

DEATH OF WELL KNOWN CITIZEN YESTERDAY

Robert Allan McEachen... Kept Up With Fortitude Notwithstanding Long Sickness—Funeral Saturday.

The death of Robert A. McEachen at his home in Wayne yesterday will be keenly regretted by a host of friends.

The following obituary is furnished by the pastor: Robert A. McEachen was born at Perth, Ontario, Canada, June 20, 1834.

Mr. McEachen left his Canadian home when a mere child and went to New York state where he engaged in boating for several years.

Mr. McEachen had worked hard and saved his money and was able to buy a large farm near West Point, Mich. in 1886.

He married Miss Addie Burke of West Point, who with eight of their children survives him.

Mr. McEachen engaged in several farms in Michigan, and in 1893 he moved to Cumming county, Neb., where he engaged in a large farm near West Point.

besides the host of friends, the wife of his youth and eight children: George, Ben, Esther, James, William, Gertrude, Howard and Grant.

Mr. McEachen engaged in several farms in Michigan, and in 1893 he moved to Cumming county, Neb., where he engaged in a large farm near West Point.

Rest on the shelves, thy harvest work is done. Come down the heat of battle, and in peace.

Miss for a few days' visit. He Saturday accompanied by Mrs. Walter E. Weber of Crofton who returned home after a visit at this place. They were accompanied as far as Coleridge by Miss Frankie Shawver.

J. J. O'Connor, who was looking after his farm in the western part of the county, returned Monday to his home at Waterloo, Ia. He was accompanied by his son. He bought his Wayne county farm in 1884, and believes he made a good investment.

Miss Katherine Lewis who taught in the public schools at Tucson, Ariz., arrived home last Friday after having taken a trip to the exposition at San Francisco, in company with Miss Emma Hughes, teacher in the Wayne schools. Miss Hughes stopped for a visit at Fremont before coming home.

Wesley Chronicle: W. F. Assenheimer reports the recent sale of real estate in Northeast Stanton county as follows: An 80-acre farm for John Bowden to Charles Wheeler, consideration $125 per acre; also a 160-acre farm for Phil Kell of Wayne to Charles Gadenken, consideration $140 per acre. Mr. Gadenken exchanged as part payment for this land his 80-acre place near Plainville.

West Point Republican: Mr. and Mrs. Beverly Strahan arrived here from Omaha, Sunday noon, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Nitz. Up until last Tuesday when her marriage took place, Mrs. Strahan was Miss Mary Meister, the charming, beautiful and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Meister of Norfolk, formerly of this city. The bonny bride has a multitude of friends here, who unite with the Republican in a shower of congratulatory wishes.

Speaking of the Savigde carnival which appeared in Blair recently, the Democrat of that place contains the following in the course of a friendly comment: "The showy given under the big top were good and the attendance fair. One of the big things of the carnival, however, was the band; it was far above the average and its concerts were enjoyed greatly. One cannot help congratulating Mr. Savigde on the cleanliness of his carnival company and regardless of what one's stand may be on its benefit to the community it must be admitted that the company is composed of ladies and gentlemen in every sense of the word."

RAINFALL GREATER LAST YEAR THAN NOW

Rainfall marked the beginning of July, the precipitation at this place on the first amounting to sixty-three hundredths of an inch. On that day hail did damage in some part of the county. Bremen precinct reporting injury to growing crops. Thirty-two hundredths of an inch fell Saturday.

It is interesting to note that during May and June last year more rain fell than during the same months this year. Here is the comparative rainfall as reported by the gauge at the Wayne State Bank: May, 1914, three and fifty-eight hundredths inches; May, 1915, four and ninety-one hundredths inches; June, 1914, seven and ninety-five hundredths inches; June, 1915, three and eighty-three hundredths inches. It will be seen that the rainfall in June last year was nearly double what it was during the same time this year.

THE SANE FOURTH.

Omaha Bee, July 5: Yesterday was the quietest Fourth of July in the annals of Omaha, according to police authorities. Surgeons say it was also the "safest and sanest" in the history of the city. Not one fourthly murderer's sentence was reported throughout the whole day.

Last year giant crackers, pistols and powder claimed a score of victims.

To right legislation by the council is given the credit.

Police-Commissioner Kugel says he sees the handwriting on the wall for the old-fashioned Fourth of July. "The new way may not be so exciting," he says, "but it is a great trouble-saver and therefore will remain in force."

Sometimes when a man is blue and despondent and narrow-minded as all get out, he conceives that all American colleges teach young men to be wear ridiculous and hideous clothes.

Nat M. Brigham

Chautauqua, July 16

SUBJECT: "OUR NATIONAL PARKS."

Mr. Brigham's presentation of this theme comes opportunely, for the people are thoroughly aroused in the matter of preserving their national parks and monuments. He has published and proposed, "Glacier National Park, Estes Park, the Yellowstone, the Yosemite, Paria Park and all the great ones." He has discussed and pictures projected that are marvels of photographic accuracy and color work.

ACCIDENT AT PLAINVILLE.

Plainville, Neb., July 6.—Joseph Pendhayan, an aviator, met with an accident here Saturday morning when he attempted to make the first flight scheduled at 10 o'clock. He got away all right and was about 100 feet in the air when a cross current of air struck his machine, causing it to turn to one side. It came to the ground with a crash. Mr. Pendhayan sustained some bruises, a broken nose and a bad cut in the leg. The machine was so badly damaged that it will have to go to the builders for repairs. Mr. Pendhayan left for Kansas City Monday, where he will make a try-out Wednesday with an old machine.

The remainder of the celebration was a huge success, with a great crowd on hand. The ball game between the Norfolk volunteer firemen and the Nebraska Telephone teams was a feature. The firemen won 4 to 3, after a very exciting game. McCune and Ferris were batteries for the fire fighters and Madson and Verson for the telephone men.

WISCONSIN SCHOOL SEEN BY WAYNE LADY

RURAL SYSTEM IMPROVES

Mrs. M. A. Phillips Writes of Visit to Modern Country School in Badger State.

