the telephone was invented, nearly a hundred types of transmitters, and numerous repeating instruments and other devices have been used, and discarded for something better. It is asserted that since the first discovery his been responsible for this latest and greatest achievement in the telephone art. It was accomplished by gradual improvements in all equipment, by which mile by mile the distance of possible telephone communication was extended, each year a little further, until the dream of transcontinental communication has been realized.

If the two circuits of the transcontinental line there are approximately six million pounds of copper wire of about two hundred cables. This wire is stretched on 130,000 poles, which, if they were loaded on railroad cars would make twenty trains of thirty cars each.

The route of the transcontinental telephone line is from New York to Pittsburgh, thence to Chicago, Denver, Des Moines and Omaha, Lincoln to Denver. From Denver the line bends north to avoid high altitudes, and then runs directly westward to Salt Lake City and to San Francisco.

Stationed along this great stretch of telephone line the day it was opened were repairmen every few miles in the big centers, in the little towns, on the prairies, in the mountains, and over the desert, ready to splice the wires in case they were torn down by sleet or wind; to solder a break or replace an insulator broken by storm or a mischievous boy. Like soldiers on picket duty, these repairmen will be kept on constant vigil, eight and day, in good weather and in bad, for it is advertised that this time is soon to be opened to the public for constant use.

It is understood that when the line is opened to the public the rate will be about $2.00 for a three-minute talk from New York to San Francisco.

The opening of the new transcontinental line will not only be distinguished because of the talk of Dr. Bell and Mr. Watson, but because of the fact that for the first time in history, the voice of the chief magistrate of the nation was carried direct from the seat of government in Washington to the shores of the Pacific ocean. That day President Wilson talked to San Francisco, sending his congratulations to the 150,000 men and women in the telephone industry who made this achievement possible.

President Vail was not in New York when the celebration took place, so he was called up at his hotel on the southern coast of Florida, one thousand miles below Manhattan, from where he talked over the line 400 miles in length to Thomas A. Watson in San Francisco.

SUBMARINES.

The Risks They Run and Some of the Things They Can Do. The modern type of submarine carries five torpedoes which it can discharge one after the other by means of compressed air. So perfect is the firing mechanism that hardly any shock can be noticed either during or after the discharge, and the equilibrium of the vessel is not upset in the least.

When it is realized that each of these torpedoes is quite capable of making a hole in a battleship as large as a bayonet, it will be seen that the ordnance of a battleship that is not armored with low water is practically an easy task for them.

A submarine vessel, however, runs a considerable risk in even attempting to torpedo another vessel. Before it can fire a torpedo it must come to the surface and show its periscope in order to aim the weapon correctly. If the battleship once sees the periscope the object of the submarine is practically destroyed, for such a vessel can be sunk by a shell from a big gun when only its periscope is visible, because of the fact that the cushion of water above the vessel does not offer sufficient resistance to prevent the shell sinking and hitting it.

When operating on the surface of the sea, submarines are used to drive the submarines. These engines also generate electricity. In addition to propelling the vessel, the electric power of the submarine drives the diesel engines and it is driven by an electric motor, which gets its power from the stored up electricity. The speed at which the average submarine can travel is eleven knots on the surface and five below water.

When the sea near shore and, if it is necessary, "sit" on the bottom for twenty-four hours at a stretch without coming up to the surface to "breathe." The ability to do this comes to very handy when a storm is raging for weeks below the surface waves are not experienced. Some of the latest types of submarines carry 4,000 miles without taking in a fresh supply of stores or fuel.

In calm weather the submarine's range of vision is somewhere about eight miles. That is to say, an opposing warship can be seen when it is eight miles away, and the distance the periscope would be almost, if not quite, invisible, the man on the surface would be unaware of the submarine's presence. Then, by means of a powerful compass, the submarine could fully submerge itself and without even the periscope showing run to within striking distance of the vessel it has designed upon.

The mere fact that before it can strike a submarine has to come to the surface and show its periscope renders it vulnerable, for if the periscope is showing a large vessel comes exactly where the submarines are and can both see them, and they are out of the way of torpedoes from them. THE ICY WALK.
I slipper and fell? You heard me yell—your beard—my scream like thunder, as I fell flat and spoiled my hat, and broke the winter's grin. I lie in bed with puffed head, and legs done up in plaster, and all the day I roast the jay who caused that dire disaster. He knew the glaze of ice was there, and yet he drew no ashen, I could his god, and use up all the asterisks and dashes. An easy thing it is to fling some ashes on the planking; do that and then the gods of men your kindness will be thanking. But those who slip and break a hip or strain a neck or ankle, on "naked feet will not get by; the words they use will rankle. The thoughtful act that's born of tact is like a benediction; it takes the smarts from troubled hearts and lessens grief and frets. The jay who drew all for you pined when from this world you've skated; the little things will give you wings, when you're at last translated.

