

COL ROOSEVELT CALLED BY DEATH

Passes Away While Ailing at Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay, Early Monday Morning.

DEATH DUE TO BLOOD CLOT

Long Sufferer From Rheumatism, But Conditions of His Condition Not Reported.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Jan. 6.—Col. Theodor Roosevelt died of a blood clot in his sleep early today at his home at Sagamore Hill in this village. Death is believed to have been due to thrombism which afflicted his heart.

Wife Finds Him Dead. The colonel suffered a severe attack of rheumatism and sciatica on Tuesday last. It was believed that his illness would likely prove fatal.

Messages of Condolence. Telegrams of condolence and sympathy began to pour in from all parts of the country today as soon as news of Col. Roosevelt's death became known.

The former president came to his home at Sagamore Hill from the Roosevelt hospital on Christmas week last. He had been suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism and sciatica from which he had not recovered since he was discharged last Saturday the colonel's secretary, Miss Josephine Stricker, called to see him but the colonel was not in his room.

Flags were placed at half mast in Oyster Bay today.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Jan. 8.—Except for two sons, absent as soldiers in their country's service overseas, the family of Theodore Roosevelt, twenty-sixth president of the United States, assembled in the living room at Sagamore Hill Sunday for the first time in a long period.

Home Service Brief. The home service, one of prayer alone, was to last hardly more than an hour, according to the Rev. George E. Palmage, rector of Christ Episcopal church, the Roosevelt family church, while the ritual service they were to attend was concluded within fifteen or twenty minutes after the casket was brought into the edifice.

A JOB FOR EX-PRESIDENT. Lincoln Journal. The suggestion is made in the usual thing here this time of year, I was certainly surprised to see England almost as green as Nebraska is in mid-summer with the exception of bad-which will be an essential part of the league of nations. Who stands in better position to be supreme judge of the world than Woodrow Wilson? It is a logical suggestion.

FROM DAN BURRESS. "Somewhere on the North Channel, Dec. 8, 1918. "Dear Wayne County Friends: As we are on a troop ship and have no herbs, I will use the time writing. We embarked at Southampton, England for Havre, France at 6 p. m. tonight. I will write a little about my stay in England, because I will soon see new scenes and people also to those sailing to Liverpool December 3, and were favored with a little sunshine for our trip, an unusual thing here this time of year. I was certainly surprised to see England almost as green as Nebraska is in mid-summer with the exception of bad-trees. Many gardens were full of cauliflower, cabbage, rutabagas, and the pastures were heavily carpeted with luxuriant grasses. I was pleased to see sheep, cattle and horses in very plentiful numbers in spite of the fact that some people believe that America will have to restock England. An English farmer told me that they were sending breeding stock liberally to France. He said one of his neighbors had his fat steers returned to him because of a crowded market. The shops are full of meat, although one must have coupons to buy all meats except fish and pork. I bought also to those wishing to purchase a mule. "One can hardly tell that England has been at war. The people are well fed and clothed and the shops display large amounts of food-stuffs. There is a noticeable lack of fruit, candy and sugar. No sugar at all served in drinks, cakes or puddings. Can you people imagine a pie, pudding, or cake without sugar? Of course one sees many cripples and soldiers, as a grim reminder of war. The horses are all sleek and well fed. Through country districts nearly all the horses are Shires. The land is nearly all pasture and hay. I saw many small patches of swamps which yield heavily and are fed to sheep. All the hay stacks have deep thatched roofs of coarse hay over them. "Almost every building is of brick, but some of stone. Very noticeable is the use of concrete, the bricks being of heavy stone or sometimes of iron. There are no grade-railroad crossings here. The country is fairly fertile and very heavily fertilized. The fields of course are much smaller than at home. The buildings are very old and one can find many fine homes in Shakespeare days. Every thing looks neat in England and the buildings built to give the railroad right-of-way a nice appearance. Even in the deepest cuts and are garden in many places. The style and size of the riding stock surprised me. The cutters are much smaller than ours but make good time because of the lightness of their bodies. "We averaged forty-five miles per hour from Liverpool to London. The freight cars are a joke. Hardly any exceed sixteen or twenty feet in length and few are closed. If the freight to be moved is covered, it is simply tied to the cars over it. We saw them loading loose straw into a car and it would only hold a small hay rack load. The freight car wheels are very light and have spokes instead of our solid wheels. I saw only one of these vehicles, peeped out even-trains along flat car and it was very light on double tracks, pass to the left. The cars and cabs are mostly for By this they can tell a newly-landed horse, although there are some "Yank" at ones. We were all tumbled. There are many canals with the top-path and horse, all through some use gas launches. From present appearances this is a very wet country, especially near the sea. We were in London only two hours, and that after dark. From there we came to Camp Winchester at Winchester, where we remained till today. It was built by the American army and used largely as a casualty, or rest-camp. There are odds and ends from everywhere. It is only twelve miles from the sea and is densely and misty and sloppy six days out of seven. One of our men asked a negro if it rained all the time here. He said: "Ah don know Massa, I see only been here two months. We ate with the officers and first and warm ourselves at a fire hoping to see the peace party pure fruit jam butter and the best time. The picturesque old ivy-covered ruins of a large, eleventh-century castle, with its old gaol, is worth seeing. The old west gate-the only remaining part of the city still spans the same Roman road traveled by early Roman conquerors. St. Catherine's hill still shows its complete circle of Roman breastworks. His story is fully forty-five degrees and from its heights Cromwell reduced the city of Winchester. I climbed it last night and crossed the immense grave yard of the black plague victims of the fifteenth century which is beyond it. "I crossed the stream where Isaac Walton first fished and from which he got his inspiration to write 'The Angler.' I am very glad I was delayed at Winchester. The English people are very pleasant and polite. I will close, as the boat is now pitching quite badly and the hour is nearly ten. We are sailing twenty-four miles per hour and our trip will only take six hours. I am well and thoroughly enjoying my varied experience. We are 240 in number and are all hoping to see the peace party any day. Write to 12 Rue deAguesseau, Paris. Your friend, Dan T. Burress.

