It's Smooth as Silk

A talcum powder containing the least particle of grit or foreign substance is not a proper powder to use on baby's tender skin—or on your own.

Before you accept a toilet powder, rub a little on the back of the hand or on the tender part of the wrist—you will easily detect the presence of grit.

Apply this test to NYLIS MAYFLOWER Toilet Talcum

—you will notice two things—its perfect smoothness and a delightful odor. It is a delightful powder in every way.

Its smoothness combined with its antiseptic properties leaves the skin soft and velvety—and free from irritation.

"LOST AND FOUND"

Omaha Examiner, a week recently lost a handful of votes on the streets was the other day about her advertisement "Lost and Found" advertisement. She watched the newspapers for news. She says that there were a number of votes lost for her, but she does not know where they are.

Any article of sufficient value to advertise is usually picked up by someone. It looks as if about six-tenths of the people who find a piece of paper keep them, making various efforts to find the owner. No doubt most people who would find a found paper, without effort to trace the owner, would recoil with disgust at the idea of picking a person's pocket. Their feeling could not merely be a fear of the law, but a sense that it is a mean, low-down trick to steal. Yet they may do something equally mean by indirection.

People should put themselves in the place of the other person. Losing a sum of money or other property is a most irritating experience. It does not give a person a carelessness and one who loses less than more than if the money were quickly wasted in some extravagant and needless purchase. The return of a lost article is a kindness that is not soon forgotten. There are comparatively few people who on reading a "Found" notice in a newspaper would deign to return the article. Failure to return the property would be so clearly a criminal act that a person must be potentially a crook not to do it. Keeping still and doing nothing is not a crime, but it is a crime to not return the property.

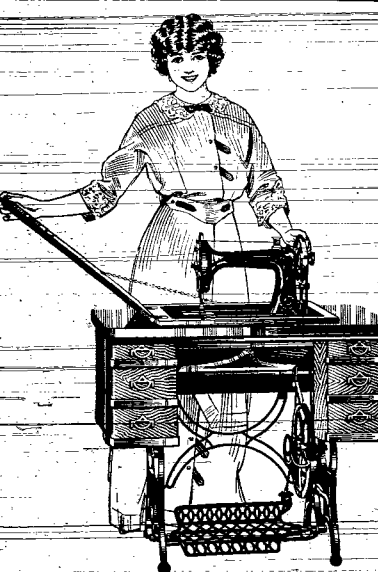

The first electric railway built in Lincoln went north across the Sal creek bottom to Belmont and the height of land called Grandview. It was necessary to cross the Burlington track on North Eleventh street. Here a battle royal occurred between the electric line and the railroad company. The big road put locomotives in the way and stopped construction until Judge Field enjoined the Burlington from interfering with the crossing. The managers were accustomed to having their own way and kept on with their obstructive tactics. Then Judge Field fined some of the officials for contempt of court. The railroad thought that such a judge needed a lesson, and administered it at the election of 1902. It is not a part of the official record that Judge Field was defeated on a referendum his decision in the crossing case, but it might as well be. The railroad men not only admitted that they had done it but bragged that their exploit.

Judge Field suffered business reverses when everybody went broke a little more than twenty years ago. His partner and political manager, C. T. Boggs, went down with him. They caught the upturn in real estate and bought some farm investments in oil lands in Oklahoma that both died rich men according to Nebraska standards. Judge Field shortened his life by refusing to stop work when he felt that his connections and the welfare of his client required him to do so. At the time of the reorganization of the latter company last winter he overtaxed his strength, not because he wanted to guard his own interests but because of his zeal to protect those who had made investments because his name had become a name of degree associated with the enterprise. That tells more about the real Judge Field than many columns of eulogy possibly could.

This is a remedy that every family should be provided with, and especially during the summer months. Think of the pain and suffering that must be endured when medicine must be resorted to before relief can be obtained. This remedy is thoroughly reliable. Ask anyone who has used it. SAVINGS

Too much cannot be said in favor of saving money. If a person's income is sufficient to cover his requirements, and he has a surplus, it is of course, much easier to save than when it is necessary to do without certain things which may be needed in order to put aside some money for use at a time when it is no longer possible to earn money, or if necessity makes it seem advisable to draw upon the reserve fund.

No one can afford to expend all that is earned, because for practical purposes that is spending more than is earned. When all earnings are spent, and a balance is made for what might be called a "sinking fund" to equalize the lessening earning power of a person as he grows older.

Have you ever thought of what a benefit a savings account might be to you some day? It could start it now and add to it persistently?

THE JUNE BRIDE

Fair bride of June, white bride of June, as lovely as a summer moon, the sweetest pebble on the beach, a joy, a vision and a peach! A truth it is to know, why? That brides of August and July, of misty March and placid May, must yield to you the right-of-way. All brides are daisies when one tries their divers charms to analyze; they are nature's noblest growth; when I see you I want them both; but still there's something out of tune, when brides look up outside of June. The month's ordained and set aside and dedicated to the bride. In June the Year is blithe and fair, and has no other in its skies are daisies when the roses bloom, the winds are soft, there is no gloom, and here's the newly-wedded belle, who fits into the picture well! Ah, would it might be always June, in the wheat fields, and replies come; but reply, fail and tempest shrieks, and rose-fade, and so do cheeks; the fleeting summer days depart, and Father Time will test all hearts. And when your lust is gone away, may you be first to see the bride of June, your bride of June, oh, bride of June, fair bride of June!

FRA ELBERTUS.

Down to the smiling west Elbert Hubbard, with depths eyes that knew no fear, and all the Nevada mermaids rapt, and Neptune shouted, "See who's here!" Well might there be a great commotion throughout the sea, from east to west, for seldom has old Father Ocean clasped hands with such a splendid guest. The instant that Elbert Hubbard stepped on the sand in the sun; there is no living hand that's able to do the work he left undone. There is no brash boy and witty no voice with his caressing tones, and Elbert in the land of Men's city is swapping yarns with Davy Crockett in the world that reads evinces its sorrow that he's dwelling there; not all the warning kings and princes are worth a tangle of his hair. Death keeps a record in his cupboard of victims in all these years would have both men and Elbert Hubbard, a million the tally, up to date. If it would bring you back, Elbertus, to twang your harp with gold strings, it would not worry us or hurt us to travel a wagonload of kings.

MIGHT BE WORSE.