WHITE HOPES.
I've hoped this country might produce, before I uttill my freight, a pug who'd jar Jack Tompkins loose, a first class heavy weight. And each new hope I hailed with joy, with such most frantic glee, "at last," I'd say, "there's a boy who looks quite good to me. When he's been trained, three years or four the Smoke he should displace. The treasured wreath he should restore to our deponent race." But every hope faded and a hopeless dream—my head and oh, the wretched I have lost, the tears that I have shed! Oh, there were giants in the land, in happy days long since; now hopes abound on every hand, but every hope is a quince. Carl Morris, Flynn and such, these jays will lead us on. The reveal the cheap brands of cheese, made of denatured milk. The whole year round such fighters fling orations in our ears, and when we see them in the ring we think of auctioneers. But when the shades of night descend, sorrow casts its pall; let us remember that the whites are great at basketball.

THE AUTO.
The auto is a lovely car in which to tip and race; but in the owners' truly smart, he'll make it know its place. "You'll do all right for leisure hours," he says, in earnest tones, "but I won't let you, by the powers, use all my stock of bones; you should interfere with trade or keep me from my biz, I'll put you where the junk is laid, to help me now. G'Whizz!" I know so many who for fun burn up the country roads, and for that purpose borrow money, and mortgage their shops. They drive through Chicago everywhere, and keep the highways hot, and little do they seem to care if school shall keep or not. And then the sheriff, haughty gent, comes up and makes some spiel, and springs a legal document with large and crimson seals. The thought of those who waste their days in cars should cause us gloom; a thousand thousand dippy jays are chugging to their doom. The auto is a servant, fine, whose name we never slump; but when it's master, friend of mine, 'twill lead you to the dump.

BEING READY.
"Let preparations never cease, the strongest guaranty of peace is readiness for war." So we've been told by statesmen great, who navigate the ship of state, that we pay taxes for. "If we'd feel safe we must prepare, with airships we must fill the air, and stock the sea with ships; we must drill and train a host of men, if we'd avoid eclipse." And even now, while Europe rocks, beneath her armies' mighty shocks, our statesmen talk the same: "We must be building battle boats, if we'd prevent the sea from being a highway to Europe, gentle niece, that guaranteed a lasting peace by loading up for bear. Whenever she acquired some mon, she blew it for a sea elm gun, till she had guns to spare. And Europe's sea, 'twas a sea of slumps; but when it's master, friend of mine, 'twill lead you to the dump.

GOSSIPS.
Though great be your virtues, the gossips will hurt you, or straggle like blitzen to it, alas! Your conduct is shocking! The neighbors are talking you, whispering, whenever you pass! Though you may endeavor to shun them and never give gossips a chance to indulge in their rage, yet, waking or sleeping, they still will be keeping their tabs on your doings, to injure your fame. But heed not the neighbors, and smile at the labors of insolent gossips whose tongues never rest; they still would be talking and jeering and mocking, if you had descended from realms of the blest! 'Tis earnestly striving, while yet I'm surviving, to do the right thing, when the right thing I know; each day I am trying to comfort the sighing, to keep a clean slate and to pay what I owe. So little I'm caring how gossips are fuming, or what they may say as I gambol along a street, get to worry, I jaunt in my surry, I'm chipper and cheerful, my soul's full of song. The critics who handle their job plots of scandal are woe-begotten people; a gossamer-roder hussy, and they would be smiling and finding fault, beginning, if they would just copy the fellows they roast.

THE WET BLANKET.
In every bug, in every grad, you find the worst dependent lad, who kicks at all improvement; all progress gives him grievous pains, and to the people he explains just what the old time groove meant. When we would pave Commercial street, he most frantic glee, "at last," I'd say, "there's a boy who looks quite good to me. When he's been trained, three years or four the Smoke he should displace. The treasured wreath he should restore to our deponent race." But every hope faded and a hopeless dream—my head and oh, the wretched I have lost, the tears that I have shed! Oh, there were giants in the land, in happy days long since; now hopes abound on every hand, but every hope is a quince. Carl Morris, Flynn and such, these jays will lead us on. The reveal the cheap brands of cheese, made of denatured milk. The whole year round such fighters fling orations in our ears, and when we see them in the ring we think of auctioneers. But when the shades of night descend, sorrow casts its pall; let us remember that the whites are great at basketball.

