Pilgrimage Honors Hero in Epic Poem

The hundred-year-old crawl of Hugh Glass, hero of the epic poem of John G. Neihardt, seemed so realistic to Dr. J. T. House of Wayne on a visit to the scene of his event, that he jokingly asserted to his comrades of the trip that on an offer from any magazine, he would willingly duplicate the feat. The incident in which Glass made the crawl—across the prairies to Fort Kiowa, near Chamberlain, S. D., after he had been abandoned and deserted by his comrades, Dr. House, of course, would not wish to repeat these qualifications. He would specify in the poem that he would like to see his comrades would travel the route with him in order that he be provided with sustenance at the very spots where Hugh Glass received the most mistaken of mulberries or plums, or to have quenched his thirst at a rivulet or spring. The South Dakota country at this place is rich in mulberries and fruits, but the creeks run dry most of the year. Dr. House seemed awed by the fact that Dr. Neihardt, in his poem, almost correctly and in minute detail, reproduced a scene from a country which he visited for the first time last year. Dr. Neihardt minutely placed the bluffs, springs, and rivers in his literary pictures at the exact places where they exist. A trip to the Hugh-Glass country near Sein, S. D., was made last week by Dr. J. C. Neihardt and Dr. E. J. Neihardt, who usually placed the purpose of erecting a monument at the forks of the Grand river in memory of Hugh Glass and his historic crawl. The monument was of stone, constructed in the form of the frustrum of a pyramid and the inscription on it faces north, overlooking the valley of the river. The party who made the journey from Wayne by automobile consisted of Dr. Neihardt, Dr. House, A. E. Long of Omaha, and Elmer Hiltz. The route led through a country which being sorely troubled with rains, presented one interesting sight after another. The return trip took the party through the Black Hills, with visits at the battlefields of Crows-Butte and Wounded Knee on the Sioux reservation.

On the way to Sein, the Wayne party was joined at Pierre, S. D., by Secretary Fox of the South Dakota historical society, his wife, and Judge Samuel Polly of the State supreme court and his daughter, Miss Catherine Polly. At the forks of the Grand river, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Young of Murdo, S. D., who are known in Wayne, joined the group. The editor of the Lemon, S. D. Tribune and other citizens of that town attended the ceremonies held on Wednesday evening, July 31.

The dedication of the monument was attended with fitting services. Dr. House read parts of the "Song of Hugh Glass" and Dr. Neihardt recited some of his lyric poems. An interesting incident accompanying Dr. House's part on the program was that the howl of a coyote was heard at the precise moment when one was mentioned in the reading of the poem.

Wynot Boy Injured on Last Wednesday

Reinhart Schulte, the 6-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Schulte, living near Wynot met with a serious accident on Wednesday afternoon of last week when he was caught in a grain binder. His right arm was torn off and the other was badly mangled. The father had been on the binder and had just changed places with a neighbor boy who started to drive the machine. The little boy accidentally got in the way and was unnoticed by the driver. The father saw the child and ran to his rescue. He placed tourniquets on the boy's arms and rushed him to the Hartington hospital. Every effort is being made to save the child's life at arm. The father's property in the station probably saved his son's life.

President Warren G. Harding

President Warren G. Harding who passed away from a stroke of apoplexy in San Francisco Thursday evening at 7:30. San Francisco, Calif., Aug. 2.—President Harding died at 7:30 o'clock tonight of a stroke of apoplexy. The end came suddenly while Mrs. Harding was reading to him from the evening newspaper and after what had been called the best day he had had since the beginning of his illness exactly one week ago. A shudder ran through the president's form and he collapsed. Mrs.—Harding and the two nurses in sick room knew the end had come, and Mrs. Harding rushed out of the room and asked for Dr. Boone, and the others to "come quick."