The widow's wail came hurrying down on Kicks's shapely head and neck; it nearly spoiled his toll-woman crown, and made his ears a hopeless wreck. Then Kicks sat and nursed his head, a man reeling from grief, and a woman cheerful smile, he said, "I'm glad it didn't break the glass." He might have ripped around and swore, till people heard him round a block, or kicked a panel from the door, or thrown the camera through the window, and made the housewife's blood run cold, he might have raved and torn his beard, and wept as Rachel wept of old. But Kicks' saw'd of better stuff, no tears or sheds, no teeth, the grinds, the grinds, the grinds, the grinds, he looks for comfort, he finds. And so he hears his throbbing ache, and puts a poultice on his brain, and says, "I'm glad it didn't break that rich imported window pane." The answer replies a man, "What would trouble you and knock you home, there's some brace back of every grief, if he will recognize the same."

THE SUMMER TASK.

The days grow hot, and we must sweat with energy unceasing; yea, we must rise and soak the flies, to keep them from our faces. They pass by a single fly; it soon will rear a million, and they will raise, in summer days, four hundred thousand billion. And they'll produce while running loose, such swarms of filthy critters, such hosts of flies, that'll make the sun and moon be quitters. Go forth and swear in humble cot and in the humble palace, sweat left and right, keep up the fight until you break a gallop. Strike stalwart blows, and crush the foes, or later you will rue it, and I'll tell here throughout the year, and I'll tell you how to do it. I'll sing you lads to cheer your days while you lay the flies are potting. I'll praise your zeal with gladsome spiel; but I'm too fat for swartling. I'll urge you from golden dawn until night's shades are falling, but, till most guys whose words are wise, my sets are mostly stalling.

THE HESSIAN FLY.

Two years ago—'twas when our eyes struck for their ails and their ails, and Washington that genius rare, had double-crossed the Delaware. King George was short of fighting men, so he went hiring Hessians then. The Hessians, when they went to sea, to reach this country of the free took straw aboard, and spread it deep, and so that saw they used to sleep. And the straw, the Hessian flies laid their eggs, and laid their eggs, and laid their eggs. And thus into the fertile west was brought the worst and fiercest pest that ever made the farmers swear and chew their whiskers in despair. Year after year the Hessian fly camps in the wheat fields and the eye, performs the loathsome task in vain, and lays the smiling acre waste. The damage wrought since first it came would knock a statistician lame. The wheat it's killed in all these years would have both hemispheres, and fill a million bins and cribs, or gents who know are telling him. Thus war brings curses in its train, aside from all the toll of slain. War is a nuisance and a frost; no man can ever count its cost.

INVESTMENTS OF PROFITS.

Wallace's Farmer: If the farmer of the corn belt states, after paying off their indebtedness to the export states, had invested their profits at home, that is, in the corn belt, it would by this time be the garden of the Lord, "like the land of Egypt as thou goest unto Zoar." Instead of this, the corn belt farmers have made their investment in a very great extent abroad, and mainly to the north, south and west, under the strange delusion that there was somewhere else a new corn belt waiting to be developed. Many farmers have invested their savings in climate, imagining that they were putting them into orange groves, where they could do a kind of gentleman-farming, in which there was little toll and no care, nothing to do but pocket the profits. It is said that forty thousand Iowa people attended the annual Iowa picnic in Los Angeles.

ROADS ALL OVER THE COUNTRY, BUT

roads all over the country, but roads over which the farmer and his family can go to town and church in comfort, as well as haul his crops. Had we kept our savings at home, we might by this time have had a rural high school in every township, and schools for our children that would give them the education, or at least the opportunity to get the education which every normal man desires for his children. It is time the corn belt should begin to think about financing itself instead of financing the semi-arid sections, or the mountain states, or the Pacific coast, or sections of the south, where for good reasons they don't care either to make their homes or to have their children to make their home. By this time, any man who wishes to know the resources of any section of the United States—or any foreign country, can secure definite information. The corn belt is the most favored section of the United States, has the richest soil, has a good climate, although we may not enjoy the extreme cold in winter, nor the extreme heat in summer. It supplies all the conditions for developing the highest type of civilization. It needs capital, and hence the folly of making our investments in new and strange sections, or in strange lines of business. It is time to quit thinking about speculative values and turn our attention to two points: the increase of the productive value, without which the present prices can not be maintained, and the increase of their social value, that is making each township and each school district a place in which the maximum of comfort and the highest development of character can be secured. The corn belt is in very great need of capital, working capital, capital that will make lands yield the maximum of increase. But more than this we need to develop the ability to handle capital wisely, and that ability must be developed by creating capital and then keeping it within reach.

This One Minute Washer

originally could only be had in the hand power style, but recently the factory has produced an attachment so that this machine can be run from any power, such as a gas engine or line-shafting. This at once transforms it into a combination that can be used by anyone.

All the gearing, both in the hand and engine power is underneath the top out of the way where clothing or children cannot possibly come in contact with the gearing.

The cost of this combination is very moderate when compared with the average power washer—it being only $12.50. We will show you this machine whether you want to buy it or not. It will be sold to anyone on their approval, and if unsatisfactory can be returned without question.

CONVENTION REPORT
 BY MRS. GROSSLAND

Mrs. G. W. Crossland of Wayne, who attended as a delegate from Nebraska the late national conference of charities and corrections at Baltimore, has prepared the following report for publication:

The forty-second annual conference of charities and corrections was held at Baltimore, Md., with two thousand registered delegates and social workers. Forty states had representatives at the conference, also Canada, and one foreign delegate, Miss Jessie May Lilling.

From the conference there was larger than any previous conference held.

Service to humanity, the lightening of the burdens of the weak and strengthening the hands that bear them formed the keynote of all the meetings and this note was sounded by every speaker.

It was voiced by Cardinal Gibbon, clad in the red robes of his high ecclesiastical office, who delivered the invocation. He asked God's blessing to rest upon the meeting of the conference, whose work he said, was to be in the line of the injunction—to visit the fatherless and the widow, and was also expressed in an earnest and impressive manner by Mrs. John M. Glenn, president of the conference. The meeting was remarkable in many ways. It represented not only the most earnest and devoted workers for the relief of distress and social betterment of the community, but of the nation as well.

Mayor Preston, in his address of welcome to the conference, referred to Baltimore as being in the way of charitable endeavor, and said when he became mayor, four years ago, the city was appropriating $450,000 a year for various charitable and social enterprises, while this year $750,000 was the amount of appropriation for these purposes. He expressed the hope that the conference would be an inspiration to all those who attended and that its influence for good be nation-wide.