UNCLE WALT The Poet Philosopher

IN JANUARY.
In January people say, "Where are your vows of New Year's Day?" They talk so cunning and so wise the blindest econometric gags! If they were tactful and polite, they'd say the weather is just right; they'd say the winter weather had been splendid for the winter, wheat. They'd talk about the price of calves, the future of the Jago-Slats; but no they never seems to seek for wholesome themes of which to speak, though topics void of all offense apparent are to men of sense. Ah, no! They don't smile and say, "Where are the vows of New Year's Day?" You told them when you made your pledge that you would never never hedge. Upon the crowded market place you made your boasts "With beaming face, you never would smoke or chew" or use such words as pirantes do; you'd eat out all your habits park, you'd be as moral as I'm smoking, but people would ignore the trailing little vowel-swore! They might discuss free verse or rats, or talk about their winter coats of best quality, or their coal or spring some harmless riddle. But no, they sidle up and say, "Where are the vows of New Year's Day?"

STOLEN OR STRAYED.
Was hear of all the famous Huns who put up hay and hedges? When Teuts were busy shooting guns, sent forth by Bill and Charlie, Old Hindenburg is still alive, though the dark disaster which he broods himself and seems to thrive-but what's become of Lady? And Bill himself in Holland aids, and writes an interesting letter, and once he throws some fits, and murmurs "Domierwetter!" The future looks to him so bleak he's sick at heart and never sees him sing and smile, or gambol o'er the acres; he's nervous, restless, and aspeet-like some old hen that's broody, although she has the highest nest-but what's become of Lady? Van Tarpitz bolts up now and then, in cases from o'er the water, although he isn't sending men to row, and is licensed slaugherer. He saw his hairy loop the loops, and in black and grey slung bag, and still he goes around and whom-but what's become of Lady? And Ludendorff, six months ago, was greater than sweetest, the whole of the year, and now, the champagne all around haust, he was the German hope and prop, the military duce he; now all the others, whose and yavp, but what's become of Lady?

DEMPESEY.
Now that the long drama war is done, and pees ables in camps and courts, we turn a moment from the Tims to think and talk of hospital sports. No armies now distort the maps, at the hebest of car or king, but we'll still have our little scraps, a little champagne in the ring. While captains whopped, and charges reared, and soldiers fired the deadly gun, a new phenomenon appeared, who went about on the look by the ton. This Dempsey of heroic name, that by another Jack was worn, has quickly gained a local fame, and made a lot of cheese-moans. Fred Fulton, who was went to wish that he would wear the champion's crown, ran-up against this Dempsey's fat, then on the mourners' bench sat down. One moment he was full of hope, the next in anguish dire, he sat, and leaped against a sagging rook, and asked the crowd where he was at. Carl Morris cried, "A las for Fred," but his beautiful should fall. "I'll punch this Dempsey party's head, and stop his fooling, once for all." But Dempsey smote that mass of fat, and found the wind thence sought, and Carl sat down to nurse his grief, and readjust his bands of thought. "I like this man of swart and hips," this Dempsey, victorious and strong; he's showing out the noisy fists, and wheeing them they don't belong.