(By Mrs. M. A. Phillips.) Madison Wis., July 4, 1915.

As the country boy and girl seem in fact to come into their own. The one absorbing topic among educators in many communities is rural education. No feature of all this thought and study is so important as the attention given to making the rural school the social center of the community.

It was my good fortune to accompany the classes in rural sociology here at the Wisconsin university on an observation trip to some rural schools in the vicinity of Madison. The first school visited is in a suburban community near the shore of Lake Mendota. The farmers in this community are very well situated at least one third of them tenants. One man, a member of the board of education, is a Madison lawyer and five are professors in the Wisconsin university, while the others are farmers living on their own farms.

From careful investigation, however, I am convinced that the credit for what has been accomplished in this district is due to none of these. It is the result of the persevering effort of the young lady teaching the school. She and the school board were at the school house when we visited it; and they showed us all the improvements and told us the story of how they were realized. The attendance at this school was about twenty-five pupils. The teacher, in the course of her work, became convinced that the children could and should have more desirable surroundings and more advantages. With the wisdom of a Statesman she bid her plans well before she made any apparent efforts to realize her ambitions.

She proposed to the children that they prepare for a social gathering at the school-house, and that in addition to a nice program, exhibit of school work, and dinner, they should prepare what they called an original exhibit. Each child should make something at home to show the line of work he or she would like to study the next year in school. Invitations were carefully prepared and sent to each family in the district.

On the day arranged there was a large attendance of interested friends of the children. Through the program, exhibit of school work and dinner were all a decided success. The thing that really had the most far reaching effect was the original exhibit.

Here were shown samples of sewing, cooking and carpentry that surprised teacher and parents. The teacher was now prepared to launch her own ideas. She had a carefully drawn plan of the school house, grounds and equipment—she thought they should be—and this she presented. Previous to this she had consulted the community improvement committee of the local university and had their approval. The result was that everybody went home enthusiastic about what had been done and hopeful for future advance.

But the teacher did not stop here. Instead of going to her home when school closed, she remained in the district and visited every home, studying the life of the children in these homes and talking with the parents. In this way she was able to learn their desires for their school and the needs that the school should meet. She usually spent a day, oftentimes more in a home, while she talked, she did not allow herself to assume the attitude of a guest, taking up valuable time, but assisted the women of the house at whatever she was doing. Thus gaining her confidence and consequently more information than if she had merely been a guest at a mission.

With the knowledge thus gained she approached the school board. The outcome of all her effort was that there was the largest attendance at the next annual meeting of the board. With scarcely a dissenting voice it was agreed to adopt the teachers' plans for improvements.

The school house stood in a natural grove of oak. It was raised and under a deep, full basement was provided. This was cemented, provided with a good furnace, laundry, coal bin, sink, pit, eastern, pump and drain. In one end of the building the kitchen was supplied with necessary cooking utensils and oil stove with oven. At the other is a good, roomy workbench with necessary tools. At one side is a kindergarten table and chairs; and at the other are neatly piled boards and "horses" for extra seats to be used on special occasions, which are now frequently occurrence.

A good roomy vestibule was added with double doors opening into the school room. In this vestibule is a bench under which rubbers are hung, a table for coats, a shelf for lunch pails, and in a position facing the outside door, an artistic mirror. A child entering the building cannot help seeing whether he is neat or not. If he is not he can go to the lavatory in the basement and make himself so. He is artistically impressed with the lighting and seating. The original building had three windows on each side. Those on one side had been carefully covered with dark shades, and three extra windows had been proposed. The teacher made it possible to have plenty of light all from one direction. The seats were not fastened to the floor as is usually done. They were fastened in groups of three to heavy cleats which can be moved about at will and yet are perfectly stationary when occupied.

The room was otherwise provided with a piano, (the gift of a public spirited citizen) a good lantern, a picture, on a heavy screen which serves the purpose also of curtain for theatricals, a covered water jar and a neat rack for individual drinking cups, a sewing machine, and a typewriter.

The daily program is carefully printed and hung in conspicuous place. On this was indicated the regular recitations and the periods for vocational exercises, so that each child could tell just when he was expected to do it with no further directions from the teacher. The older girls assisted by hearing the recitations of the primary grades, and two of the older boys, all the frequent and quick turns in supervising the manual training work of the smaller boys, at the same time doing his own work. Those doing typewriting soon became so proficient that the teacher had to make frequent and quick turns in supervising the copying of programs, invitations, or business letters for her.

Arbor day was observed this year by filling in the yard, sowing grass seed, planting shrubbery, laying gravel walks and drives, setting hitching posts, building toolsheds, about out-building and planting vines, in leveling a good big open space for ball ground, and in placing some simple play-ground apparatus. Every patron of the school was invited to the big and the result is highly gratifying to all concerned.

The teacher reported that the regular work had been much more satisfactorily done before. She was proud of the vocational studies and as evidence of the general good effect said that the year following their introduction eight pupils had entered high school, while before there had gone beyond the eighth grade.

Here seems to me, lies the great secret. The enthusiasm for education and community sociability and improvement apparent throughout the district. More than that, this spirit has spread to other communities, where even greater things have been done and are being done. I wish I had space in which to tell of another school house the erection of which was due to the spread of the enthusiasm engendered by this one little teacher who acted upon her convictions.

In our party were representatives of ten different states, and all were enthusiastic over what they had seen. The day of the rural school exhibit has come and the farmer boy is going to have his chance.

AUTO ACCIDENT NEAR CREIGHTON IS FATAL

Creighton, Neb., July 6.—Charles Snider was killed about 10:30 o'clock Sunday night, driving home in his automobile. The car turned completely over, pinning him under in the water. It was thought that he drowned. The accident happened three and a half miles northwest of Creighton. The car looked as if it had fallen off a bridge.