Dr. Boone and Brig. Gen. Sawyer reached the president before he passed away, but were not able to avert the inevitable. The following formal announcement of the president's death was made: "The president died at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Harding and the two nurses, Miss Ruth Powderly and Miss M. Drusser, were in the room at the time. Mrs. Harding was reading to the president when utterly without warning a slight shudder passed through his frame, he collapsed, and all recognized that the end had come. A stroke of apoplexy was the cause of his death. "Within a few moments all of the president's official party had been summoned." Nothing could have been a more shocking surprise. Shortly before the president's sudden collapse, Gen. Sawyer, the chief physician of the president, had been telling newspaper men that Mr. Harding had had the best day since he became seriously ill Sunday night. He said that the president had definitely entered upon the stage of convalescence. Everything went to show that Mr. Harding was on the road to ultimate recovery. The members of the official party—those who had accompanied the president and Mrs. Harding on their trip across the continent and to Alaska, and back to continental United States, had no warning that the president was in danger. They, like the newspaper men, had been assured that a fatal termination of the president's illness was a thing not likely and with good care he would be able to recover health and strength.

John Winter Sole Owner of Grocery

The store will be removed to the new building just south of the Union Hotel as soon as it is completed.

City Library Will Close Next Week

The city library will be closed the entire week commencing Monday, August 13, while the interior of the building is being repaired and redecorated. This was chosen by the library board as the most opportune time for the work as the summer session of the Wayne Normal is over, and there is not such a great demand for books at the library. Mrs. E. S. Blair, desires all books and magazines to be returned not later than August 11. During the month of July, 755 adult books and 508 juvenile books were loaned from the library. Magazines loaned totaled 130. There were thirty-five new readers.

Wind, Hail and Rain—Storm Does Damage

A rain, wind, hail and electrical storm, which broke out at midnight Friday night and extended into the early morning hours, was at first thought to be a repetition of the damaging storm of a year ago, but early morning reports from the vicinity and outlying points, proved that comparatively little loss was occasioned. The hail which fell for a few minutes spread over a narrow strip of territory, and touched only a few farms to the near south and east. The strong, cyclonic wind from the north flattened the corn, but opinions differ as to what extent the crop is damaged. It is thought that favorable weather with a gentle breeze from the south will enable the corn to rise, so that maturing will not be injured much. A fall of 2.2 inches of rain was recorded during the storm.

The only material losses in the city were a weakening of the front basement wall of the Hecker-Blair business hotel and under construction, and the destruction of only from sixty to seventy-five window panes in the greenhouse of D. Hall. The main part of the corner of Main and Third streets became clogged with rubbish, carried off by the rain. Thus the water flooded the walk and swept down under the foundation of the new building. The force of the water washed away the dirt under the sidewalks and washing against the front foundation wall, moved it several feet, filling the unfinished excavation with water to a depth of several feet. Most of the water seeped into the ground, and the remainder was pumped out Saturday morning. The damage was easily repaired by rebuilding a part of the wall. The hall green house was filled with plants for fall and winter trade, but the hail did not succeed in damaging these. The outdoor plants and flowers were beaten to the ground. The financial loss from the broken windows is covered by insurance. One yard was twisted off of the self feeder at Jack Dunbeck's slaughter yard. Vegetable gardens, plants and shrubs on private lawns were slightly demolished by the wind, heavy rain and hail. A few trees and many limbs were blown down. Logan creek was higher than it had been for several months, but it did not overflow its banks. Augmented by heavy rain from upper parts of the stream, the creek rose gradually during Saturday. The stretch of newly laid pavement south of the bridge withstood the wet condition of the low lands. Toll lines to the east were out of order Saturday due to the storm.

Near East Director Thanks Wayne People

J. H. Kemp, Wayne County Chairman of the Near East Relief, has received a letter from the state director, D. Burr Jones, in which appreciation is shown for the work done by Wayne in the recent drive for clothing. The letter also contains a few facts in regard to the use to which old clothing is put.