THE WINTER SUN.
How sweet the sunshine on a winter day, as we grow tired of heavens black and gray! The clouds break up, and from a smiling sky the sun looks down and winks, and we set eye, and men look up and BARE their faces, which have been dark with sorrow for a while. The gray clouds are from transference, like fire, to aim in darkness, forgetting ailments dire; they smile and say they feel as good as new. The winter sun, his beams, like a beam of the flu. Some vagrant birds, that failed to emigrate, hop on the lawn and perch upon the gate; they seem to think that winter's gone, but lose their wits, that's where their wiles are crossed. How sweet the sunshine on a winter day! The air is thawed, the snow melt, away, the air is soft, and feeble Empedocles goes cissing out, without their winter wraps. In June they sit upon the porch, to read a book or smoke a five cent torch; and then the doc, the nurse and the nurse come, to fond them with and make their svines hum; in vain the apple, the guys grow worse and work, all the mortician brings his super-hearse. How sweet the sunshine of a winter day! Enjoy it all, but throw BOO! away, or you will suffer many woes and pangs; spring isn't here, by sundry paragon—

Oh, say young year, I'm glad you're here, so full of hope and promise! The year we've had were really bad, and-bank, so help me Thomas, I look behind and so my mind there comes a hateful rainbow—looks and—what's that?—I dread the prospects are bright—sunshine in '19, I vote and ween, and West and bet a shiner, no year on earth since Adam's birth has had a send-off finer. For years we've heard the dreary word of blood and smoke and battle, and in our dreams heard dying screams, and bones of dead men rattle, and it appeared, and all men feared that war would last forever, and evermore we'd hear of our army and navy and deaver. But now we cheer the bright new year that is not charged with sighing, that brings no threat of further blood, and here, soldiers, young year, brave year, I'm glad you're here, I am as glad as any; oh may your stay be many gay, and may your mounts be many gay.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.
I have to say that the government has passed to the franking privilege. We believe it would be better if all mail had to pay regular rates. This would be one step toward placing the different departments of the government on a business basis. At least we should know the exact amount of one very heavy item of expense. As it is now thousands of tons of mail are franked by each department and no account is taken. Congressmen use the frank to write to their constituents; they send out all sorts of bulletins and they use the frank for all campaign purposes in divers ways. They send tons of free seed to their constituents—seed which is worthless and goes to waste. The States Department of Agriculture carries on a tremendous correspondence from Washington. Under the present plan every state government station franks its bulletins, every agricultural extension service, since it is a part of the department of agriculture. Every state extension privilege, as does every county agent. It would take traits to carry the material franked by the county agents alone. The department of the treasury, the department of the interior, and all other government departments are losing the frank continuously with material which is sent under the frank. The post office department has to bear the burden. It goes before congress at every session with a bill asking for an appropriation to meet its deficits.

Let us assume, but only for the moment, and for the sake of argument, that all mail sent by the government is absolutely essential. Obviously it is only just that all departments should have the frank if one does, but is there any reason why one should have it? Why should not each department include in its budget an item for postage, and then let each government department pay the United States postoffice department for the material which is carried through the mail? In this way we would be able to get our finger on the budget with the postoffice. We would have to pay it of course, but we would be pay for it now. There would be no substantial difference that we would know exactly what we were paying for. Probably we would not have to pay for so much. It is so easy now for a department to send material because it can be sent under the frank. If postage were paid and all other government material would be scrutinized more closely. We might even be able to pay the entire bill and at the same time lower postal rates because of the savings made.

Governor S. R. McKelvie Advises Farmers to Co-Operate

ADDRESSING the Conference of Governors at Annapolis recently, Governor-elect McKelvie, said: "Farmers' co-operation under proper encouragement and with the barriers removed will overcome competition of all other agencies which are uneconomic. In addition to co-operative institutions at local shipping points, terminal markets must be open so that co-operative enterprises will have an even break."