This was the most serious of a number of accidents at Creighton during the celebration. Miss Falton sustained a broken leg just above the ankle by being thrown out of a buggy when the horse, frightened by a torpedo that struck it, started to run away. The buggy was thrown completely over and torn from the running gear. There were three in the buggy. The accident occurred in the ball park during a game. An automobile driven by Lou Young was struck by another car, smashing a fender and damaging the steering wheel of the other car. North of the ball park an automobile was turned over with its front axle broken. It was not known who was in it. In the auto parade Miss Winnie Moun won first prize, $25, and Mr. Benner was second. A shower spoiled the evening celebration. Royal won the ball game by 3. Batteries: Royal, McGoff and McGoff; Creighton, Housen and Brown.

Occasionally one can easily believe that "poetic license" is almost as bad as boozie license. The submarine warfare is generally looked upon by the English as a failure. A certain percent of loss is expected and is taken stoically. It is expected that five or six boats will be sunk each week and the only result of such losses is an increase in the number of enlistments. Large nets are used by the English for catching the submarines. A system of nets that works effectively is maintained in the English channel. A net 200 feet square is lightly anchored in such a manner that, when run into by the submarine the net envelops it and is closed up. By means of a telephone system connecting the net and the shore it is known when a submarine has been captured. Then a torpedo boat destroyer is sent out to follow until the submarine comes to the surface when its surrender is demanded. He is in no way a tenderer as "rammed." A traveler crossing the channel reports seeing four submarines that had been captured on the bank. The successes of the English in the capture of submarines is not so well kept in the dark. It is thought that if the submarine blockade were effective and the food supply cut off, England would be starved into surrender in three weeks. The fact that there is no suffering and no shortage of food is pointed to by the English as indication of the failure of the submarine warfare.

The people are not apprehensive about Zeppelin attacks. If, as has been the case, the night people are killed during a Zeppelin raid that is not more than are killed accidentally while crossing the streets, in a week. One's chances of being killed by a Zeppelin are not so great as of being killed in merely walking down

WELDON CROSSLAND IS HOME FROM ENGLAND

INTERVIEWED BY HERALD

Relates Experience in War-Swift Europe—Gives English View of Submarines.

Weldon Crossland, Rhodes scholar at Oxford, England, arrived in Wayne last Wednesday to spend his week at his home. He sailed from Liverpool on the American liner St. Paul, which he traversed through the danger zone by two British submarines. The trip was uneventful, however. There was no excitement nor apprehension of danger. The passengers did not notice an attack from a submarine. The fact that the ship was an American liner gave a feeling of security.

Mr. Crossland spent much of the winter doing Y. M. C. A. work in the army camps. He tells interestingly of the war situation as seen by the English.

Oxford college is a center for training officers and there are now about five-sixths of the students in the army camps. Several of the smaller colleges have been closed or consolidated, and many of the buildings have been converted into hospitals for the care of the wounded. The Marine Corps at Oxford are being used as hospitals. English women of all classes act as nurses. In England it is said, there is no hardship or suffering caused by the war and little English losses do not depress or discourage the people, the only effect being the stimulation of enlistment. In London the floating population is taking the place of those who enlist, there being no lack of work and wages being good.

Since the outbreak of the war there has been necessarily a cessation of the aggressive tactics of the suffragettes. Mrs. Pankhurst and other prominent suffrage leaders have become recreating agents. Women are taking the place of men in many lines. Women are now seen as ticket sellers at railroad stations and as conductors on street cars. Mr. Crossland says that in England, women as well as men have to fight for their rights. He is in sympathy with the English suffrage movement and believes good has been accomplished by its means.

The English people are not excited over conditions. They are optimistic as to the outcome. They are sure that England will win. The great need now is not men for the army and navy, but money.

The submarine warfare is generally looked upon by the English as a failure. A certain percent of loss is expected and is taken stoically. It is expected that five or six boats will be sunk each week and the only result of such losses is an increase in the number of enlistments. Large nets are used by the English for catching the submarines. A system of nets that works effectively is maintained in the English channel. A net 200 feet square is lightly anchored in such a manner that, when run into by the submarine the net envelops it and is closed up. By means of a telephone system connecting the net and the shore it is known when a submarine has been captured. Then a torpedo boat destroyer is sent out to follow until the submarine comes to the surface when its surrender is demanded. He is in no way a tenderer as "rammed." A traveler crossing the channel reports seeing four submarines that had been captured on the bank. The successes of the English in the capture of submarines is not so well kept in the dark. It is thought that if the submarine blockade were effective and the food supply cut off, England would be starved into surrender in three weeks. The fact that there is no suffering and no shortage of food is pointed to by the English as indication of the failure of the submarine warfare.

The people are not apprehensive about Zeppelin attacks. If, as has been the case, the night people are killed during a Zeppelin raid that is not more than are killed accidentally while crossing the streets, in a week. One's chances of being killed by a Zeppelin are not so great as of being killed in merely walking down town in a large city. There is less excitement about them here than in the United States. The deadly gas bombs were not used in the attack on London.

When Zeppelin raiders sailed from Belgium last fall they were sent to work and assist in the distribution of food. The country is being kept under strict surveillance by the German government. The young men were arrested as spies several times, but were released after careful examination. Early in the winter there were some hardships endured by the Belgians, but owing to prompt relief measures, there was not so much suffering as was generally reported.

The government is in the hands of the Germans, and is very carefully organized. Germany has taken over the public schools and is evidently planning to keep the country. Conditions in Belgium are not so bad as is generally believed.

Mr. Crossland will spend two weeks in Wayne and then return to England by way of Gibraltar, landing in Italy and spending a month in the Red Cross work in France, before returning to Oxford.

MISS LAMKIN AND THE CHILDREN

The splendid results of Miss Lamkin's work remain long after she has gone. While the children are intensely interested and amused, and think it all good fun, there is not a game played, not a story told, or an exercise given that has not been carefully selected on account of certain developments of lagging muscles, or certain influences, on young minds. It is the most scientific attraction appearing at any of the chautauquas and from first to last is working with definite aims in view. It inculcates a spirit of liberality and fairness in sports, abhors all forms of unfairness, and has a healthy interest in God's great outdoors, and leaves the young people all vastly better for their experience, and with an enthusiasm for right things for the future that is invaluable.

