Dr. Wightman's Home Becomes Oil Field

Dr. W. C. Wightman, formerly of Wayne, and now a resident of Long Beach, Calif., in one of twenty-eight men who owned beautiful homes in Long Beach, the sites of which have been turned into an oil field.

A press account from California gives the following in part: "Twenty-eight men and women who owned homes and homesteads in a certain twenty-acre tract of the shore residential section of Signal Hill are drawing down regular profits now from the production of oil wells, a fact of which these proprietors are proud to register to the personnel of Crescent Heights community lease."

"Those of the twenty-eight who live on the hill back to some from neighboring wells drenched their estates with oil. Those who had purchased homesteads with the expectation of buying property in the oil business of black gold to abandon such plans."

"As an offset to their disappointment, the twenty-eight are now dividing among themselves a tract of the market value of 6,000 barrels of oil per day and it appears altogether probable that this production will soon reach a total of 20,000 barrels per day. The present 6,000 barrels production is from three wells; the program calls for ten wells."

"The lease within the boundaries of Crescent Heights lease are located in what has proved to be one of the richest regions of Signal Hill oil fields. The lease is bounded on the north by a line 300 feet north of Crescent avenue, on the east by Iowa avenue which is one block west of Cherry avenue, on the south by Creston avenue and on the west by Walnut avenue. It measures approximately twenty and one-half acres, the exact figure being 29.25 acres. Royalties from 10% oil production are apportioned to the lot owners according to their acreage, which amounts to twenty-nine-quarters of an acre each."

"Captain Roland G. Swaffeld, lawyer, organized the lot-owners into the leaseholding company and negotiated the deal whereby the Union Oil company drills the wells and pays twenty-five per cent royalty. Captain and Mrs. Swaffeld with their family had one of the most beautiful homes on the heights, with spacious grounds embellished with rare shrubs and flowers. There were also there with a profuse variety of rare shrubbery and gardens of flowers. In addition to the garage there were stables for blooded saddle horses. All those comforts and luxuries of suburban life had to be foregone for apartments and flats downtown when the nearby Black and Drake estates went wild and sprayed that whole area with a thick scum of black gold."

"The experience of the Swaffeld family was that of many others in the twenty-eight. The homes of several of these were veritable show places. In the city there are many houses equal to the Crescent Heights estates, but few had grounds of equal generous proportions and lavish adornment. Motorists were wont to climb the hill to view such beautiful exhibitions as those of Dr. William G. Wightman, Horace W. Green, William Herbert Wise, Herbert F. Ahlwardt, Charles E. Huntington and others of their neighbors, all evicted by industry on rampage."

This matter has been under discussion for some time and a number of plans have been considered in the improvement of this church property. The plan which will now be put in effect is to construct a full basement under the entire church. The church will be raised higher so as to allow windows for the basement above ground.

Chicago Tribune: It is generally said that a cause cannot survive if it alienates public sympathy. This opinion is supposed to be a factor in the background which is powerful although unorganized. It is probably true that groups of men would have difficulty in maintaining themselves in the face of a public which felt itself outraged and injured by their acts.

When the public does not feel the pinch its opinions are academic. A citizen may indulge in some opinions about a strike, but they are different from the opinions he has when he is dumped out of a train at Needles, Calif., at 120 degrees of temperature, or when he looks at an empty coal bin in November. The difference is the difference between the opinions of the forum and opinions of the ramparts.

In the sporadic striking which the railroad brotherhoods have been countenancing without granting the formal authorities of a strike, there is public annoyance. In the acts of violence against railroad property there is public insecurity.

Probably nine-tenths of the people of the United States would be puzzled to say what they thought were the right or wrong of the seniority question, but nearly all of them would sympathize with people who were dumped out in the desert, because their own desire that they train there. Add sickly women and distressed children to the situation and the sympathy is greater.

The people must themselves descend to the acts of the fighters in these labor controversies. They frequently are required to travel, they depend upon transport, and they depend upon fuel. The side which exposes them to danger or treats them with contempt may find that it is costly business.