Heed Governor McKelvie's advice, and practice co-operation by making the Farmers' Union stronger, giving it your influence and support. If you are a member of the Farmers' Union, you are sharing in the profits of the business. Stockholders receive liberal dividends on their stock. Get into the Farmers' Union wagon, and share in its benefits.

Often those who would grant the least mercy are the ones in greatest need of mercy.

We think it was Pope who said the main use of language was to deceive of which we are reminded every day for the amount of stuff that is said, but which is not true.

People will be glad to respond to the call to help suffering Americans and Syrians. Now it is hoped the Turks have been a scourge to the distressed people ever since the government for any body of stockholders venture to make improvements? These are the suggestions of one who pretends to know little about how transportation should be owned or controlled.

It has been suggested that a meeting be held in Wayne to discuss and comment the public work of the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt. It is pointed out in England that the habit of reviewing the history of great men has long been established and has engaged the attention of the general population. A meeting of the kind suggested, held in the State Normal auditorium, with a general character, would seem very appropriate.

Former President W. H. Taft was Omaha last week to lead in the settlement of differences between street car employees and owners. While there he made a speech at a general meeting, and his address and logical analysis of public questions, free from partisan prejudice, aroused the plaudits and admiration of all present. He would not be surprised if Taft, once defeated for the presidency, and proved one of the best losers in the world, would be regarded as the leader of the republican party in 1920.

It has been suggested that the legislature ought to find an effective way to apprise people who are not full-fledged citizens of the provisions of the new constitutional amendment defining the qualifications of voters. According to the amendment, carried at the late election, one who has not taken out his first papers and become a one hundred per cent citizen cannot vote. This fact should be brought to the attention of people at no unprofitable dilations of the law will be possible.

The way people gave and worked during the war, making every deed a sacrifice to help win victory, shows the resourcefulness that will be called into action if necessary. It might well be half as enterprising in dealing with public improvements as they were generous in responding to the call of the government. Wayne would make wonderful headway in the matter of paving. Every property owner could afford to stretch the cost of the cost. Increased convenience and increased values would eminently justify the expense. Submit the proposition to property owners and nine out of ten will say they want it and would be glad to pay their share of the cost. Not one would want to be without the improvement if the town were paved.

The question of government possession and operation of transportation lines is now being considered and discussed. Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Clegg, has been given charge of the railroads for five years, and then, when the experiment determine what shall be done with them. Waynes would be made for new equipments which are notably needed on the St. Louis City-Norfolk line, is not explained. We do not know as much as we should about the grades, but assume that all air lines or less in the dark. As a war measure to assist movement of troops and material, government operation of the railroads was accepted as possible and necessary. As to the service, it is as best as could be expected, and freight rates are higher. For a long series of years the railroads were incessantly dominated by one or two progressive charges. Political parties vied with one another in roasting transportation companies, and every legislature took about a thousand in one way or another. Rates were taken in hand and reduced. During such time railroad companies made few improvements, and we assume that the unfavorable attitude of the public did not encourage stockholders to invest money beyond absolute necessities. Along comes the government and in a brief time of control discovers that the railroads need higher rates and accordingly boosts them. If higher rates are needed now, is it reasonable to assume that much lower rates a few years ago were excessive and extortionate? If the policy of handling the railroads continues uncertain will either the government or any body of stockholders venture to make improvements? These are the suggestions of one who pretends to know little about how transportation should be owned or controlled. However, whatever course is followed, we think a way ought to be found to improve equipment and facilitate service. Both should be developed and made as good as they were forty years ago if possible.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The unexpected death of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, former president, and an eminent citizen, one of the highest, and most virile type, sent a shock around the world. Men-in-every-walk of life knew and revered Colonel Roosevelt for his positive nature, his undoubted aggressiveness, he had a multitude of enthusiastic admirers from the frontier to the sea. He was no straddler. One knew exactly where to find him on every public issue, and he held the power of the nation. When president, he was a terror to evil doers, and since then his phenomenal force has been pronounced the greatest foundation of national and international relations.

It would take a huge volume to review his notable achievements, and his contributions to human progress and world development. He was a wonderful character, and will be known in history for his distinguished service as long as time lasts.

The Sioux City Journal makes the following observation at the conclusion of its editorial.