"We did not believe in organized play before Miss Lamkin came. At the end of her week with us we had set aside ground for a playground and when she returned to us the following year we had the playground equipped and a physical director in our schools." Miss Lamkin is writing a series of articles, giving suggestive work in physical training for the primary grades—in Primary Plans—one of the largest school magazines in the country. The articles include games, games and for dances.

Miss Lamkin has examined during the last ten years over 10,000 boys and girls and has told the parents of the physical handicaps which were retarding growth either physical or mental.

Mothers and parents who are alive to the value of organized play and the health of the child will not miss any of Miss Lamkin's lectures or play periods with the boys and girls. My acquaintance with Miss Lamkin extends over a period of more than ten years. During that time I have watched with keen interest the development of her work. To few are given master minds, few possess the talent of generalizing and holding the undivided attention of children; Miss Lamkin is one of the few endowed with this rare gift and her work deserves none but the highest praise.

"Das Garten Spiel" is not a fancy about it.

ALLEN, NEB., WOMAN ESCAPES THE KNIFE

For years Mrs. L. H. Jeffrey of Allen, Neb., suffered from serious illness. She had dangerous stomach derangement. Dr. Jeffrey learned of Mayer's Wonderful Remedy. He investigated. He wrote to a man who had used it. Assured of the absolute safety, he gave a dose to Mrs. Jeffrey. The bottle gave his wife is told in a letter he wrote to a Sioux City druggist:

"I wish to say a few words in commendation of Mayer's Wonderful Remedy for what it has done for my wife. She has been troubled with gall stones for years. I saw George H. Mayer's advertisement of this wonderful stomach remedy, so I sent for a bottle. When I got it the dose was so large that I was afraid to give it. But when I wrote to J. C. Myers of Rock Street, Sioux City, and he wrote that it was perfectly safe, my wife took it with very satisfactory results. She gained about half a cappel of gain, she got some more to complete the cure."

Mayer's Wonderful Remedy gives permanent results for stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, and it does so whatever you like. No more distress after eating. Pressure of gas in the stomach and around the heart. Get one bottle of your druggist; not ask for it on an absolute guarantee—if not satisfactory money will be returned.

LADY PATIENTS

In no line of disease do we have better success than in the various diseases and ailments which affect woman-kind. Benefits are promptly shown without the annoyance which they are subjected to under other treatment. The proper nerve supply being restored, normal functions are quickly re-established.

A. D. Lewis, Chiropractor

do-It, first, by full-page display advertisement in the Yellow Pages. These are almost a complete catalogue of each of the various departments of the entire store. Think of it, a daily issue of a full illustrated catalogue with catches, descriptions and intelligibly phrased talk-about-cut prices spread out before thousands of women who have money to spend and who need the goods. There can be but one result, which means a sale.

How long could these big stores exist if they did not use these advertising mediums to draw trade. The answer is self-evident. Their expenses would eat them up and put them out of business inside of ten months.

It is to suppose that the country town merchant could afford to issue a catalogue or have a mail order department, but he has his local newspaper and its working force at his disposal and it is the greatest, best and cheapest advertising force in the world.

Mr. Merchant, just store this thought under your hat: Every country town that has a daily or weekly newspaper is missing a harvest if its merchants do not make it a mail order catalogue. Every inch of advertising space should be used. It's a gold mine. It should be your cut price catalogue with a good illustration and a catchy description of every article of merchandise carried in stock in your town. No matter whether it be a package of onion seed, a gas engine, a hay scale, or a flannel shirt, and every article shown should have a price attached. Don't be afraid to advertise your prices. That is the whole secret of successful merchandising. Price first, last and all the time should be the big feature. Your name in big letters will not pull trade. Price and plain figures will do so.

TRADE BUILDING.
Auburn, Republican: In last week's issue you commented upon the decrease of population during the past ten years in the smaller towns of a majority of states in the Middle West and invited correspondence on the subject. The following is the first contribution from a well known writer, whose name is withheld by request: Dear Editor:

In your last week's article you asked the question, "What is the matter with the country towns in the Middle West? Why are they going backward, and showing a decrease in population?" In this you have certainly hit upon a live issue. The question is one that should have the serious consideration of every business and professional man of your town, as well as every merchant and manufacturer in the United States.

When the smaller towns go backward as they are now doing, the industrial and moral welfare of the country will suffer. The cause of this condition must be established before we can prescribe a remedy. The writer's opinion is that a good share of the population in the small towns consists of those who have contributed as much as they should do toward the industrial growth of the town. That spells lack of opportunity for young people.

Now then, suppose for the sake of argument we put the question the other way and ask, what is the matter with the merchants in the smaller towns of this country?

Your average storekeeper in the country town is a man of healthy, strong and intellectual, but unfortunately as a merchant he simply will not get out of the rut made in his line of trade by the footsteps of his predecessors. This is the plan, but is it what the average country merchant needs, especially those who imagine that they can handle their business on the same old plan as that employed by their predecessors twenty or forty years ago. They have new conditions to face, new forces to contend with, almost insurmountable obstacles to overcome.

The interurban car, the automobile, good roads and other forms of rapid transit to the larger towns are conditions which have come to stay. So is the parcel post. All of this means that the country merchant must, in order to be successful work along entirely new lines. He must meet city competition with the city man's plan of getting business. That is his problem. Easy to say, but difficult to do, is the thought which enters the mind of the country merchant who reads this, but that this new reasoning will not make headway. Think it over.

Here is the question: How do the big stores in the city attract buyers? The answer is they to blank. There is only one subject in which all farmers agree and that is, high taxes. They want no more tax killed by the neighbor's dog. Why not ask pay for the wheat killed by the neighbor's Hessian fly? Cut it together. Every neighbor-hood should have a Hessian fly club and appoint a Hessian fly committee.