Mr. Jones stated that his special thanks were tendered to the Boy Scouts who attended to the collection of the clothing donated by the people of the community.

The letter contained the statement that it was a bale of clothing approximating 500 pounds that paid the rent bill for the largest orphanage in the world for the past six months. This orphanage is located within the boundaries of the stricken near east. The purchasing agent in this particular district of Armenia is stated that ninety per cent of the local purchases made for the twenty thousand children in the past six months were paid for with old clothing. Corn grits were used for half the remaining ten per cent and the other purchases were made with cash. Fuel for the orphanages and equipment for the industrial training shops were the chief purchases made by Mr. Ambrose.

In explanation of the letter says: "The native textile industry has been almost entirely destroyed during the past seven years and the depreciation of native currency has made the importation of cloth practically impossible. As a result garments of all sorts are in high demand and American relief workers have been able to draw on clothing contributions from the United States, thereby effecting a tremendous saving in relief funds and at the same time preventing widespread distress among the people of all classes who otherwise would have been unable to clothe themselves against the bitter trans-Caucasian winter."

After Coue. Richard Bennett, who became a disciple of Coue has improved upon his every day in every way. When Bennett arises in the morning he says, "Hell, I'm well."

Saves Corn in Dry Places.

In some places the rain of last night was a relief for the corn, especially north of Craigton into South Dakota. Corn had begun to suffer from lack of moisture in that area, especially around Craigton, which territory had been missed by other rains that have visited North Nebraska recently.

Storm Damage in Omaha.

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 4.—A considerable, though unestimated amount of property damage resulted in Omaha today from 2.2 inches of rain between 7 and 9 a. m., which the weather bureau said was a new record fall for so short a period in any August in the city's history. Several places were struck by lightning and cellars were flooded.

In Council Bluffs, Ia., opposite Omaha, the design of the Indian creek which runs through part of the business section to overflow its banks, causing heavy damage, which could not be definitely estimated early today. Business houses were flooded and traffic was delayed. Heavy rains in Lincoln and other Nebraska cities were also reported.

Teachers Are Hired For Rural Districts

Most of the rural schools of the county have received the selection of teachers to the county superintendent's office. Salaries are on the same scale as last year and there is an abundance of teachers to fill the few vacancies existing. Rural teachers are to meet August 30 at the court house to receive salaries and directions for the year's work. This meeting was instituted last year as an annual event, as prior to that time the county institute was held before the opening of schools. This year the institute will be held September 27 and 28. Wausa Getzter: The "Buy more flour" campaign might work out to the good in some places, but as far as Wausa is concerned we do not believe anyone has been slumping on the use of it. A campaign on higher prices for hogs and cattle might be of benefit to more folks in this immediate community.

Wahoo Democrat: This thing of guaranteeing a chautauque is passing out. For years Wahoo was obliged to or thought it was, to give the chautauque a guarantee. This year we quit. The result is that we get the Homer-Redpath people five days and they take the risk. Allright, did the same thing and behold they have two chautauques on their hands, competing with each other. We judge that any town that is known as a great chautauque field will have no difficulty in securing a chautauque without the necessity of a guaranty.

Albion News: When Samuel R. McKelvie, as Nebraska's governor, summoned the legislature in special session for the purpose of accomplishing a reduction in taxes, he suggested the adoption in this state of a tax on gasoline. Instantly there went up such a storm of protest from the Democratic partisans and the anti-McKelvie folks, that the legislature suffered a severe attack of "cold feet" and the proposed measure fell by the wayside. It is interesting to note that the same thing has happened more than two years from the holding of that special session, three-fourths of the states have adopted some form of gasoline tax, and the same old-fashioned tax is being administered so recently that eventually Nebraska must fall in line.