One who carries his mouth open, not closing it even for Sundays or holidays, has some advantage. It is always ready for business. It is ready to eat drink or talk without extra labor.

The coal miners' strike being virtually over, the next task to be undertaken by the government in handling the fuel situation is to prevent operators from covering their losses by exacting exorbitant prices from consumers.

It is hoped the city will soon be able to connect with its new and more copious water supply. The present source is probably all right, but it has many defects from covering their losses by exacting exorbitant prices from consumers.

Eastern shophmen have asked for the impeachment of Attorney General Daugherty and Federal Judge Willson on account of an injunction seeking to relieve the threatened transportation tieup. The rest of the country whose interests the injunction proposed to serve, will naturally be against impeachment.

Accidents and near accidents are often due to carelessness on the part of drivers and pedestrians alike. One who is driving should attend strictly to his driving. He should not allow his eyes or his hands to be on the job for a moment. He should not allow his eyes or his hands to be on the job for a moment. He should not allow his eyes or his hands to be on the job for a moment.

Young people are apt to think the old home town is dull, and they want to go to a strange city where they believe they can try high and have a good time. They are sure to reap harvest of regrets. Current news reports tell of a young girl, aged 17, who had tired of her little home town and sought the excitement of Kansas City. Perhaps significantly, it is mentioned that her father is custodian of the town's cemetery. Anywhere in the city, they fell in love with the way a young man said cream cones, and straightway married him. The next day she had trouble with her husband and left him. She was cured of the lure of the big city and was glad to get back to the old home town. Many girls as well as boys seem to have to learn by bitter experience.

We have lately received a rather vigorous lough of the intense heat that has scorched and ruined crops in southern and western parts of the state. The weather here has been dry and hot enough to shrink maturing corn somewhat, but in this section of the state the crop will be far ahead of less favored localities. One assurance given by the weather bureau from possibility of damage by an early frost.

Resumption of the public schools revives educational information about the young, and suggests that no one should be denied the privilege of improving his mind, and thus equipping himself to better meet the responsibilities of life. Schooling is good for everybody, and the winning of knowledge will enable one to discharge more wisely his duties in life. Whether one has an aptitude for mathematics or stock judging or matching boards, he will derive more satisfaction from his work if he has been broadly and profoundly educated. Education enables one to comprehend all the things that more clearly sharpens appreciation and enlarges enjoyment. Schooling is important for all and should be the encouragement for all.

When you are ready to begin your plain sewing, come and choose your percales, gingham, sheetings and muslins from a large assortment of bright new patterns we have just received.

This is the time of year when a great deal of the Christmas fancy work is started. We visited the Richardson-Silk Co. display rooms and selected a great variety of new stamped goods and threads for this work. They showed us finished pieces of a great many of the designs we bought and we took notes of the color combinations their expert needleworkers had chosen to carry out the different pieces. We will be glad to help you plan your needle work according to these ideas.

UNCLE WALT

The Poet Philosopher

The Coin Fever.
A noxious fever in my veins, and I am always taking pains to nail another plank on my "I leave the fragrant bay and chase the robbies" sign, until I seek my bunk. I am so weary that I groan, and yet I sigh, "Another hour I must collect the coin, for I see weaving through the crowd and not down where it can't get away. Ah, once, when shades of evening fell I'd read the works of Harold Bell, reads they were comfort to me, and Laura Libbey's stately poems, and Sappo Johnson's noble poems would fill the hours with glee. Art stirred me with a ringing door, "The Rose" of roses" on the wall I found a thing of charm; but since this fever grew so strong the higher things, the art and science, and the fine alarm. My rows of books are thick with dust, my lute and timbrel, red with rust, are hanging from a nail; and I am sure that I shall never be taught on earth seems worth while, except the useful ka. Another kopeck placed in brine, another piece of silver in mine, another glance you! But all the friends I used to know abandoned me long ago, now, I'm shunned by penit men. I've passed up all the simpler joys of running down the silver boys, the dollars of our dads; and when the day is left behind the only pleasure I can find is counting up the scads.