PROHIBITION.
In Russia, none can buy a flagon of Vodka or old rye; the men must ride the water wagon—the country's all gone dry. The law affects all grades of critics, the humble and the rich; and those who lately shipped their bitterns now hit the pumpovitch. The ill of western prohibition you'll look for there in vain; you will not find there a condition that one might see in Maine. There's no relief for thirsty beggars, no help for Russian sports; the alms know no cheap bootleggers, no hole-in-wall resorts. The old-time tricks that lead to drinking won't work there, water a cent; a man may scarin his eyebrows winking, the druggist won't relent. Old Russia's brand of law prohibits, 'n country and in town, and soon her prisons and her gibbets will all be taken down. If someone hasn't told a whopper about conditions there, the country soon won't have a napper, which had them everywhere. The world will watch this Russian measure, so timely and so wise; 'twill watch and doubtless note with pleasure a nation nobly rise from depths of degradation, from trying in the ditch; oh, happy that progressive nation which hits the pumpovitch!

The constant aching of a bad back. The weariness, the tired feeling. The pains and aches of kidney ill. May result seriously if neglected. Dangerous urinary troubles often follow.

A Wayne citizen shows you what to do.

Anton Biegler, Wayne says: "About two years ago my back was very stiff and I could hardly get up after sitting for a while. At night, after a hard day's work, I was in such great pain that I could not get my proper rest. The kidney secretions caused me much annoyance by their frequency in passage. Learning of Doan's Kidney Pills, got a box and they helped me so greatly that I continued taking them until I was well. I have never had a serious attack of kidney trouble since."

AN EARLY AIRSHIP

It Wouldn't Fly, Although It Got a Trial by Moonlight.

BUT IT CAUSED A SURPRISE.

Story of a Comedy That Was Enacted in the Dead Waters of the Night on the Banks of the Potomac in the Troublesome Wartime Days of 1863.

In the Smithsonian Institution at Washington there hangs an ancient model of an aeroplane. It looks to the casual observer like a simple, feasible or the Wright biplane. But it is many years older than the Wright flying machine. It is the Stratipteryx albatra, built in the early sixties of the last century, and it once caused the arrest of a spy and companion of Professor Joseph Henry, the eminent man of science who was the first secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

The story of 1863 in Washington was in a state of utmost agitation and uneasiness. The Confederate armies moving northward were threatening Washington itself, and southern troops had ridden within sight of the dome of the capitol.

A strong picket line was kept on duty night and day, especially along the banks of the Potomac. In that part of Washington there is a wide space of park known as the mall. There pickets constantly patrol, keeping an eye upon the distant Virginia shore.

One moonlit midnight a picket patrolled to and fro between the street and the Smithsonian Institution, which stood in a lonely part of the mall, saw a solitary man emerge from the shadow of a "big" house on the grounds. He wore a strange, birdlike nondescript thing that looked like nothing the sentinel had ever seen before.

Standing out in the open spaces, the solitary man dived his strange appliance into the air; fluttered for a few feet and then came to the ground. Again the man tossed it into the air and watched it utter a queer whirring.

It was the shadow of the time the picket looked on in bewilderment.

It was no time to give any one the benefit of a doubt. The picket summoned the captain of the guard, and a squad of soldiers suddenly descended on the mysterious man.

"What is your name? What is this thing and what are you doing with it?" queried the captain of his prisoners. "I am Professor Henry, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, your," said the prisoner. "You be stopped."

In that day for a man to admit that he was seriously experimenting with a flying machine was conclusive evidence of his insanity, and Professor Henry, who had chosen the dead watches of the night in which to experiment with Stratipteryx's strange machine, hesitated to tell his captors what he was really doing.

"You're a spy," declared the captain, and this time it was some kind of machine with which you're signaling to the Confederates.

"I am not a spy," declared Professor Henry, "and am experimenting with a flying machine. That is the truth."

This explanation was greeted with a stare of incredulity. The captain thought that a man of Professor Henry's reputation would fool with a flying machine was ridiculous. Certain now that he had caught a spy, they hustled the professor off to the guardhouse.

Unfortunately for him, his studious habits made him almost unknown in Washington, and a sturdy man at the guardhouse knew him by sight. And so through the long night he was compelled to remain in duress.