Alexander Johnson, who was secretary of the conference when it met at Baltimore in 1890 presided at the conference to the address of welcome. He said it had been a wonderful quarter of a century, many things had been accomplished since. In the field of prison reform alone, more than twice as much had been accomplished than in the century that had preceded it. And even in these times of stress, when no one knows what disaster a day may bring forth, the work will go on as it never has before; that the quality of mercy of the American people will not be blamed and that they will come through with a greater zeal in the cause of humanity than they ever fell before.

Mr. Johnson then indulged in a look-into-the-future. "All these years," he said, "we have been struggling and trying to deal with evil after it has happened, but now we are looking toward a policy of prevention, a forestalling of evils, and we are doing better than when they happen, so that when the mayor of the city when we meet here in twenty-five years from now, will tell us not of the three quarters of a million of dollars spent for the relieving of distress, and bettering of the social condition of her people, but of no money spent, because none has been required, that there shall be no problem of unemployment, no unemployed men, and no children employed in industries of charity, because the last such institutions has been closed and we may bring about these things if we only will."

The program throughout was very interesting and profitable.

The subjects of health, social hygiene, of the feeble minded, and industrial corrections, the family and community and children, were discussed.

Dr. Philip Van Ingen of N. Y., gave some very interesting facts concerning infant mortality, asking how many of infant lives and toll of mortality rates in those institutions. In New York City of 1,738 babies, under one year of age, 51.6 per cent are known to have failed to complete the first year of their lives. Of the babies that died, 89 per cent were born in the city itself within two months of admission. This seems to bear out the claim that the high mortality is due to the fact that institutional housing leads to many babies, they need the individual care and touch that the home situation can give them.

Dr. Kingsley of Baltimore, stating that out of two hundred foundlings placed in institutions in recent years, 90 died in the second month. A prolonged stay at an institution is usually detrimental to the young infant. It is only in the treatment is becoming generally known and that the new born babe has a better chance in a rather indifferent home than in even a fairly well conducted institution. Millions of dollars are spent every year for babies, but in the right direction. In Baltimore they are trying to place the care of infants in homes, and it opens an honorable career to some women who have difficulty in earning a livelihood in other ways, and the life of an infant saved, in nine cases out of ten.

In Europe and Hungary this method of institutional care for infants was given up some years ago. No babies are kept in an institution unless sick and then only long enough to get them in condition to place in homes. It was urged to persuade all mothers to keep their babies and take care of them, even if the state had to pay them for the care. It places a responsibility on the individual where it belongs and not on the state.

The luncheon and community dinner was a very interesting subject, showing that the family either made or marred the progress of a community, and great changes had taken place, rising from the fact that industrial and social energy, no longer centered in the home, giving us an era in which more women and children eat, sleep and play together, than ever in the world's history. Individual work was considered a great necessity for better conditions in the home, and the change environment, doing different things for and with people by cooperating with them to achieve at one and the same time their own and society's betterment, and this was one of the great and growing developments of all social work.

I was very much interested in the subject of police woman work. To many of us this seems to be truly only a man's job. In the audience were many "Cops" who were not recognized, however, until they announced themselves. For there were two brass buttons or official helmets to proclaim their identity. The first police woman to be appointed on a municipal force in this country was Miss Alice Stebbin Mills of Los Angeles, Calif. She gave a very interesting account outlined their work and told of the night filled in the police force by women which was impossible for men to fill, declaring that their duties fell mostly with delinquent girls and with sensing places of amusement and recreation in the city; and lately, sanitation inspection has been added to the list. The police woman is an integral part of the department and stands for law enforcement, but her largest and best work is to prevent, for the securing of obedience to law is the best form of law enforcement.

Miss Harry told of the great need of police women in every city. She told of the need of the girls that were brought into the court to be accompanied by a woman instead of a man. One woman who came to the court, for trial only two were accompanied by women, leaving them without women to talk to. Now every woman has the protection of a police woman, when she is brought to court.

Many other subjects of importance were discussed but space will not allow me to go into detail. In dealing with crime, poverty, disease and all social problems, prevention was urged rather than cure.

It is far better for society to prevent the child than to reform the man. We must have a construction program in every community, not alone to combat evil conditions, but to prevent them. And the inspiring thing about social work is that prevention is possible; experience has shown that crime, disease and poverty can be forestalled, if we plan for the future with a constructive program. The segregation of the feeble minded, the insane and delinquent classes was urged as a measure of race protection. If defectives are allowed to reproduce their kind, the state has placed upon itself a burden, heavy to be borne. The policy of permanent detention of their class in colonies has been followed by eastern states. The indeterminate sentence is bound to come. If the state gives a man some incentive to reform and provides a way in which the offender may prove his reformation, then our penitentiaries will truly become places of penitence. The indeterminate sentence will serve to keep hardened offenders in prison a greater length of time. Many other admirable programs were advanced, not mere theories, but facts. We have a world of experience to guide us aright in social work. The conference was a university in itself, in the estimate of authorities and as instructors. It is the privilege of a lifetime to attend such a conference.

One comes back a lasting desire to ameliorate the lot or humanity who work for the common good. While at the conference I had the pleasure of going with the delegation to Washington, meeting the president and bringing greetings from Nebraska.

As it is the rule of the conference, no president shall be elected that office may be held only one year. The conference elected Rev. Dr. Francis Ganish, president for next year. The doctor is chancellor of the diocese of Indianapolis.

The next session of the National conference of charities and corrections will be held in Indianapolis, May next year. Mrs. George Crossland, State Delegate.

NORTHEAST NEBRASKA.
 C. V. Thompson of Cumming county, in the Nebraska Farmer: If we wish to talk about the weather we have no choice; we must talk about the rain because the weather man had the rain faucet turned on. The faucet had been shut off Monday night, May 24 he went to sleep at his post with the faucet turned wide open. It simply poured all night long. I do not recall anything equal to it since I have been on the farm.

The cornfields were badly washed, and considerable corn will have to be replanted. Tons of the cream of the soil was deposited in the sloughs and tons of it is doubtless now on the other side of the gulches. One night the weather man by such antics can accomplish more than the farmer can in weeks of manure, haying. Such experiences do not tend to inspire those who are ambitious to keep up the fertility of the soil. It must be remembered that those who had no manure are even worse off for they have less fertile soils to lose. Such is life on the farm however, and the sooner we realize it and forget about it the better off we are. Preting and trying to tell farmers just how to farm. Several weeks ago I lauded the virtues of the roller and the disk on the skies. I told you that I intended to get my ground in good shape before it rained again. I was laughed up my sleeve at the fellows who thought they were making progress while risking their lives riding a planter over a sea of lumps. I used the roller, disk and harrow on my ground in good shape. I said out loud to myself, "I am getting myself and congratulating myself on the long head adorning my shoulders, when it began to rain. It has been raining ever since. We haven't planted a kernel for a week. Tomorrow is May 31. We still have five acres of planting with one planter."