Cut the wheat high, above the current price. Remove the grain from the field and stack it somewhere else. The fly is now in the resting stage and the safest way and only sure plan is for every farmer to plow every acre deeply and thoroughly within two weeks after harvest, turning under the stubble completely and then dragging early. This will fix Mr. Fly.

Teach the school children to look for the fly, and report it at every stage. Appoint a captain in every school district, who should be the best wheat grower in the neighborhood. This early complete plowing will not only reduce the fly, but will be a great benefit to next year's crop. It does not let the feed dry out after harvest, and gets it ready to hold all the moisture which is so badly needed in most sections. It is started from other things being equal. Three acres plowed in July are worth five acres plowed in September.

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY.
Fremont Tribune: The movement to celebrate the golden anniversary of the state of Nebraska in 1917 is certain to meet with general and enthusiastic support on the part of the people of the state.

The State Historical society, which is fathering the enterprise has committees appointed to take charge of the work and give it a proper direction. A sub-committee of twenty-five will present plans in September for the celebration. Meantime suggestions will be invited and will doubtless be forthcoming in profusion as to how to most appropriately observe the anniversary. It may be noted that the chairman of the committee is Gordon W. Wattles of Omaha. He was president of the Missouri-Mississippi exposition held at Omaha in 1898, and in that connection distinguished himself in an unusual capacity. He proved his executive capacity and force and with the aid of efficient colleagues that enterprise did something no other exposition ever did in America. He has been able to do, namely, to pay back to the stockholders every dollar of their subscriptions.

Mr. Wattles is a man of rare executive ability and that under his initial guidance the worthy object to be achieved in 1917 will be creditably and successfully done goes without saying. Naturally the desire will be to introduce something unique in the celebration of a half century of statehood, yet having no precedent to follow, the subject in hand. Generally speaking there should be universal recognition of the event. To that end it would seem that no plan could well merit participation on the part of the people of the state, or schools of the state. Two vital purposes of the celebration will be to teach history and to foster state pride. There is no place like the public school to do effective work in this kind. There is no better opportunity for every city and town of the state to formally recognize the anniversary in such form as each may be able to devise. Whether an exposition should be held for the purpose of the progress of the arts and sciences and industry is an open question. Expositions of the old order are about obsolete. Yet, if there should be a central celebration, as there properly may be, and the state is able to combine it with the State fair, as to make the one for that year memorable in the annals of the state. The timely beginning of the work will afford opportunity for the people to give vent to the versatile minds of the citizenship of the state that will be as striking as are the fruits of its fertile soil.

THE HESSIAN FLY.
Norfolk Daily News: Claiming that three acres of ground plowed in July are worth five acres plowed in September, the crop improvement committee of the county has sent out arguments to millers in this state in an effort to induce farmers to do early work in a campaign to kill the Hessian fly.

C. S. Bridge, owner of the Norfolk Cereal and Flour mills, argues that the campaign planned by the committee would have to be undertaken by the entire community in order to procure a victory in the battle.

The crop improvement committee's statement follows: "We feed 50,000,000 bushels of good wheat to the Hessian fly every year, to say nothing of what it costs us to feed our chickens and other pests, and have only ourselves

Stack your grain, says the crop improvement committee of the Council of North America grain exchanges. Feathers, such as difficulty in securing threshing because of the big crop and compulsory standing of grain in the fields, are given in a circular which is being distributed by the Kansas City board of trade. The circular says: "Stacking will save grain and straw which might otherwise be spoiled in wet weather. Stacking will put grain through a complete sweat which will improve quality. Threshing from the stack requires less fuel than shock threshing, which will equate the cost of stacking. Stacking furnishes good storage with absolutely no cost which would prevent glutting the market at any one time. The grain must be removed for early working of the soil. Stacking makes it possible to plow following harvesting. Early plowing is one of the greatest factors in increasing the yield. Discing the land early is the next best thing."