At daybreak the captain reported his capture to the colonel in command. That officer, hurrying to the guardhouse, was astonished to find the spy was his intimate friend, Professor Henry. But his astonishment was nothing compared to the chagrin of the captain in his square.

Professor Henry, however, not only readily forgave them, but praised their intelligence and zeal and admitted that he had given the picket very reasonable ground for suspicion—YOUTH'S COMPANION.

Compulsory Military Service. Napoleon had "conscription" armies under the famous conscription law of General Jourdan in 1793, but the first nation to put the universal military service and army reserve system into action was Prussia, at the time of the military revolution was instituted in 1813. The system has been developed since, and in the years since 1870—1871 European nations except Great Britain has adopted the compulsory service system.—New York Times.

Errors of Others. It is foolish to pay attention to the errors of others and not to help them out of them. Aiding others to be strong is the best way to strengthen ourselves.

 him crucified." So his father's prayers and his mother's dedication took effect. He saw the door of uplift opening for him and he had not sufficiently formulated to turn him from the way that led thereto.

His trumpet sounded in his ear.
 He saw not Sinai's smokenshrouded never year to reach the clear call of duty came.

Although by this time he had a wife, who was all through their united life a most true and faithful wife-child, and one child—their only child—he received his position as a man of business, furnished a modest flat in Chicago, entered McCormick's Theological Seminary of that city, gave himself to study during the long winter sessions, and engaged in home missionary efforts during the vacations. The encouragement which the student received from his preceptors indicated the high estimate they formed of his aptitude and powers, and the graduating fellowship with which he graduated his diploma, which entitled him to a post-graduate year in Europe, and which he elected to use in a year's residence at the University of Edinburgh, was to him a crown of rejoicing, because it came to confirm his conviction of the leading of Providence and as a seal of adequate equipment for his life work.

Accustomed to the atmosphere of Trans-Atlantic life and thought, conscious of the perils and dangers of a republic, especially of that section with which he was most familiar, and mentally and spiritually endowed as he was, he threw himself with headlong energy into the labors of successive pastorates in the State of Ohio, and in the West. He proclaimed an "Evangel for every man and for every-day life, for the political boss and the ecclesiastical manager and magnate, as well as for the self-confessed sinner and the meekest, lowliest follower of the meek and lowly Jesus." He was not surprised that on one occasion he resigned his living, with an annual income of two thousand dollars, and suffered a year's nervous breakdown rather than to bow to the standard of certain minority of the law of Christian life. "Nevertheless, afterwards" he was thankful for the bitter experience—and for the light which it shed upon Satan's devices.

His greatest pastoral achievements lay in Wayne, in the state of Nebraska. Wayne is the county town and the seat of the State College. His congregation, which was the largest in the Presbyterian consisted of persons of education and refinement, and the weight of his duties of such a charge might have been considered exhausting enough for any minister; but he made more work for himself by expounding the "new" country—district preaching, and by establishing Sabbath schools wherever it was accessible to do so. These schools thus established he visited in regular rotation, pressing into his service his automobile, which he declared, was his assistant pastor, which was considered a novelty. He was enabled him to evangelize the entire rural area that circled round his center, and that thus became accessible and responsive to his appeals. He had no time to rest or slacken his pace. He lived at highest pressure as if never to relax. "The King's business requireth haste." To him life was but an opportunity to serve. One day as his brother William and he stood at the grave of Adam Murray, the hero of the Siege of Vicksburg, he said to his brother: "I should so like to be called home just when I had done my work."

He was ready to enter every open door which promised to give an additional opportunity. He was much sought after at public gatherings, and the new platform that had for him be used on behalf of the cause of temperance reform, of righteousness and of clean city government. The honorarium accorded him was as a rule fifty dollars a lecture, but he never declined an invitation to speak to the people when it was in his power to accept it, even when he was aware that in instances not a few the only fee would be the chairman's palaver, the close of his oration, which probably brought him exhausted and sleepless for the ensuing night. During the recent summer months he was special lecturer for the Lincoln Chautauqua Bureau, and his auditors on each occasion were counted by the thousand.