The ground was in such fine shape that the rains pounded it like a hoard and now we must double-disk all the ground before we can proceed with our planter. Of course, we are not entirely discouraged. The weeds are coming as thick as the hair on a dog, you see we don't own one of those weedless farms—and a good disking now will make the weeds fair game. The soil is thoroughly saturated, so disking will make an ideal seedbed and good weather will do the rest. I have some corn that was planted two weeks ago and there is not enough through the ground yet. Most of the early corn has a sickly appearance, so it remains to be seen whether the May or June corn will be the better.

The farmers who began to cut their alfalfa a week ago are having a fine time now waiting for some thing to do. If Old Man gets back on the job a few days they will get what they are looking for. The second cutting is coming on so rapidly after the rain that the first cutting is likely to be lost if it is not raked up pretty soon. There are practically no blossoms on the alfalfa this year, while the new shoots from the crowns are four or five inches long.

It seems we all have our troubles, and notice the editor has his too. Some farmer asks him to stop the paper because he has expressed opinions which do not coincide with said farmer's views. It is not my purpose to "stick up" for the editor of The Nebraska Farmer, for he is amply able to do that himself. Every once in a while we run across persons who in their great wisdom are sure that they are right in their opinion and woe be to those who have the temerity to disagree with them. He says the editor has criticized the Farmers' Union, has advocated the single tax and other notions who in their great wisdom are sure that they are right in their opinion and woe be to those who have the temerity to disagree with them. both sides of a question there is little hope for him.

As for the Farmers' Union, it is above reproach. As a member of the Farmers' Union and one who is entirely sympathetic with the spirit of cooperation, I must confess to having criticized it on several occasions myself. Good friends, critics will do us more good than harm. Criticism and animosity do not mean the same thing. I would like to see five cents for an editor who would write every editorial with a view to pleasing everybody who reads them. This is the fault comes that they need should be personal of the organization or group, wise of fact, personal responsibility and a desire to meet the needs of the community. In too many instances the very apparent desire of the cooperators to win all the possible benefits of cooperative union without incurring the obligations that go with ownership and management. FUNERAL OF THE LATE H. B. MILLER IN WAYNE

The remains of the late Henry B. Miller, Wayne county banker who died at Lakeside, Wis., last morning...

Henry Bowen Miller. A great soul has gone to his reward in the death at Lakeside, Wash., on Saturday, June 5, 1915, of Henry Bowen Miller, best known to a host of friends in a score of states...

Born near Mt. Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, on November 10, 1828, the momentum of a life of service to humanity carried him sixteen years, five months and twenty days past the allotted three score years and he died in peace and peacefully as though he had but meant to go to sleep after a long day's toil.

When about twelve years of age he moved with his parents to Henderson county, Ill., and in the spring of 1850, in company with several other young men of his own age...

He moved with his family to California in 1854 and arrived in October of the same year at or near Sacramento. A cooper by trade he did not follow the usual gold stampede but set up business at his chosen location...

His business grew and prospered, which proved to be a part of wisdom, as his success surprised that of many of his party who went in search of the illusive gold. After about three years spent in California...

On his return to Illinois he bought a farm and engaged in raising, buying and shipping stock which latter business took him into every state in central and western Illinois and eastern Iowa.

On December 24, 1855, he was married to Adaline Hopper at Hopper's Mills, Henderson county, Ill., and resided in that and adjoining counties, continuing in the stock business until the spring of 1872.

When he moved to Emerson, Io. Several years later he moved with his family to Wayne county, Nebraska, and bought and improved a school section of raw land. A rate of ten children grew up in the home in Nebraska, five sons and five daughters.

Always a great student, his mind was clear and alert and his vision that of a philosopher and thinker. A fellow of the old school where the golden rule was taught and practiced, he measured success in life by the vast spirit of service to society and to humanity.

Mrs. Shaw, Mrs. Cherry, Oscar and Chester Miller, were with their father when he died. His father had been with her mother for some time during his illness, but had returned to Seattle a few days before his death.

Uncle Henry Miller was one of a family of fourteen children, some of whom died in childhood. He is survived by one brother, Wm. Miller of Wenaschee, Wash., and three sisters, Mrs. Viola Boughton, Tallahassee, Fla., Mrs. Charles Stronghurst, Ill., and Mrs. William Kettler, Pittsburg, Kans.

In the spring of 1902 he sold the old home in Nebraska and came to Lake Chelan to visit his brother, William and was so charmed with the delightful surroundings that he decided to locate permanently and filed on a homestead adjoining the farm of his brother.

He learned the teachings of the great commoner from every bill top. One of the founders of the populist party, he went naturally into the democratic party when the former has fulfilled his mission. Never aspiring to be in the limelight, he was seeking in the character of men to whom he gave his support.

Uncle Henry lived a generation ahead of the people of his time, but had the supreme satisfaction of living to see many of the ideals and principles he had so long advocated embodied in our national statutes.

Uncle Henry has bequeathed to his family the remembrance of a noble, honest, upright life. The children have lost a devoted father; the community a faithful friend; the nation one of its most loyal citizens, but heaven is richer for a life given in unselfish service to humanity.

He spoke of its reception as friendly and courteous and said the unanimous opinion seemed to be that the document afforded a basis for diplomatic negotiation and settlement.

Long extracts from German newspaper comments on the note have already been published here and were transmitted by the ambassador.

There is a friendliness of tone in them and an absence of the bitterness which has previously characterized some newspaper utterances.

FINDS HESSIAN FLY IN MADISON COUNTY

Norfolk Wheat Fields June 16: Most of the wheat fields of Madison county are infested by the Hessian fly which is doing some damage. The "green bug" which did some damage in Kansas has also been found to be damaging some of the fields in this vicinity.

Field Agent Anderson of the United States agricultural department was here from Washington and made a trip of inspection over the county with Frank Tannehill. The Hessian fly was found in practically every field in this vicinity and in at least one the fly has caused great damage.

The discovery of the "green bug" in this vicinity has caused much uneasiness among the farmers. The government representatives declared that as yet the damaging bug has not been classified and named. It was first discovered around Topeka, Kan., about two years ago, where it did a great deal of damage. The spread of the Hessian fly is equally disturbing, but it is announced that the damage from this insect is not so large. In Kansas, however, the damage from Hessian fly is reported to have reached millions.

Mr. Anderson expected to confer with the Madison county farm demonstrator before he went to the Alliance district.