"Beside his bier a nation will bring in tribute to the dead. From prince and potentate and citizen and the humble walk of life will come messages of appreciation, words of love and devotion and tokens of a fraternal regard. The nation which the chasm that divides men in life but unites them in the presence of death. A nation he served at its highest altar will bring to him the respect and honor due his servant. A people will express their tribute of a leader and a citizen. The many nations which would round a world for a quarter of a century. A world will mourn the passing of a character whose life has been a lesson to hearts and minds of earth and nations throughout the ages. The greatest tribute possible to pay him, money and the one he would most appreciate were he not beyond the realm of earthly consciousness, is that he was an ideal American citizen."

Arthur Tucker and Walden Tucker arrived here to visit their parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Tucker. The former came from Cedar Rapids and the latter from Fairbury, S. D.

The marriage of Miss Lucy Deimberg to Gustav Bodenstadt, took place at the Lutheran church in Wayne, January 1. Rev. Karsten was officiating. There were in the presence of nearly sixty friends.

The public improvements for Wayne during 1912 amounted to $110,000. The buildings erected were: Two brick store buildings by Herman Milder and Frank Kruger, one dormitory at the college and Henry Loy's two dwelling houses.

Except from three-column article in the Ponca Journal, February 8, 1893, detailing one of several experiences by which the citizens of Dixon county were hornswoggled out of their money in the early days.

But the ordinary effort to hand down to a happy immortality, this country, its towns and business men, during this winter. One day some what decaying specimen of gentility struck this town and immediately commenced the revivification of its well worked field of literature and the revivification of its business men.

It would write for Chicago magazine and in return receive a full, complete and graphic history of the county, the towns, the citizens and the future. Owing to the already was circulation of this satirically well patronized magazine in the east, the knowledge of our prosperous existence and internal resources, would be conveyed to thousands, many tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands. Fancy pictured a multitude of people reading those magazines, and immediately forming into a sold column and striking on masses for this promised land. The distinguished but rather seedy benefactor who had proposed this scheme for the purpose of doing us up so proudly, worked his field with diligence in Ponca and Wakefield. What was suggested with this great and excellent man, was he did not charge anything for all the good things he intended to say about the county or towns. Truly, the million seemed at hand. As a matter of course the citizens would wish to purchase a few numbers containing all this intelligence in order to send them to those in the east who perhaps were not already subscribers in the magazine. To accommodate such, the generous immortal of the county graciously agreed to furnish magazines at the remarkably low price of 50 cents per copy. In this town, we, as near as we can learn, about 350 copies sold, and in Wakefield as many more. Probably not less than 350 magazines at a cost of $250 were sold in this county. And then to think of the tens of thousands of the magazines in addition, which would be sent broadcast over the east by the publishers, thus rendering the few brought here a mere patching, a mere skinning, mere drop in the bucket to the whole amount. Immortality could not be purchased at a cheaper price. The gentle stranger, having prepared the way to his exit, departed and last week the ardently expected magazines arrived. The one collected the note. (This is a very good plan under such circumstances. We have noticed that lightning rod men do the same. One makes the contract, and when the note is paid, and the man admits owing and fulfills as the poor devil who has been deluded into signing the contract).

Thus the recipient received their pamphlets and paid for them, and then, as we are informed, it was learned that this so-called magazine had no circulation outside this county and that only enough were printed to furnish to those who had bargained to pay at the rate of 50 cents for a copy. The scheme was to be so, the little pamphlet is worth all it cost. It is worth it as a medium of sicken and incoherent literary stuff, and of soft and unbecomingly tattered, reminding one of a sort of butterfly compound overdressed to the maximum with nigger-toe molasses. Every man who had purchased magazines was given an extended notice and was made the subject of admiring and flattery, but if he thought none he was utterly ignored as though he had never lived. Of the four chapters in the first chapter two and three pages, is devoted to Dixon county at large. The second chapter concerns Wakefield. It has nineteen and a half pages of text and a number of pages which puff the town, and the remainder, over seventeen pages, is filled with pictures of those of Wakefield's business men who planked the cash for the magazine. Chapter three has twenty-five pages and is related to Ponca, three and a half pages are about the town, and twenty-one and a half pages are filled with business puff. Chapter four is a half a page and speaks of Emerson and Martinsburg, and a single line at the end recognizes the existence of Newcastles. There was not a heavy harvest of subscribers in those parts. Thus will be seen, of the fifty pages in the magazine, twenty pages are devoted to puffing and praising subscribers and what is remarkable, when you read one puff down in hopes of not stopping and stantly read them all. It is evident that the pond from which the water is drawn for inspiration has a wonderful amount in it. The same stale, flat, soft-soaped, honey-lugful odor pervades the whole, and, moreover, the same manner of using or describing each business, whether it be a brickyard, a millinery shop, dry goods store, slaughterhouse, or any other business. The only real difference we can see, is that those who paid the most got the longest doses. The few pages not devoted to puffing subscribers are mostly wind, and could have easily been boiled down to twenty lines. The type and paper, however, are good, and the cover is gorgeous and is, as if generally the case with the out-door parade of a circus, the best part of the whole affair.