requirements are the hygienic conditions must be good. There must be plenty of pure air, light, and fresh air. There must be good food and suitable clothing. With these and normal physical conditions to begin with the child has a what should be the birthright of every child, a good start in life. A new world opens when the child enters the school. It is not only new, but amazing to the child. With a healthy and developed imagination the child comes into the school that comes to the older child who discovers a new world or group—some great new fact in science. What shall be done with the child's place in it? What are its requirements and relationships? And the school age should be the age of rational adjustment of his mental and moral and physical faculties to the greater issues of life that lie just ahead.
 If his home training and associations have been good, if he has been rightly trained, when he comes to find all kinds of other children about him, he will choose of the best and companions of a right basis. He will select his playmates, too, very largely from the language of the children.
 His success in school will depend upon a number of things, principally, upon his health, his temperament, and his teacher's ability and tact in reaching and studying him—and very largely again upon the environment of his home life, not only during the school period but prior to it. And here, in the school period, also, the conditions must be right. Sometimes health is so stunted in the first year of school life that it takes many years to overcome the handicap. We devote much time and careful, painstaking labor to cultivate our fields and provide a suitable seed bed and good care and conditions for the growth and healthy development of the plant. So too of the greatest importance that we link the school to the home and that parents take an active and intelligent interest in the development of their child. Not the nagging and fault finding interest, but the helpfulness—with the desire to co-operate and assist the teacher in understanding the child's temperament and needs. Naturally the mother and father must work with the child and a better judge of his temperament, because of her closer touch and experiences. And it is the parents' duty to aid the teacher in every way to help and guide the boys and girls to reach their own level of life and develop their ability to decide in a practical way the right and wrong of things.
 In the little troubles that arise on matters of discipline between the child and the teacher, it is often possible for a parent to adjust the matter without taking sides. Both child and teacher are due a careful hearing and wise suggestion, and let the children themselves to right action and with such settlement comes a lesson in character building and citizenship that will surpass in value any lesson taught from a book.
 There is no reason why the child should ever be bored at school, and one of the great things sought by the newer idea of lessons through play is an escape from the printed page and the awakening of the child to an interest in his world and development upon the child's own mind. Through organized play he is required to do real things and the desire to succeed and the sense of pride in doing well and the feeling that something is expected of him, all come to our assistance in training him.
 Under proper direction of teachers and parents the child's energies are brought to bear and strengthened by his desire to do the things well that seem to him desirable. And back of all our success is the feeling of love and confidence between pupil and teacher. No teacher is a teacher who is not at heart the lover of the boys and girls. With the greatest factor in the life of the child because it involves all the things needed—action, vitality, forbearance, energy, interest—all that develops the faculties, gives health and strength and makes thought necessary. Consideration for others is one of the fundamentals of our broader citizenship, and the child gets this viewpoint from the carefully directed playground. He must know how and all his faculties for finding out things are alive and alert and in deadly earnest, and their direction in right channels is easier. Healthy minds are only possible and are only of value for the real service of the world when they are housed in healthy bodies—and here the playground again supplies the answer.—American municipal authorities all over the country are justifying this responsibility by providing every facility for training the children for better citizenship as a community asset and we have out-of-door and indoor gymnasiums, swimming pools, shower baths, tennis, croquet, ball fields, reading rooms and rooms for lectures, recitals and social meetings. New standards have been established and the results are accounted so great that no mere money value can be placed upon them. They are reckoned among the wisest business investments a city can make. The movement is growing so rapidly that there is hardly a town of 5000 people that has not established a playground for organized play, and millions of dollars are spent in building up the playground facilities—simply because the idea is producing results that appeal to level headed parents and teachers everywhere. In San Francisco, for example, appropriated over a million for playgrounds, and it is determined it will have proper facilities for the healthful life and growth of its children. Could Froebel come back and see how the world is beginning to appreciate his idea he would feel that he had not lived in vain. One of the aims is that the playground shall supplement the classroom, and that both shall work toward the same end—the better citizen. We will suppose the class in physiology is carrying a lesson about respiration. The co-operation of the playground would come in with games requiring deep breathing. Or in hygiene and sanitation, the playground work in bathing, in the care of the person, the brush and comb, the soap, towels, the public drinking cup, the care of the eyes, the hair, teeth, etc., all these are impressed as a part of the child how to live a cleanly, healthy life—to be strong and in the best work in life. So it brings the child to an interest in these things and welds fast the links between the home and the school. It helps to guide the child mentally, morally, socially and physically into higher manhood and womanhood and not only make individual life a larger and finer thing, but builds a stronger and broader citizenship.

 Every married woman thinks that every girl who is going with a warm overcoat a whole lot of warmings.
 This may be a great error and all of that, but the smart men have not discovered when the fish will bite.

CHILDREN'S WORLD AND ORGANIZED PLAY

Excerpts from an address given by Miss Grace M. Lamkin who will appear on the program of the forthcoming Wayne chautauqua and who will have charge of the children during the session:
 The life of the normal child is divided between three centers—the home, the school and the playground. From birth, to the age of five, the child lives in the home—of course, predominant. Here the mother is supreme. The child's imagination is keen. It draws its first impressions of life from those with whom it comes in contact—the people. Naturally it imitates. And a thought to remember always is that it imitates the bad as well as the good.
 During this almost exclusive home life of the child, parents appreciate and keep in touch with the child world more perhaps than at any other period, because in studying to please and interest the child there comes constant and immediate satisfaction in the evidence of growth and contentment. The most important of the child's world is the playground. It is the child's world because it involves all the things needed—action, vitality, forbearance, energy, interest—all that develops the faculties, gives health and strength and makes thought necessary. Consideration for others is one of the fundamentals of our broader citizenship, and the child gets this viewpoint from the carefully directed playground. He must know how and all his faculties for finding out things are alive and alert and in deadly earnest, and their direction in right channels is easier. ### AMERICAN IDEALS A NEW WORLD FORCE

The following synopsis of his Sunday morning sermon was furnished by request by Rev. A. S. Buell, pastor of the Methodist church:

Text, Matt. 7:12. "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye unto them." The American ideal is expressed in the golden rule. America is not the inventor nor discover of the golden rule but she is seriously adopting it in her theory and practice over other nations. Some are willing to reverse the golden rule and substitute the "rule of gold." Europe today is fighting for the supremacy of commerce. Two centuries have passed since Jesus spoke the message of our text and peoples of various nations have been willing to practice its principle, but it remained for America to apply the golden rule seriously, in its relations with other nations. America is the "big brother" to distressed nations and play the part of the good Samaritan, rather than that of the robbers and thieves on the which are stronger than life itself in making for a truer America. The public school room is the true melting pot where the second and third generations of raw material come out in the completed American. The American chautauqua, or open air summer school, is a mighty force in strengthening the ideals in the minds of the people. The American press with its news which is a conductor of either good or bad influences, if it is true that the public school is the melting pot for the future of the nation, the school room for adult people. The chautauqua must remain true to its own ideals and not become a cheap entertainment course. We are glad to note the fact that whenever the chautauqua has degenerated in program it has been a failure, and its continued success has been assured only when its program of high ideals has been maintained."

The continued success of the newspaper is dependent upon the high moral standard which it represents. An American newspaper without a strong, conscientious management must sooner or later fail. The press is not only a moulder of public opinion, but it is moulded by public missionary, our democracy, our free speech and free press to the world. We are proud of our citizenship. We believe in the dawn of the day when national rights will become human rights. The nation will become cooperation and the watchword will be "Liberty and Union" for all the world as it is now for America.

CHURCH CALENDAR.

Methodist Church.
(Rev. A. S. Buell, Pastor.)
The Epworth League gave a patriotic service in the church Sunday evening at 8 o'clock following the union service in the English Lutheran church.