BRYAN PRAISES U. S.
AS THE PEACEMAKER

Opportunity for America The Nation Occupies Favored Place to Act as Mediator When the Time Comes.

Washington, June 16.—Former Secretary Bryan in the first of his statements on "The Causeless War," today prophesied that the greatest peace making in all history is certain to come to the United States and declared that there is a demand for an international conference with the return of peace, to change the rules of international law which seem to have been made for the nations at war rather than for the nations at peace.

Ocean Highways Appropriated.

"Under the stress and strain of the titanic struggle in which they are engaged," Mr. Bryan's statement says, each side has felt itself justified in encroaching upon the rights of neutrals. The ocean highways, the common property of all, have been to some extent appropriated for war purposes and delicate diplomatic questions are fixed upon the neutral nations.

U. S. Should Seek Peace.

"Just in this time when these questions are most acute the belligerent governments are least able to deal with them with the calmness and poise which their great importance demands. No wonder every neutral nation is increasingly anxious for the war to end; but of all the neutral nations ours has the most reason to pray for the return of peace—our reason to set its face resolutely against participation in this war."

"This nation, the head of the neutral group and sincere friend of all the belligerents, is in duty bound to set an example in patience and self-restraint."

"All history no such opportunity has ever come to any other nation as that which is destined to come to the United States. In all history no other peace maker has ever been in position to claim as much for his country as we are pronounced upon our president when the time for mediation comes—as it must come."

DIES FROM POISON

TAKEN BY MISTAKE

Tilden, Neb., June 14—Lee Mann, 22-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Mann, prominent farmers living two and a half miles from Meadow Grove, died just before noon today as the result of having taken strychnine by mistake, thinking he was taking medicine.

The young man returned home from a Sunday night call shortly after midnight and felt sick. He got up to take some medicine and by mistake got the deadly poison. Nothing was known of the tragedy until 5:30, when his mother went to call the son for breakfast. She found him suffering great agony and practically in convulsions. He was unable to tell what had happened.

Dr. Klined was summoned from Meadow Grove and later Dr. Baker. They agreed that the young man had taken poison and later the vic-

The subject of the sermon for next Sunday morning will be "Zeal in the Cause of Christ," 2 Cor. 13: 15. When the sacred writer recorded the words of our text, he was no doubt thinking of the vast importance of Christ's cause in the world and also the sad neglect of that great cause as manifested by men who profess to be Christ's followers.

Paul therefore urges that the cause of Christ in the world should be furthered by every legitimate means, that for if necessary, should be employed the sincerest wisdom; and for it if necessary, the most impassioned zeal.

In the evening the pastor will speak on the subject, "Give God a Chance," Isaiah 45: 1-7.

The subject of the morning sermon will be "Justification by Faith," Romans 1:16-17. We are anxious to have all of the young people at our Luther League meetings. Come, you are missing something.

Let everybody push this service with all their might. Tomorrow (Friday) afternoon the prayer circle will meet with Mrs. John Miller. Mrs. Dewey will be the leader. Acts, Chap. 5 is the lesson. An Amateur Picture Play

Its Production Was Attended With Difficulties.

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

When Daisy Allison, who had made a bit in amateur theatricals, noticed in newspaper that film companies were giving persons owning handsome places to furnish scenarios for picture plays, which the occupants were to act themselves in their own houses and on their own grounds, she clasped her hands in glee. What could be more delightful than to organize a company of actors and actresses in a home of her own? The summer season was at hand. The flowers were blooming in the garden; nature would provide the scenery.

Miss Allison was aware that a plot would be provided for the play and a knowledge of construction was required. She called on a playwright and playwright, and quite likely his services could be secured to get up a scenario. As for the actors and actresses, Miss Allison thought she would be climbing over one another to secure invitations to the histrionic house party.

She entered upon her work at once, the first thing being to write a scenario. Mr. Howard Ashley, a playwright, stating her design and asking him if he would offer in the construction of the play. He consented, stating that he had a number of scenarios on hand from which a selection, doubtless, could be made and recommended that the play be decided on before the invitations were given out in order that persons best fitted for the different parts might be included. Since Miss Ashley herself had proved her ability as an actress she would, doubtless, be expected to take the leading lady's part in a play which she had chosen to be acted in her own home.

Mr. Ashley, uninitiated several plays, and one was decided upon the principal scenes of which were laid in the country home of the Earl of Pemberton, an English nobleman. A synopsis of the play is this: An American girl, only child of a very rich man, goes to England, where she visits the home of another branch of her family, almost the nobility. An important English lord (Amstimer) attempts to marry her for her money. Her father, who is in the heart of a famous manufacturing concern in America, sends his right hand man, Eben MacArthur, over to investigate the matter. He discovers that Amstimer is a fraud and impostor. The girl marries MacArthur, who takes the place of a son in the manufacturing plant, with his wife, the business.

Mr. Ashley, who was experienced not only in the construction of plays, but in choosing the scenes, had proposed to take charge of the whole affair, and nothing remained but to make up a list of names of those who were to compose the company. The English nobility, the cast of principal characters when completed was as follows: Lucinda Owens, Miss Allison, Lord Amstimer, Mr. J. H. Adams, Eben MacArthur, Mr. Wilson, Gladys Pemberton, Miss Stevens.

So soon as the pressure for invitations that it was found necessary to make a long list of dramatic persons, though the four persons mentioned carried the play. It was a very necessary to bring in a number of the neighboring country people. The Pemberton estate.

When Eben MacArthur arrived in England he was received at the Pemberton mansion by Gladys Pemberton, who was at the time enjoying a tea-table in the flower garden with Lord Amstimer, for whom she was supposed to be waiting. The arrival of Lucinda Owens for the affections of Eben MacArthur and having witnessed this lady's exhibition of a likable character, she was invited to a home. She turned her back on the friendship and picking a new present from a newspaper from America. A dozen plays were read at this scene before the lady could be brought to enact it as intended—that in, she was supposed to look upon MacArthur as an unfeeling American backwoodsman and act toward him accordingly.

store the cost of the photographs was borne by the film company, their manager began to fear that the expense of production would be too great to warrant continuing the photographic. He stopped work, but after Mr. Ashley had lectured the actresses on their behavior and they had promised to do better in future the manager consented to proceed.

Eben MacArthur in the play was Lord Amstimer's confidence in order to expose his designs upon Lucinda Owens' fortune. In the earlier scenes he is expected to show his lordship his admiration. But in the real life part these two men were rivals for the hand of the hostess. Now, a photograph exhibition in the evening of the evening that the films of these earlier scenes showed sufficient hatred on the part of MacArthur toward his rival to give away his designs purposefully.