Are You Open-Minded?

The average American is open-minded.

American business is conducted by true Americans of vision, open-minded men who believe in their country and strive to meet their country's needs. The men in the packing industry are no exception to the rule.

The business of Swift & Company has grown as the nation has progressed. Its affairs have been conducted honorably, efficiently, and economically, reducing the margin between the cost of live stock and the selling price of dressed meat, until today the profit is only a fraction of a cent a pound—too small to have any noticeable effect on prices.

The packing industry is a big, vital industry—one of the most important in the country. Do you understand it?

Swift & Company presents facts in the advertisements that appear in this paper. They are addressed to every open-minded person in the country.

The object of presenting chapters in this story of the packing industry will be obtained on request to Swift & Company, Union Stock Yards, Chicago, Illinois.

FROM JOHN L. BUSH.

Mrs. C. R. Glen received a letter this week, from her brother, John L. Bush, who is a wagoner in the thirty-eighth ambulance company. The following extracts were taken from the letter.

Somewhere in France, December 8, 1918.

Dear sister: I will try to answer your letter which I received some time ago. I have been going so fast that I can't get my act together. I don't have much time to write. I don't get my mail very regularly for I have only been with the company one night the last week. I was above Verdun when the armistice was signed. A few days later we left for Marolles, the southern part of France. I took about fifteen days to make the trip. Upon my return to the company, six of us were selected for the detached service at a camp hospital. We have plenty to eat and good place to sleep. I just got back from a hospital visit. I got some Red Cross supplies. The Red Cross is the main spoke in the wheel over here, and they're getting on over I am using now. It freezes a little here every night.

I spent Thanksgiving day on the road. We stopped that night at the town where we were in training when we first came over here. It snowed in here that night.

You wanted to know if I didn't send you a Christmas label. I don't could have gotten one sometime ago, but I don't think any man could carry and everything I needed. I hope to be home to spend Christmas next year. I wish you and Merry had a Christmas. Happy New Year. Your brother, Wagoner John L. Bush, Ambulance company 38th, Sixth Sanitary Train, A. C. L.

SOLDIERS IN HOSPITALS NEED CURRENT MAGAZINES

Wounded men in hospitals and soldiers in cantonments awaiting demobilization need magazines more than ever. Write to request to be included by the American Library Association from its camp and hospital libraries. From the same source it is reported that the supply of magazines contributed by the public has fallen off materially since the signing of the armistice. Wherever you see a soldier or stamp on a magazine and drop it into a mail box, it quickly gets into the hands of these men, who need this sort of reading matter very much. Every sort of periodical in demand, so long as they are recent issues. Humorous, fiction, business, literary—every sort of weekly and monthly publication is eagerly read. Trade and technical periodicals are in demand.

It is such a very little thing for anyone to do, just to put a one-cent stamp on the notice which is printed on the cover of every periodical, published in America and drop it in the postoffice. The only apparent reason why the supply of these magazines has fallen off seems to be the general impression that all of the men in uniform are to be immediately sent back home. But we shall have a million and more men in camps for many months to come and tens of thousands in the hospitals, and, as the camp librarians point out, they have more time for reading and reading is more necessary to their happiness and well-being than it was while all were kept up to the heights of enthusiasm.

FREEDOM OF THE SEAS
(From an Address by Viscount Grey.)

The question of the league of nations seems to become daily more acute, not only for itself, but because it is becoming more and more clear that the subject is most closely bound up with a question as to the greatest importance in our foreign affairs, that of our relations with the United States of America. I see no reason whatever why the United States and Great Britain should not only not come into collision, but should not be brought together to compare views, provided the peoples are perfectly frank both with each other and with one another, and no misunderstandings grow up, as to what each means.