Walden J. Crossland recently returned from Oxford university, England, led the meeting. He opened the meeting with a discussion of the following topics: "What is christian patriotism? Do demands do it today? How can we be satisfied? These demands? Would it be right for us to control our own nation whether right or wrong? Should the pagan contend for pagan ideals? In what do pagan and christian ideals differ? Pagan ideals are selfish; selfish ideals are pagan. Christian ideal are altruistic while pagan ideals are always selfish." Rev. A. S. Buell spoke on the church and patriotism. President H. H. Bristol spoke of the school, of education and patriotism. Mrs. S. A. Lutgen presented a paper on patriotism and the home which was in part as follows: "The church has ever been a sacred spot. In its history and christian ideals differ. An organization which has been in the past and is till the great conserving agency in human society, preserving and transmitting from generation to generation both the material and they be taught the accomplishments of life."

"In olden times it was the strength of the armies and the extent of their conquests that determined the greatness of the nation, and the patriotism of its people; today it is the bigness of the ideals, the wonderfulness of the achievements and the strength of his love for humanity that stamps greatness upon the nation. As the home is the unit of the nation so as James Russell Lowell says, "The many make the household but only one the home," and as Ross Wallace in his well known poem says, "But mightier power and stronger, man from his throne has hurried; For the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world." How in keeping are these sayings with the words of the bible: "Bring up a child in the way that he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." As the father is the breadwinner and provider, so the mother is responsible for the care and nurture of home and children. She must implant in their minds lessons of truth, of love and of patriotism. And well she can for her patriotism as well as the valor of the men helped to make our nation a great one. It is today, although by great love she can teach a path for liberty, a liberty that lifts up the fallen and redeems and blesses humanity; a brotherhood if you please, that will far outdo mere patriotism, as stated by Emerson, "murder, whether between individuals or nations, must sometime yield to intelligence and reason. The greatest patriotism is not shown in a willingness to risk life in order to defend the flag, but in the willingness to stand for that which will lighten the pathway of the human race to higher ground. And who can teach these truths better than the mother?" The Greek mother instructed her son to return on his shield or with none. Shall we as modern mothers advance with the times? Shall we not rather teach him the principles of brotherhood, to be clean within or without, to be prepared to fight or to need for the principles of his country? Let us remember that Christ said, "Children are a heritage of the Lord." And with his help raise them to be patriotic for God, home and country."

Church Notes.

Regular preaching service at 10:30 and Sunday school at 11:45 next Sunday morning. The Epworth League and evening preaching will not be held during the chautauqua.

St. Paul's English Lutheran Church.
(Rev. F. E. Blessing, Pastor.)

Sunday school every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. We are glad to see some new scholars coming into the church. The bible class has been growing so rapidly that we will like to thank the parents in the bible class on Sunday. What an encouragement it would be to the young? Regular divine worship in the morning at 11 o'clock. The subject of the sermon for next Sunday morning is "The Significance of the Cleansed Leper," Matt. 8:1-4.

Christ had just closed his most memorable discourse upon the leprosy. Many people had been impressed with his words and were moved to follow him—some that they might hear more of his teachings, while others, out of mere curiosity came after him as he descended the mount. When the Christ stood at the foot of the mountain, a man afflicted with the dreadful disease of leprosy came to him saying, "Lord if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." There was an opportunity for Christ to put him in his authority, to give late teachings, and to set his seal to all that he had taught. He therefore put forth his hand and touched the leper and said, "I will be thou clean."

program next Sunday will be the promotion of a class from the junior to the intermediate department and to the junior.

All are invited to the church service next Sunday morning. The pastor will preach on the subject: "Come With Us." Special music at each of the services.

The C. E. society will meet at 6 o'clock. This is the consecration meeting and will be led by the president, Mrs. Esther McEachen. Learn the pledge and come.

The mid-week prayer meeting as well as the Sunday evening services will be omitted next week on account of the chautauqua. Our mid-week meetings are growing.

The Junior Endeavor society meeting will be omitted during the next two Sundays, but aside from this, it is planned to continue the meetings all summer.

First Baptist Church.
(Rev. B. P. Richardson, Pastor.)

Why support a church? What does the church mean to your community, your home, your children and your own life? Is the church a vital factor in the building of character? Are its ideals its messages, its inspiration needed in our modern age? Will the family that neglects the church have the same type of home life, the same kind of children, the same influence as the family that gives the church a large place in its life? Look around and see the families you know, and judge for yourself.

The fact is this: The things for which the church stands are so vital to the good of all life, that no one can ignore it without great loss. No other institution, anywhere, yields such large returns as does the church. If you have children in your home, look well, to how you act towards the church. The real life of the child is determined by the things it feeds upon.

"Vigilance" will be the subject of the Sunday morning sermon. Sunday afternoon and evening there will be sessions of the chautauqua. No church services.

There will be no prayer meeting next week. Tomorrow (Friday) the prayer circle will meet at the home of Mrs. Stofes. Miss Nora Gilbert will be leader.

Let us host the chautauqua. It is a strong adjunct of the church, the school and the home. It stands for great things.

Wayne Superlative is a spring wheat flour which explains WHY it has superior qualities. Phone 131. WEBER BROTHERS

Jericho read.
When our sister to the south was in distress we went to war with Spain in a humanitarian spirit, to help Cuba break the yoke of the oppressor. When by Divine providence the Philippines came into our possession, we undertook to prove our genuine interest in her welfare and have enabled her to lift up her head. When the western soldiers entered the capital of China we proved our humane spirit, and in Christian brotherhood returned the indemnity money. Our watchful vigilance in regard to Mexico is well known to all. The brotherly spirit of the people of that far distant country.

We have our internal adjustments to make and we are trying to make them in the same humanitarian spirit. Possibly our greatest contention is between labor and capital, between riches and poverty. Here we have some remarkable illustrations of the "big brother" spirit. We are sorry to say that it has not al-opinion. If it insists on being the mosquito that carries the germ of pollution to society, some one is sure to pour oil on the water. The high moral standard which it represents is a considerable force in maintaining true ideals.