Close to Nature.
I tramped on a South Sea isle on which the natives were for I was sick of worldly guff, and all that cities give. Oh, I was tired of routine suits, of laws' smarts and stings, and I would live on a false alarm, and drink from gushing springs. For I read a thousand books concerning South Sea isles, of dusky girls in soft fin robes, and of men with their smiles. I longed to dwell by bubbling rills where summer moonbeams lurk, where people do not pay their bills, and no one needs your aid. But the friends I languished there, from clanging marts afar, without a table or a chair, a bank or a sign. Then I addressed the dusky belle who had become my bride: "This sort of life may suit you well—to it's suicide. So I will say farewell, my lass, and sail across the sea, and leave you standing in the grass, among the bare hills. Some other gent will come, no doubt, and take you for his wife, some hobo and wild western scout who'd lead a quiet life. But I to some more rugged scene must haste to leave my tracks, where I'll smelt the kiesel, and pay my income tax. I know these woods have lovely tints, the scenery's sublime, but I must read the public prints, and note the wave of crime. I will therefore seek a better life, a more dignified sphere for it, I never shall see your face, you'll spare the sight of mine."

Hobbies.
When one retires from active life, from all its turmoil, stress and anxiety, some silly fad he must pursue, some hobby he must keep in view, or he'll be soaked in tears. For the days drag by, and to one who made the gravel fly in time of pep and strength; and he will find a hobby pays; it gives some charm to empty days, and will reduce the price of an collecting stovepipe hats once worn by famous plutoocrats, and seers and poets meek; I have the lid that Lincoln stole at seven cents per week. Collecting bonnets drives away the dust, the midday and decay that comes with age. I have a collection of my heart with smiles, to view my stock of storied tiles, the kellys of the great No. where I live old men are thick, they rest, the ancient, street and look behind the ocean blue; and when the sea has lost its charm, the old boys view things with alarm, for they have sought to do. I tell them that collecting cats, or over shoes, or stovepipe hats, or tin tobacco tags, will make them all seem young again; these old and haggard, woe men, so tired and old, but they were used to large affairs, when in their old time city lairs, they don't know how to play; and so I murmur, "Hats!" while I go on collecting hats to drive the gloom away.

Helping Out.
Today I helped a pair of greys whose sorrows made me sigh; to one I handed twenty cents, and fed the other. When they departed from my home they smiled at me and said, "May-blessings rest upon your dome until your days are sped." The blessings of a pair of bums may have a market here, and yet, when I quit evening comes, they cut some little ice. For then I view the day, and have pointed out the best of the knowledge is a prize! When evening's priceless shadows fall it makes one's bosom bleed, if he, remembering an old man, and friendly deed. One day I give a bo a cup of sparkling Adam's ale; the next I soothe a wailing pup that has no mother. To those oppressed by dead men's ways, I have expressed my hearty sympathy, and long like to up rede I preach; and I dry a widow's tears, if haply she's a peach.

Locked Up Ladies.
Through the prison, with the jailer, I went snooping 't'other day, and my face and soul were paler when at last I came away. For 'twas full of females quently who took murder as 't sport, wailing grimly or serenely for their hearing in the court. "Here is Madge," remarked the warden; "she grew weary of her man, and she poisoned him, according to the Mary Blandy plan. Here is Clara; she dumped her as a savage, without end, for she bought a ten cent hammer and with that she slew her friend. With her face against the casement there is Laura, pale and dead, and she was in her basement on who tried to queer her game. In this dungeon—in our past—there is a woman, in a dress, who engaged a cheap assassin to remove a tiresome gent. Over yonder we discover Jane, who once got with an axe to take; she grew weary of her lover and suppressed him with an ax. I believe with poet Ruddy," said the keeper of the jail, "that the dame who dined, bloody, is more deadly than the male." So I viewed the Susan and Sadie, pacing up and down the cells; what's the matter with the ladies, they are not wearing bells? Every morning comes the keeper, with a story dead and dun, how some lady cut a caper with a cleaver or a gun.