Again another bill was called by the manager of the film company, and Mr. Ashley lectured the actors in the same manner as he had done before. But by this time seven times the length of film had been used that was ordinarily necessary, and few of the scenes had been pictorially characterized.

However, Miss Daisy Allison, whose heart was set on the enterprise and whose pocketbook was well stocked, agreed to stand the expense of making the photographs above a certain amount, and after that the manager of the film company was pacified. The only danger now was that the assistance of the photographer would give out. Nevertheless, the extra cost having been provided for, the production of the film proceeded, and four reels were finished. If not satisfactory, at least the best that could be done under the circumstances.

Mr. Ashley hoped that at the manufacture of the film and lost reel the actors and actresses would have come into such harmony in their firsts, that the scenes would be sufficiently successful to cause audiences to forget the blemish of the earlier scenes. Eben MacArthur started after a billiard at Lord Amstimer's after a billiard in a dramatic scene, points to the door through which his lordship passes, expressing his indignation for by this time the rivalry between the two men in the real life affair had become extremely bitter. But the right hope was that the scenes would be sufficiently successful to cause audiences to forget the blemish of the earlier scenes.

He was disappointed. Amstimer, who was left tackle in a football team, becoming exasperated at the charges in his rival's mouth, stepped out under the current of inventive took him by the collar and the seat of his trousers and threw him into a flower bed.

The commotion that followed this exploit was only allayed by the hostess demanding an apology from the football man and a promise that he would play his part as was intended for a second picture, on pain of a suspension of his acquaintance. This brought him to terms and films of the scene were obtained which were in accord with the scenario.

There was no trouble among the actresses. In the play Gladys Pemberton was the confidence of Lucinda Owens in order to detach her from Amstimer and to lead her to Eben MacArthur. Discover her treachery until the last scene, when she utters her and steps into an automobile with MacArthur to a state of danger that he would play when this scene came to be enacted. Lucinda's taunts had a similar effect on Gladys to MacArthur's on Lord Amstimer's. The latter's daughter came up under the porte-cochere. MacArthur was waiting at the car door for Lucinda to finish her contemptuous remarks to Gladys before she was to be waiting. He stepped into the auto and took possession of a back seat. Suddenly Gladys' battle dish for the auto, joined in and shut the door. The chauffeur, hearing the slam, took it for a signal to depart, put on the wheels and went rolling away with the wrong woman.

WORK TEAMS AND WEATHER.
If it rains for several days you do not stay in the house or about the stove, do you?
Fortunate, you have work to do. But if you had to stay in the house for a week, would it be bad for you?
It's just the same with the work teams. They need exercise in order to begin when the weather clears, properly fitted.
A pasture is the best place for them if it is not actually raining, and exercise in the stalls or under a covered shed, in the barn and will be almost as good. Let them stretch their legs.—Farm and Poultry.

THE OLD MASTERS.
Paintings Without Signatures Are Judged by Their Technique.
It appears that many of the works of the old masters are not signed. Experts rarely rely on signatures alone in determining the authenticity of an old work, but trust rather to their knowledge of the painter's technique, says the Philadelphia Record.
False signatures can be easily detected. "Signatures of wine or coffee will usually retouch a name or later date than the painting. In the course of time signatures often become very difficult to find. Painted originally in a shade slightly lighter than the ground, perhaps, they sink in, darken, and merge into the ground color or they are almost rubbed away by successive cleanings. Recognizable one day in a specially favorable light, they may not be visible again for weeks.
Experts speak of "wells" in the wisp signatures, and many collectors have encountered accidental strokes and cracks that manifestly suggest a signature, though it can never be made definite. On the other hand, there have been remarkable cases of such marks after careful study, resulting their nerves into a famous name.
Sometimes the painter's name is most conspicuous as, for example, in Raphael's "Smythall" at Milan. Proud of having surpassed his master, the youthful genius wrote on a frieze in the very center of the canvas, "Raphael, Urbino."
Reynolds hardly ever signed his work. But upon the completion of the portrait of Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse, he wrote his name large on the gold embroidery of her dress. He was unable, he said, "to resist the temptation of writing my name so loftily on the hem of your gown."

likely it is that cancer will occur many times in some families.
The eminent statisticians, King and Newsholme, have pointed out that it does not prove heredity to show that in one family five deaths occurred from cancer. By the very frequency of the disease and the lack of frequency such cases would be expected even if no one had ever suggested the idea of heredity.
In some species of animals it is heredity—a certain susceptibility to the tumor may be inherited. But so far as human beings are concerned the foremost authorities believe that heredity in cancer may be regarded as a negligible factor.—Journal of the American Medical Association.

The Almanac Church.
One of the oldest churches in England is St. Botolph's at Boston. It has aptly been called the Almanac church. In the tower are 365 steps, corresponding to the days in the year.—The church has twelve pillars, fifty-two windows and seven doors, representing the months, weeks and days in the week. In the west porch are twenty-four steps according to the library, representing the hours of the day. Again, on each side of the choir are sixty steps leading to the roof, denoting on the one side the minutes of the hour and on the other the seconds of the minute.—Boston Post.

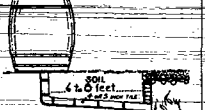

The Office Seeker.
A man with a deep and steadfast longing for office will run excitedly around begging everybody he sees to sign his nomination petitions and then, when he finally gets enough signatures, will put on a clean shirt and announce that if the call of duty comes he will not disregard the summons.—Ohio State Journal.

Paying His Bank.
"Oh, my!—Why did you make that poor salesman pull down all that stuff and then not buy anything? See and Dito—Why the man, fellow was in a car yesterday and never offered me his seat, though I looked right at him; so I just decided I would get even."—Buffalo Courier.

Wanted Particulars.
"I am looking out for a porch chamber. Can you direct me where to go?"
"Well, sir, until you particularize I don't know whether you want me to direct you to a bar or to a policeman."—Baltimore American.

Fires and Germs.
The number of germs on a single fly may range from 800 to 6,000,000. Scientific tests have shown that the average fly for 414 flies was about 1,250,000 on each.

"Cold Smoke" Smokehouses.
In smoking summer sausage be very careful not to get the temperature above 70 degrees F. In other words, the sausage should be smoked with cold smoke. If you have a low smoke house it is better to make a smoke house for cold smoke, as above. The sausage should be smoked for from thirty-six to forty-eight hours, being very careful to have a continuous fire. A large piece of wood with a big knot in it will smoke all night.