The American home must not lose its ideals. We know the home is threatened by the divorce evil. The American woman has come close to her rightful place as companion and so partner with the man. The home ideal must remain true to itself until it shall lead the way to freedom for womanhood of the world.

Our country must make good progress. We have learned to know alcohol as a poison and are beginning to deal with it as such. We must deal with it in its effects, not only upon individuals, but upon society as well.

America is a nation with Christian ideals. We are practical enough to attempt to apply those ideals in international relationship. Our watch-spiritual possession of the race. We find in Genesis the account of "The Jews being divided every one after his tongue, after their families in their own languages." The leaves of sacred history we find the family binding all together. Great lessons of patriotism and love for tribe and country are given there. Joseph, the husband of Mary, a carpenter in Nazareth was a native of Bethlehem, but not where one would he always carefully guarded his citizenship in the place of his birth. So, descending from the royal house of Israel, he kept his home on the roll of the so-called "foreigners" who registered to Bethlehem he must go. Thus it was that the Holy Child was born in the Bethlehem manger. We recall how Abraham sent back to his old home for his son Isaac's wife, how Joseph went to the land of his ancestors and there secured his wife, and so all through the scriptures we read of the family and the home.

"It is in the family that children learn to love, and obey, to be of service, and to respect one another's rights. The idea of human brotherhood has no meaning unless family affection gives it that meaning. If the child fails to learn what law is and to get proper ideas of the relation of the citizen to the state and nation, in his early years, there are good prospects of his being numbered among the lawless element of society. Comte says, 'The nation whose family life decays, cuts at its core and dries up the springs of all social and civic life.' There are Rome was at its best, when leader of the nation, its home life was strongest. For 250 years after it was founded there was not a single divorce in Rome." However, that is not finally understood the nation, the same as it will any nation for the home must be maintained, must do its work for the nation to thrive.

The value of home training is so recognized that many nations are sending away with the institutions and asylums for rearing homeless children, and instead are caring for them only enough to find suitable homes—homes where they have mothers to love and direct and provide for them. We are learning that the best aim, not only for the welfare of the individual, but for the nation as well is to teach individuals the good habits of the home, to have good neighbors and members of a community, even more than that ways been the golden rule, however, that has guided in these matters. All too often the rule of gold has crushed human interests, and made human life and welfare secondary considerations. The cry of brotherhood and the spirit of fraternity is everywhere. Our fraternal societies multiply until it seems as though every village is over-loaded with fraternal orders. This is indicative of the struggle after brotherhood. The church in America has crested good for the real brotherhood of man, through the common fatherhood of God. American ideals are seen through the character of our institutions that are developing in our country. We have no state church, yet the United States is founded upon Christianity. The independent churches of this country are the great dynamic generating moral and spiritual convictions.

word is brotherhood. We will be tolerant but we will not be indifferent. We are not willing to fight over any chip on the shoulder, episodes but will if need be, contend unto death for the right. We will be loath to enter Mexico, but humanity may demand our influence in the interests of peace. We need not boast that we do not want war for conquest. Certainly we are not crumpled for room. Who will say that it might not be difficult with us if we were hemmed in by grasping nations. Our geographic situation, our expanded domain, our internal resources, our Christian ideals and training fit us to be "big brother" to the nations of the world. It becomes incumbent upon us to espouse the cause of humanity. We have already set the golden rule for the world in the applied golden rule. We have given our

BRENNA

Mrs. Walter Taylor visited in Pilger Thursday and Friday.
Mr. and Mrs. James Baird were guests at the Frank Perrin home in Winside Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Winegar and Mr. and Mrs. George Baird were Sunday guests at the Wm. Fletcher home in Winside.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Wright and son Maurice returned Friday. While gone they visited at Palmer, Norfolk and Callaway, Neb.

With very few exceptions the whole of Brenna celebrated in Winside. Rather a sorry looking crowd came home in the rain.

Mr. and Mrs. Art Auker with Mr. and Mrs. Chas. O'Kiefe of Minneapolis and Guy Auker of Wayne went to Laurel Monday.

In the item "Woods-Baird Nuptials" from the Carroll correspondence last week the writer said: "The groom is almost a stranger to us," but felt safe in saying he was a worthy young man. May the Brenna writer say a word along that line? Mr. Fred Baird is no stranger in Brenna. He was born and has grown to manhood on the same farm near the center of Brenna. He is one of the best and most energetic young men Brenna ever produced. The new home is one mile south of his father's home, so we are glad to say Fred will still be one of us. As the Carroll correspondent was with the groom so we are with the bride---she is almost a stranger to us, but we will be glad to welcome her to our midst.

A. T. Waddell after selling his work team and wagon to Robert Corston, S. D., where he is manager and editor of the Corsico Journal, after spending his vacation of two weeks at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Weatherholt.

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Parker returned to their home at Bender Monday morning after a short visit at the home of Mrs. Parker's sister, Mrs. Arch Jackson.

Mr. and Mrs. John Gifford and Miss Helen Goodsell of Belden, visited at the Ray Gifford home and were passengers to Randolph Saturday to attend the celebration.

J. L. Beaton and wife returned last week from their visit with their son, Clarence and family at Earham, Io. They report Clarence's folks all well and the crops much farther advanced than here.

Mrs. Bert Robinson and Bert Cook are enjoying a visit with their sister, Mrs. Danker of California, who arrived from Omaha Thursday evening. This is their first meeting in twenty-eight years. Mrs. Danker expects to remain a month.

Those from here who were passengers to Randolph Saturday were: Mr. Butterfield and family, W. J. Lambing and family, Maud Gibson, Mrs. Danker, Mrs. Bert Robinson and children, while nearly all who had autos drove to Randolph on Winside.

A large crowd attended the celebration at Randolph Saturday and every one had a good time as there was something doing all the time until it began raining. Many were compelled to leave their cars and a special train was ordered on the C. St. P. & O. road to convey people to their homes. W. H. Root's car took second prize in the automobile parade.