From Ponca Journal July 14, 1881:

All recollect, especially all in Ponca, will recollect, the big storm and tornado which passed along on Wednesday of last week. From the west came up rain, wind, thunder and lightning, and each separately gave evidence that the storm had unlimbered his heaviest batteries. At about three o'clock there was a lull in the rain, then the lightning commenced to streak down in a very reckless manner. One bolt hit Mr. Hobbs' house, doing considerable damage.

About five minutes after that demonstration, the storm presented an interesting and fearful appearance. Directly above this town, two immense clouds, impelled by separate and opposing currents of wind, swiftly approached each other.

The deep toned thunder and the vivid flashes of lightning darting from one cloud to the other was like the cannonading between two hostile ships. As the two antagonistic clouds together, they pressed downward an immense billow, black and lowering from which descended towards the earth a terrible arm which threatened devastation to those below it. Fortunately for Ponca, the clouds, though rapidly sinking, were still too high to destroy.

Then the great mass, balloon shaped, revolved slowly at first, but soon with great rapidity, and then revolved, drifted eastward about a mile below Ponca. The long arm which had hitherto reached for the earth unavailing, now touched the ground and swept everything before it. By great good fortune, no dwelling houses were in its path, but trees, sheds and farm machinery were lifted and scattered fragments. The path of the storm to the river was about eight rods wide, and in that space everything movable was swept away.

Large trees were torn up by the roots and hurled a thousand feet up into the clouds above. Logs, in some instances partially bedded in the ground, were dragged from their resting places and forced to mingle in the revolving and aerial dance. Four miles east, the tornado dogged the river, and in the distance one saw a great column of water rise into the clouds.

Ponca and devastating as the tornado was between Ponca and the river, it became many times more destructive after it passed over into Dakota territory.

Between the Missouri and the Big Sioux, the land is flat and marshy, and the tornado had a path unbroken and undisturbed by hills or timber. It therefore swept over like a destroying angel, and with a width here increased to twenty-five or thirty rods, devastated everything before it. Its course continued nearly east, passing over the open country south of Jefferson.

and struck the Big Sioux about twenty miles from where it left the Missouri.

In its journey through Dakota the tornado found few dwellings to wreck, and the damage was compared with what it would have been in a densely settled country.

Suit in Boyd County. Advances New Idea

Butte, Neb., Aug. 6.—An action has been filed in the district court of Boyd county for Erwin Schalte by his father as his next friend against the Standard Oil company of Nebraska and William Heathwith of Spencer for $50,000 damages sustained by the little boy, Erwin, who is now 7 years of age. It is alleged that as the result of an explosion of gasoline on Aug. 29, 1922, he was fearfully burned. At the time the agent of the company, Heathwith, was pouring gasoline from the can into an intake pipe of an underground tank. The attorneys for the plaintiff are J. R. Cosh of Bonanza, S. D., and M. F. Harrington of O'Neill, Neb.

Suit Unusual. The suit is an unusual one, at least in Nebraska. The claim is made that there should have been a chain attached to the tank wagon and dragging on the ground so as to prevent the accumulation of static electricity in the wagon tank. It is further claimed that the bucket with which the gasoline was being taken from the tank was poured into the tank of a customer had been used all day, gas had been poured into it and out of it and that the static electricity generated by the pouring of the gasoline from the bucket into the funnel and pipe which took it to the underground tank caused the friction and, as a result, generated static electricity. It is claimed that a spark of the static electricity ignited the gas and vapor rising in the gasoline and that this caused the explosion and the burning of the gasoline and injury to this little boy.

It is further claimed that the Standard Oil company should have had a hose with a metallic lining and connected with the tank by a metallic connection by which a complete metallic connection could be established by the intake pipe to the underground tank and that if this had been used it would have been impossible to have had any explosion and the burning of the gasoline.