The sausage should be kept in a cool, well-ventilated place. A little mold will improve the sausage, but if it appears all over the skin it is harmful because it gives a moldy flavor. If it begins to get too moldy rub off the mold with a cloth dipped in a mixture of salt and lard.
This sausage is eaten cold. A good way to keep it is to pack it in oats, as they will absorb the moisture, but it ought to be well wrapped in cheese cloth if packed in oats.—Minnesota Farmer.

THE VEGETABLE GARDEN.

Set main crop celery plants now, also cabbage plants.
Sopwoods will kill plant lice—80 will tobacco extract, kerosene emulsion or whale oil soap.
Meat is expensive. Beans are a good substitute.
Keep the weeds all out of the beds. Now is their time to put in some good ideas.
Cultivate the honey locust. He lives entirely upon insects and is always hungry.
The greatest mistake in a garden is crowding, which makes everything grow small and spindling.
Wood ashes are good fertilizers, but not for strawberries and potatoes. They do best in a slightly acid soil and the ashes neutralize the acidity.
Ashes are excellent for tomatoes, pease and a general line of garden crops.
Provide the tomatoes with a support of some kind—trellis or stakes.
Make two sowings of peas of an early wrinkled variety for a late crop.

CANCER IN THE FAMILY.
There is No Proof That the Dreaded Disease is Hereditary.
Perhaps nothing causes more needless worry than the fact that one member of a given family has died from cancer. This is commonly taken as a proof that the disease is hereditary. This does not at all follow. There is probably no greater chance of inheriting cancer than there is of being killed by lightning or of breaking one's neck falling down stairs. Perhaps there are people who worry even about those contingencies, but the statisticians have shown that such fatal accidents are extremely rare.
People who are concerned because their relatives have succumbed to cancer need to consider how widespread the disease is. A malady that causes one death out of every eight among women and one out of every thirteen among men every forty is fairly common. On this basis it does not seem much probable to figure out how

TEST OF AMERICA'S LATEST TO GERMANY

Washington, June 11.—The text of the American rejoinder to the German government's reply to the note following the sinking of the Lusitania follows:

"The secretary of state in letter to the American ambassador to Berlin.

"Department of State, Washington, June 9, 1915.—American Ambassador, Berlin: You are instructed to deliver to you the following note to the minister of foreign affairs.

"In compliance with your excellency's request I did not fail to transmit to my government immediately upon their receipt your note of May 28 in reply to our note of May 15 and also the supplementary note of June 1 regarding the conclusion so far reached by the imperial German government concerning the attacks of the American steamers Cushing and Gulfport. I am now honored by your government to communicate the following in reply.

"The government of the United States notes with gratification the full recognition by the imperial German government in discussing the cases of the Cushing and Gulfport of the principles of the London Convention of 1864 and its neutral status and the frank willingness of the imperial government to acknowledge and meet its liability where the fact of attack upon neutral ships which have not been guilty of any hostile act by German submarines or vessels of war is satisfactorily established, and the government of the United States will in due course lay before the imperial German government, as it requests, full information concerning the attack on the steamer Cushing.

"With regard to the sinking of the steamer Citizen, by which an American citizen lost his life, the government of the United States is surprised to find the imperial German government contending that an effort on the part of a merchantman to escape capture and secure assistance seeks the obligation of the officer commanding to make the capture in respect of the safety of the lives of those on board the merchantman, although the vessel has ceased her attempt to escape when torpedoed. There are not new circumstances. They have been in the minds of statesmen and of international jurists throughout the development of naval warfare, and the government of the United States does not understand how the imperial German government can seek in this case to relieve itself of liability. There are only two facts to set forth circumstances which led the commander of the submarine to allow himself to be hurried into the course which he took.

"The Case of the Lusitania. Your excellency's note, in discussing the loss of American lives resulting from the sinking of the steamship Lusitania, adverts at some length to certain information which the imperial German government has received with regard to the character and outward of that vessel and your excellency expresses the fear that this information may not have been brought to the attention of the government of the United States. It is stated in the note that the Lusitania was undoubtedly equipped with masked guns, supplied with ready ammunition, transporting troops from Canada, carrying a cargo not permitted under the laws of the United States to a vessel also carrying passengers and freight, in official capacity as an auxiliary to the naval forces of Great Britain. Fortunately these are matters concerning which the government of the United States is in a position to give the imperial German government official information. Of the facts alleged in your excellency's note, if true, the government of the United States would be bound to take official cognizance in performing its recognized duty as a neutral power and in enforcing the national law. It is its duty to see to it that the Lusitania was not armed for offensive action, that she was not serving as a transport; that she did not carry a cargo prohibited by the statutes of the United States; and that, in fact, she was a novel vessel of Great Britain she should not receive clearance as a merchantman. It is informed that duty and enforced its statutes with scrupulous vigilance through its regularly constituted officials. It is able, therefore, to assure that the imperial German government that it has been misinformed. If the imperial German government should deem itself to be in possession of convincing evidence that the officials of the government of the United States did not perform these duties with the thoroughness the government of the United States sincerely hopes that it will submit that evidence for consideration.

"Whatever may be the contention of the imperial German government regarding the carriage of contraband on board the Lusitania or regarding the explosion of that material by the torpedo, it need only be said that in the view of this government these contentions are irrelevant to the question of the legality of the methods used by the German naval authorities in sinking that vessel.

Innocents Made the Victims.

"But the sinking of passenger ships involves principles of humanity which throw into the background any special circumstances of liability that may be thought to affect the case, principles which life, as the imperial government will no doubt be quick to recognize and acknowledge, out of the class of ordinary subjects of diplomatic discussion or of international controversy. Whatever be the other facts regarding the Lusitania, the principal fact is that a great steamer, primarily and chiefly a conveyance for passengers and carrying more than a thousand souls who had no part or lot in the conduct of the war, was torpedoed and sunk without any such question—those rights. It understands that men, women and children were sent to their death in circumstances unparalleled in modern warfare. The fact that more than one hundred American citizens were on board the Lusitania makes it the duty of the government of the United States to speak of these things and once more with solemn emphasis to call the attention of the imperial German government to the grave responsibility which the government of the United States concedes that it has incurred in this tragic occurrence and to the indisputable principle upon which that responsibility rests.

"The government of the United States is contending for something on behalf of those under its care and authority. Only her actual resistance to capture or refusal to stop when ordered to do so for the purpose of visit could have afforded the commander of the submarine any justification for so much as putting the vessel on board the ship in jeopardy. This principle the government of the United States understands the explicit instructions issued on August 3, 1914, by the imperial German admiralty to its commanders as to how they should recognize and embodied as do the codes of all other nations, and upon it every traveler and seaman had a right to depend. It is upon this principle of humanity, as well as upon the law founded upon this official information. Of the facts alleged in your excellency's note, if true, the government of the United States must stand.