The Car Mania.
Long ago, when I was walking, such exertion I found shocking, and my extra fann was mocking, as they would slither past; so I mortgaged every auto and my house and strings of cattle, like a boob with brains a-rotate, and I owned a car. For two months or so my neighbor made my heart with rapture quiver, then I learned to sigh and shiver as I viewed my rusty wagon; for my neighbors were railing in their autos bright and shining, decked with purple velvet lining and all sorts of trimmings 'vahn. So I 'began to feel that I was being treated like the car man who was willing, and my uncle made a killing, lending money on my junk, and today I'm bravely leaning in an auto nobly gleaming like the car you see when dreaming in your little downy bunk. But I know a car that's better, and that's an auto, don't matter, for the day when I can get her, and long like an autocrat, and my soul will cheer with sorrow if I cannot steal or borrow.

row coin to get the bus tomorrow or the next day after that. And I see myself proceeding in that car, perverting speeding; and my bosom will be bleeding from a wearing high and bold for another car that's stucky, with a body made of wicker, and a patent diamond kicker, and a fan belt edged with gold.

Modern Home For Sale

On account of the death of my wife, I have decided to offer my residence—better known as the Wm. Remick home—for sale for a short time, and I have priced it much lower than it is worth—low enough to sell without delay.

People who know this residence need no explanation as to its elegance and completeness. To those who don't know, I would say it is located in one of the best residence districts of the city and is considered one of the most modern, convenient and attractive residences in north-east Nebraska.

It is five blocks from the State Normal school and seven blocks from the high school. It has everything the ingenuity of a home builder could suggest.

I would like to show it to any one wanting a fine home, priced far less than it could be built for.

Intensive Cultivation —OF— Small Acreage

The days of large farms and estates are numbered. The great bluegrass farms of Kentucky and the vast estates of Virginia that are rich in romance and history are being subdivided today; they are bowing their heads to the progress of time. The owners are realizing at last that the large estate is not a paying investment, and are rapidly disposing of their holdings. Mr. Dale Hall, residing near Peterson, Iowa, has proved to the world that intensive cultivation pays, for he succeeded in getting himself into the income tax paying class, through the profits which he made by farming six acres of land, which he borrowed from a railroad right-of-way, and we are told, by a reputable party, that an Oklahoma farmer by intensive cultivation on ten acres of very poor land supported a family of ten children, and had enough money left to enjoy a nice savings account. Large profits gained by intensive cultivation and high fertilization of small sections of ground are not new. In fact, almost all of the farming in continental Europe is done on this plan. The multitudes in thickly settled Belgium, France and Germany are sustained, in large part, by the product of small farms where the ratio of labor to acreage is high.

Attend the Big Auction Sale on Wednesday, September 20, and buy at your own price one acre or as many acres as you desire and put yourself in the Dale Hall class.

Besides preparing teachers for their work an opportunity is offered to those who desire to enter other occupations, to take an academic course which does not involve any of the professional work.

While the institution is of great value to the State of Nebraska, it is of special value to those who live in the immediate vicinity. The student has an opportunity to start with the kindergarten and take all of the grades, the high school work, and the four year college course. This work is unsurpassed and there are no tuition charges whatever. Among some special courses offered are: Music, Art, Home Economics, Agriculture, Expression, Commerce, Manual Training, besides regular College Work and Preparation for Teaching.

These things are well worth considering by anyone who contemplates the purchase of a new home. The school term of 1922-23 will open on September 11. For further information and catalog, address

I want to be frank with you and tell you candidly that the only reason in the world that I have for selling these properties at this time is because I must raise money and that money means more to me just now than does the ownership of these properties.