In 1908 Alexander Corkey and his brother James visited the old country. They were good enough to place their services for September at the disposal of the General Assembly's Committee on Temperance, and very meetings were arranged at almost every important center, and every appointment was kept. The speakers brought with them experience, up-to-date information, the results of long study and observation, a rare enthusiasm, a passion for righteousness, and unimpaired, if not unsurpassed, platform power. The most gratifying reports were received from the centers visited, most of them were in almost identical terms. "The grandest addresses ever heard here." The last of the series of meetings was held in the Assembly Hall, Belfast, where there was an attendance, despite a most inclement season, of considerably more than fifteen hundred. The then Moderator, Dr. M. H. Hirsch, now alas! gone from us, presided, and, as his custom was, struck a happy keynote with no uncertain sound. The two brothers delivered thrilling orations, in which almost every phase of the cause was touched by master hands, and every side of our complex nature was addressed with convincing argument and pathetic appeal. It was felt by the audience that he had never heard a more impressive speaker than Alexander Corkey, who, standing with uplifted head, and expanded chest, and shining face, and a thunder roll in his voice, and bringing with him the breath of a new life, and the life of a new land, he poured forth such an overwhelming river of speech as one seldom hears in a lifetime. One felt ashamed of one's nation so long bound and so impotent to free herself, as America was being wronged, and that for the galling servitude which the oppressor had so effectively imposed. The father of "the boys" opened with the prayer the meeting, at which were present five brothers of the speakers, and in response to a most cordial vote of thanks to them and to him, characteristically remarked that people said he ought to be "proud." He saw nothing to be proud of, he added, but much for which to be "profoundly thankful."

After a public reception at Glenfarg, the many of which it now a sacred possession to all who were present, the brothers returned to their adopted country, delighted with what they had seen and heard in their native land as to the positions and prospects of the cause they loved, and whither they traveled their first word was about Ireland and their temperance reform.

Alexander re-entered upon his pastoral duties in Nebraska, to which were added those consequent upon his appointment as lecturer in sociology, at the Presbyterian college at Omaha. He possessed such undoubted gifts for his work that the faculty and trustees of the college recently requested him to allow himself to be placed on the regular staff of its professors. This will seem to many the last round in the ladder of his strenuous life, and exactly the place for which his qualifications have been multiplying year by year. One is ready to congratulate almost to envy the college numbering such a spirit among its teachers set for the capture of the intellect of the state and of the church on behalf of all that is high and holy in social and national life, but just as he is ready to enter upon the field for which as a worker he is so admirably equipped, a door opens beckoning to another sphere for which his Leader has been preparing him, and which is ready for the unique service which he can render.

At the communion service held on the last day of May, before he left for a brief rest, he distributed copies of the following leaflet:

MY DAILY PRAYER.

To guard my mind day by day, To school my mind and body to obey,
 To keep my inner life both keen and strong;
 To free my heart from guile, my hand from wrong;
 To shut the door on hate, and scorn, and pride,
 That Christ may evermore in me abide,
 To meet with cheerfulness what comes to me;
 To let my life's discords into harmony,
 To share some weary worker's heavy load;
 To point some straying comrade to the road,
 To know that what I have is not my own;
 To feel that I am never quite alone,
 This would I pray,
 From day to day,
 For then I know
 My life will flow
 In peace, until
 It be God's will
 I go. Amen.

During all the period of his public life, trained, from the days spent in the training camp on the banks of the Faughan, he had been using his own voice. His strength discovered to his surprise that "one talent lodged with him uselessly" though his mind was bent on service to the last inch of his stature and the last ounce of his resources. The unsuspected force lay in his pen. He began to contribute to high-class journals, stories in serial form dealing with the pressing moral problems of the sections of the country where he drew best. The contributions were so true, so dramatic, so life-like, and the voice of the prophet was so authoritative, that he was at once recognized as an author of great power and still greater promise. Four volumes resulted from these contributions, two of which—"Allen Rutledge" and "The Testing Fire"—we have read, and we consider them among the most thrilling romances we know. The author, of course, did not think of writing a romance; but only a narrative in which to inculcate a duty and enforce a truth, to make vice and all wrong-doing hide their heads in shame, to help mankind in his struggle upwards, and to advance the Kingdom.

He was never quite satisfied with his work. His modesty and self-depreciation grew with the passing years. He forgot the things which were behind, and reached forth unto the things which were before. His next book was always to be his "best." The Presbyterian board of temperance made request some time ago that he write his next book wholly in that interest. He grated himself with eagerness to write the most welcome one, and sent a note to the writer saying that the volume was to be his "best," mentioning two names which he intended to inscribe on the dedication page. The writer expressed his most sincere wishes for the enterprise prospered, and how near or how far it was from completion, when, on that 28th of October, the pen dropped from the hand of the owner on the completion of his forty-third year and when he entered into service in the power of an endless life. At any rate, God has crowned his labors, and his works do follow him.