Proffer of Good Offices.

"The government of the United States is happy to observe that your excellency's note closes with the intimation that the imperial German government is willing now at least to accept the good offices of the United States in an attempt to come to an understanding with the government of Great Britain by which the character and conditions of the very upon the sea may be changed.

"The government of the United States would consider it a privilege thus to serve its friends and the world. It stands ready to convey to either government any intimation or suggestion that either may be willing to have it convey, and cordially invites the imperial German government to make use of its services in this way at its convenience. The whole world is concerned in anything that may bring about even partial accommodation of interests or in any way mitigate the horrors of the present distressing conflict.

"In the meantime, whatever arrangement may happily be made between the parties to the war and whatever may, in the opinion of the imperial German government have to do with the protection of the interests of the past acts of its commanders at sea, the government of the United States confidently looks to see the justice and humanity of the government of Germany vindicated in all cases where Americans have been wronged or their rights as neutrals injured.

"The government of the United States therefore very earnestly and very solemnly renews the representations upon the principles of humanity, the universally recognized international law, and the ancient friendship of the German nation.

"The government of the United States can not admit that a proclamation of a war zone from which neutral ships have been warned to keep away may be made to operate, in any degree an abbreviation of the rights either of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nations. It does not understand that the imperial German government at question—those rights. It understands that men, women and children were sent to their death in circumstances unparalleled in modern warfare. The fact that more than one hundred American citizens were on board the Lusitania makes it the duty of the government of the United States to speak of these things and once more with solemn emphasis to call the attention of the imperial German government to the grave responsibility which the government of the United States concedes that it has incurred in this tragic occurrence and to the indisputable principle upon which that responsibility rests.

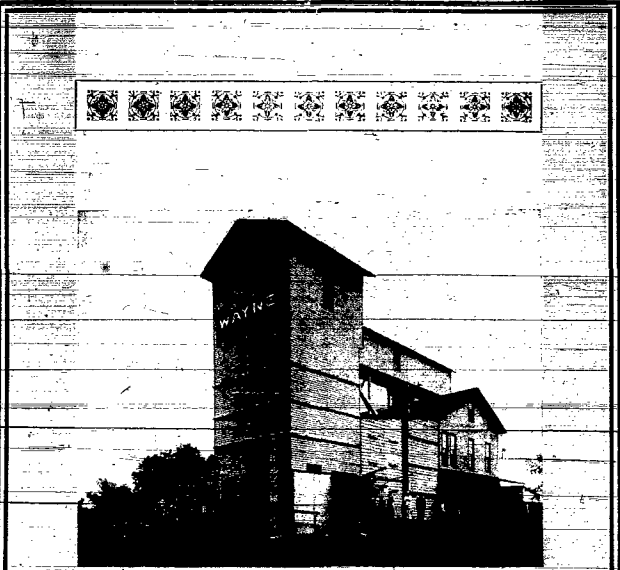

"The government of the United States is contending for something on behalf of those under its care and authority. Only her actual resistance to capture or refusal to stop when ordered to do so for the purpose of visit could have afforded the commander of the submarine any justification for so much as putting the vessel on board the ship in jeopardy. This principle the government of the United States understands the explicit instructions issued on August 3, 1914, by the im-

THIRTIETH Anniversary

On June 10, 1885, Weber Brothers—Emil, William and Walter—came to Wayne and established the flouring mills which have since carried their name and maintained a high reputation in the quality of their product.

It was thirty years ago in the town of Tekamah, that they decided to embark in the milling business in north-Nebraska, and selected Wayne as the most feasible and desirable point. Towns were clamoring for mills in the early days as they do now if they don't happen to have them. Like a town without a railroad, a town without a mill was anxious to give a bonus to get one.

The Webers were offered $2,000 to take their enterprise to Stanton, but influenced by the superiority of the Wayne territory decided to come here notwithstanding that the value of the bonus did not exceed $450. A year before the advent of the Webers, an agitation for a mill was started, and a miller came to promote the enterprise, but his plan did not materialize.

When the mill was put on its feet, Antone Lerner was employed as miller, and he has been on the job to this day, and is likely to stay on the job many years to come.

Some years ago the Webers built a big elevator, and six years ago changed their power from a steam engine to an oil engine. They have discarded out of date machinery from time to time, replacing it with the latest and best known to the milling business, and as a consequence have been able to keep the quality of their flour up to the highest possible standard. Hundreds of satisfied users of their two brands, Superlative and Snowflake, are convincing proof of superiority.

Before the mill was started thirty years ago, people had to go to Wakefield and Norfolk mills to exchange their wheat for flour, and accordingly when the Webers came and proved that they meant business, they were welcomed as the founders of a manufacturing institution of the utmost importance and value.

Four years ago Emil Weber sold his interest in the industry to his brothers, Walter and William, and with two exceptions, they are the only ones now remaining continuously in the same business for so long a period at this place. Their plant is one of the few manufacturing enterprises in Wayne, and is one of the most indispensable to the city and neighboring territory. The mill guarantees an attractive market for wheat, while supplying flour at bedrock prices. The mill pays and has always paid above the market price for wheat, at the same time giving to people the greatest possible reduction in the price of flour.

TAKING A PERFECT BREATH Proper Method of Filling the Entire Lung Cavity With Air
It does not suffice to breathe pure air.
It must be properly breathed. All breathing should be done through the nose, through the mouth and, if possible, in the open air, or at least before an open window, and several times daily.

The passage of air through the nose has the advantage of being warmed and moistened and is, being filtered and purified, in fact, the most satisfying and virtuous about during recent years. It is interesting to know that oriental teachers and philosophers have known and practiced it for generations.
This best of all practices may not promote muscular strength or increase the size of the lungs, but it does increase directly for the benefit of the lungs, heart, liver and abdominal organs, and thereby greatly and surely serves the unity.

To take a perfect breath:
Stand erect by an open window or out of doors. Breathe up the lips as if you were blowing out a candle. Let it blow out the breath and the tip of the tongue of air. Then, closing the mouth, draw the breath in, slowly, holding slowly and steadily, filling the entire lung cavity, which is done by bringing into play the diaphragm, which, contracting, creates a gentle pressure on the abdomen. In the last movement the lower part of the abdomen will be drawn in which movement gives the lungs a support and also helps to fill the highest points of the lungs. Retain the breath for a few seconds. Then once again nicker up the lips as if to whistle and through the small opening slowly and gently exhale the breath.—