We hear from the United States that there is a great amount of talk about the freedom of the seas, that President Wilson attaches great importance to it, and that it is anticipated that it will create no difficulties between himself and our government. I think it a great pity that so much has been said about the freedom of the seas without its being defined. It is quite true that there is a considerable prejudice against the phrase in this country, and I think, to the fact that it is believed to be a German phrase. Now it is not a German phrase. It is a phrase which has been made in the United States, and the Germans adopted it, and used it for their own purposes, in a sense and with an intention to which we could have never agreed. Therefore it has never become very popular.

Who we have to consider is what the United States means. President Wilson means, by the phrase "freedom of the seas," that we do not wish to discuss it with our government, there is no need to anticipate that there will be difficulty about agreement. What does it mean? Does it mean freedom of the seas in time of peace? If so, we agree. Wherever the British navy has been in power, the seas in time of peace, there it has exercised that influence impartially, for the freedom of the seas for all nations, without distinction.

I think that even in the United States there has been some talk of foreign ships are not allowed to carry goods between United States ports and the Philippines. Some people have said that this is of the same kind. Well, we have never had a rule like that. We have never completely for the freedom of the seas in times of peace, than any other nation, and however strong our navy has been we have never varied in recent times on that point, and we have used our power, however great it has been, for impartial freedom of the seas; for every other nation, in times of peace. I think we ought to receive a definite recognition that we are free to use British naval power in time of peace to make the use of the seas more easy for ourselves without any loss to the same time as to be easy for others of the same terms. (Cheers.)

If the question is one of freedom of the seas in time of peace, but in time of war, I would say this. The United States in this war of 1914-1918, has not only not lost a single ship, but has won. You cannot emphasize that too much or express too much appreciation of it. Since the United States and the United Kingdom have now won, you cannot emphasize that too much or express too much appreciation of it. Since the United States and the United Kingdom have now won, you cannot emphasize that too much or express too much appreciation of it.

It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade.

It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade.

bound up with the question of a league of nations, and cannot be discussed in isolation. On those grounds I believe there may be some agreement between the two countries only if a league of nations is formed, and if when it is formed, it fails to perform its obligations, then of course the peoples' hands must be free.

But what I want to see is a league of nations formed, not to make rules of war, but to prevent all wars. There is no reason why the disputes arise between two countries. Those disputes should be settled by some means other than that of war. If one nation is willing to settle these disputes other than by war, as it would be bound to do by covenant with the league of nations, and another refuses, then the whole league sides with the nation which is willing to settle against the one which is not.

I do not see why this country should not accept the formula that if a league of nations is formed, it shall be complete freedom of the seas, so long as the covenants of the league are observed, but if the covenants of the league is broken then there is no freedom of the seas, and every means is used against the power which has broken the covenant. (Cheers.)

SLACKWATER BUSINESS.
St. Louis City Journal. With the seas are not being considered as one of business influences stand out rather conspicuously. Some of these are fundamental; others are directly connected with the sea, and venturing is not completed in many instances and until this annual stock-taking is finished little attention will be given to constructive business. The post-holiday clearance sales have annihilated retail trade materially, but these sales mean nothing more than a turning of stock into money, often with loss and never with profit. They are commercial house cleanings which cannot be accepted as criterions of business volume. There has been some buying to replenish broken stocks, but these are being ordered shipped. But on the whole, business is in a slack-water condition.

There is still apprehension concerning future ventures and large orders of substantial enlargements are not being considered. One of the dominating elements of the business situation at this time is the fear that in spite of its declaration of independence the government may throw vast quantities of raw material now held by it and purchased for war purposes on the market and over-reach the demand that prices will be demoralized. Whether this distrust of the government is well founded or is the result of business nervousness, the results are the same.

Foreign fields have been looked to as a source for the absorption of any serious overproduction, especially in reconstruction material, including steel. But in this direction, the government has not acted with considerable justification that there is danger of cheaper production and markets in which production cost were not sent skyward by war conditions, which may capture the foreign trade with lower priced goods. They point to the price of wheat as proof of the possibilities. The foreign wheat supplies are now being sold in Europe at about half the guaranteed price of the product in the United States. Why they ask is it not possible for the same commodity to be sold at a price which is so imperatively needed to reconstruct Europe?

It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade. It is impossible to suppose that there is to be no blockade.