The picture of the Glendormott Mansie, which had long ago been never fade from the memory of those who once formed a part of that picture, so long as the soul of man is capable of tracing its pathway back to the fountain whence it drew its earliest inspiration. The glorified Master when calling him who was to be his greatest apostle, chose to take His title from the place where He had been brought up.

The West is yet to be.

The best of life, for which the first was made.

JOHN MACMILLAN,
 Belfast, 4th November, 1914.

There is an anecdote in some volume of French theatrical memoirs narrating an experience of Mlle. Clotron, the great French actress, with a pupil, a girl of strong natural gifts for the electric art, but far too frequent and too exuberant in her gesticulation. So when the pupil was once again before the public in a recitation Mlle. Clotron bound the girl's arms to her side by a swift thread and sent her thus upon the stage.

With the first strong feeling she had to express the pupil tried to raise her arms only to be restrained by the thread. A dozen times in the course of her recitation she was prevented from making the gestures she desired until the very end, and could stand it no longer, and in the climax of her emotion she broke her bonds and swung her hands to her head.

When she stepped on the stage she went humbly to where Mlle. Clotron was standing in the wings and apologized for having snapped the thread.

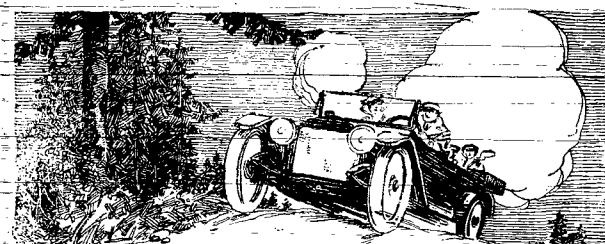

But she did quite right to snap the thread.

That was the thread to snap the gesture, not before.

That woman's experience is illustrative to the approach of earthquakes is a fact frequently observed, and the more recent instance is furnished by the example of this singular faculty which many animals possess. For instance, in Japan horses set up an unusual agitation whenever a certain stock is taken down to transport. America dogs and cats, deer from Louisiana, and the inhabitants have been so accustomed to the earthquakes that they follow the example of the animals and leave their dwellings so as to escape danger.

It is fairly to be seen observed that birds left their nests and flew up to a great height in the air, but this with our noise about the earthquakes took the birds startled, cries which issued from all the direction of the earthquakes.

It is noteworthy that the birds were seen and does how just before an earthquake. Chicago News.

C. K. Rash who killed his wife and three young children January 27, 1897, was examined at a coroner's inquest held at the courthouse. Rash who was confined in the city jail, refused to talk or to say anything that the jury had commanded a fast. After a fast of five days, he was fed forcibly. The jury returned a verdict charging Rash with murder. He waived preliminary hearing before Justice Feather, and was bound over to the district court without bail. Rash said that he desired no attorney, and that the justification for his crime could be found in the second chapter of Revelations.

From the Ponca Journal, February 1, 1883:

The weather on Monday was entirely "good" for keeping. At about 9 o'clock that evening the wind veered around to the northwest and proceeded to inaugurate one of the most diabolically behaving blizzards ever seen in these parts. It was not so terribly cold, but the wind blew at the rate of a mile per minute. The next morning the snow was flying so thick that a person could not see a rod. This terrific display in town was greatly exceeded out on the prairies. Tuesday was a day on which the wind traveled far did so in much danger.

The smallpox has arrived at Blair and from all accounts is likely to give that town a severe siege. Last Thursday a scholar in the public school was, while in school, taken down with smallpox. There are about four hundred children attending the school in Blair, many of whom must have been exposed on that occasion to the disease. Within the past few days several have died of smallpox in Blair or near there, and new cases of it are appearing. It thus appears that Blair, unless extraordinary efforts are made to check the disease, will soon become little better than a pest house. As Blair is by rail only a few hours distant from Ponca, it may become necessary to quarantine against that place. It will be safe for the trustees to consider this matter. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

Colds and Croup in Children. Many people rely upon Chamberlain's Cough Remedy implicitly in cases of colds and croup, and it does not fail. Mrs. E. H. Thomas, Logansport, Ind., writes: "I have found Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to be the best medicine for colds and croup I have ever used, and never tire of recommending it to my neighbors and friends. I have always given it to my children when suffering from croup, and it has never failed to give them prompt relief." For sale by all dealers. Ad.