Condition of Elements Factor. No such case as this has ever been brought in this state before and involves a new principle. The attorneys for the child say that heretofore the lawyers of the state have known little about static electricity but they are coming to know more about it, particularly since the radio has come into general use in the use of which static electricity is a disturbing element. It is alleged that on the day of the accident the air was charged with static electricity. It was a hot, sultry day and extremely calm. It was the same kind of day that produces static electricity to such an extent that it interferes seriously with the operation of the radio. The case will call for a large amount of testimony to show what the custom is and the methods taken to guard against explosions from static electricity. In addition to evidence showing the general use of appliances to guard against this danger, high class expert evidence, it is claimed, will be introduced in behalf of this little boy to prove that static electricity did cause the explosion burning and that it could easily have been prevented by simple means.

River Victim May Be Ex-Student of Wayne

The man referred to in the following is thought to be the George Larson, who was a member of the S. A. T. C. corps of the Wayne State Normal in the fall of 1918: Fremont, Neb., Aug. 3.—The long-expected body of a man recently found by fishermen searching for bait on a sandbar near Nickerson has been definitely identified as George Larson, 27, Oakland, who disappeared on June 15 after starting in a ditch that flows into Logan creek and thence into the Elkhorn. It was doubtless on June 15, after starting in a ditch that flows into Logan creek and thence into the Elkhorn. It was doubtless on June 15, after starting in a ditch that flows into Logan creek and thence into the Elkhorn.

The body was viewed by the mother, Mrs. Eliza Larson, Sioux City, and a brother, Carl O. Larson, Oakland. The body had been in the water for such a long period, however, it was impossible positively to identify it without investigation. A missing tooth led to the identification when a chart of the dentist's teeth in possession of Sioux City dentists, proved beyond a doubt that he was George Larson.

in this country when anything happens to turn farm prices up and down—and many things have happened that did just that—the majority of the people are affected. It is not the sum-total of loss that is brought about by the low price of wheat, or corn, or hogs, or cattle or any other farm product, but it is the present condition, so far as quantity of wheat grown is concerned, is to remain substantially constant, and they must act accordingly. That means they must find ways to make the crop in an orderly manner and control its price. The wheat growers have not been receiving an undue amount of attention, in the opinion of The Journal. To the farmers of South Dakota or North Dakota, which states cannot raise much except wheat, the problem is one they have with them night and day. Like the mortgage, it is in their pillow at night. It must be remembered that, regardless of sparse population and small investments as compared to other regions, the sectional interest is found in the local situation. The people of North Dakota would worry as much over their small per capita deficits as would the capitalists of New York if the market were against them and they lost as many millions as the farmers lost thousands. There is no question about it—the farmers are not going to quit kicking about prices until those prices are better. It may be that they can work out their own salvation better than anyone else can do it for them, but it is salvation that they want and they are not going to be happy until they get it. And in some states of the middle west, many of which have a majority of rural population, the most important subject of conversation is the salvation of the farmer. That is why out-in this section there has been so much discussion of the farming situation, and the why there is going to be more of it until it is more thoroughly understood.

Avoid Fuel Shortage

People should heed the warning to buy their coal now and avoid possible shortage next winter. F. W.
Wadleigh, federal fuel distributor of Washington, D. C., issued the following "Buy-your-winter-coal-now" plea:

"Mines in Colorado and New Mexico are operating only one or two days a week, and those who are in position to foresee the demand that will be made later on are certain that a serious shortage of coal will exist this fall and winter.

"In a great many instances, dealers have co-operated in the purchase of coal as far as their limit of capital and small storage space will permit, but this tonnage is in no case sufficient to protect against the first storm.

"Our supply and transportation conditions are now ideal. In another thirty days, however, it is expected the situation will greatly change, due to increased movement of fruit, grain livestock and numerous commodities, so that when the public actually awakens to the necessity of getting fall and winter supply of coal everyone will be demanding their requirements at once.
Neither the coal operators nor the railroads will be able to cope with the situation."

We have plenty of coal to supply your needs now, and would advise placing orders without delay.

Remember our Durham Feed Molasses which is an extraordinary stock food.
