When Deliah bobbed Samson's hair, likely she did not do it with expectations the hair-dobbing business would spread.

If there is any hour of the day when the streets are dead, it is between 6 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon, and we have never been able to figure what is the matter.

We judge by a cursory review of the mile and a half of reports of Christmas dinners if today's Herald of all heretobars were either enterprising or were entertained on Christmas day.

Congressman Edgar Howard has heard reports that he would be a candidate for United States senator, and he devotes space in his Columbus Telegram to explain that he has no such ambition, and that he wants to stick to his present post.

Governor Bryan is found willing to acknowledge credit for any tax reduction in connection with operation of the state university, but he also is found powerfully alert and nimble in discriminating responsibility for any increased cost to students attending the institution.

War between the fundamentalists and modernists in the Protestant Episcopal church in New York has been suspended for the Christmas holidays. They want to make an important show of peace while the nativity of the Prince of Peace is being commemorated. Just as soon as the Christmas procession passes they will go to their tomahawks and resume hostilities.

Some contributors to the Lincoln Journal had been trying to substantiate the story about the whale sailing Jonah. He suggests that the whale that performed the swallow-the-storm may have been a different one with sufficiently capacious throat to take Jonah aboard. According to reports, some prehistoric animals may have had such compartments—big enough to set up home-keeping, including a shower bath and a porch—but we judge that the whale of Jonah was by at least 100,000 years.

The north Pacific coast was swept by a wind and storm which did some this week. A short time ago southern California and other parts of the southwest suffered severe, and sometimes fatal, storms of bad weather along the full length of the Pacific coast cause disturbing reflections on the boasted serenity and normalcy of the climate. Seasonal settlers of the coast will do a lot of explaining and dragging out the hackneyed defense of an unusual and unprecedented season. They also will do a lot of referring to the memorable mid-western blizzard of Jan. 12, 1888.

This is the last week of 1923. The expiring year has brought the usual vicissitudes, ups and downs, bright and dark spots, successes and failures, and the end of the year has given aftermath of the war has grown materially less and the task of reconstruction has made encouraging headway. Much readjusting is still necessary, and it promises to be done without great delay. The new year appears reassuring. Forces for spiritual and material development have reason for encouragement. Each may have an active and essential part in building stronger character and a larger business and industrial success. It should be the new year with a determination to effort and fix a record of accomplishment.

While there is a good deal of reprehensible selfishness, there are many who are making a virtue of it that imparts a meanly selfish note to every public service. If it is selfish to do right in order to get a good name for oneself, it is selfish to avoid glutiny in order to escape the stomachache, if it is selfish to render public service in order to be a better and more prosperous and more attractive town, and thus contribute to content and satisfaction—if these contents are not for the benefit of the neighbor and always expect to get much, but yielding nothing in return. It does not require the wisdom of Solomon to appreciate the difference.

It would be impossible to get the names of all who took part in the parade Saturday and the subsequent distribution of goods even if the list were not too long to publish. We were hugely gratified by the spontaneity of the response. People left pressing orders and clerks were released from multiplicity of duties to assist. Members of the drum corps turned out for business in order to provide the essential lead for the procession. Mrs. S. A. Lutgen put final rush of Christmas sewing in the humdrum while she came down in answer to a call for ideas and suggestions. Walter Savidge was pressed into all sorts of places and the women like Dorothy J. Kemp was a source of infinite aid and comfort in triumphing over difficulties. Marshall W. A. Stewart and Fred Benhoof were prompt and efficient in arranging the street for the show. W. R. Ellis made a wonderful Santa Claus and C. E. Sprague made an equally wonderful New Year. Many others responded gladly and heartily and all were prompted by the single thought to give public service and insure a Christmas good cheer in Wayne. And before, during and after the parade we have never seen so large a group of boys and girls who were so unitedly well. To the men and women, boys and girls who responded so willingly, we wish to express profound appreciation in behalf of the town whose interests they served.

From Ponca Journal, Dec. 25, 1879:
A splendid new engine of eight-horse power has been purchased by Mr. Slough, for the use of the coal company.
The residence of J. Wilbur came under the hammer at the public auction being sold on Monday last week. The crop on an upper floor caught fire from the stove-pipe, and when discovered it had burned a place six or eight feet across. A few pails of water sufficed to quench the flames, but had the fire been left to itself a little longer, Mr. Wilbur would have been less wealthy by just the value of a dwelling house.

Judge Barnes, coroner and Reporter Moore, arrived Sunday from St. Helena, where they had been last week attending the court. Judge Barnes, counsellor Gantt, and the others who came down from St. Helena last Sunday, had a cool run, the weather being 20 below zero.

The Dakota City Eagle relates the following incident concerning a Ponca business man:
"A Ponca merchant was most beautifully 'taken in' by a Dakota county farmer one day last week, and as the story is too good to lose we give it. An honest tiller of the soil who lives in Homer, on the day mentioned loaded two wagons with fat hogs and the rest of the purchased. When he arrived at Covington he met the Ponca man, who had just come down from the west with two carloads of porkers. The merchant 'thove to' and desired to strike a trade with our hanger friend; offering him $60 for his two loads of hogs, just as they stood. The farmer declined this offer, but finally, after considerable parleying, he told the Ponca man to give him $82.50, pay his ferrage both ways and take the hogs. The transaction sort of stumped the merchant, but after scratching his head for a moment he accepted, remarking at once, 'I would not have given you such make day's wages off a Dakota county man as not.' The farmer drove to the pork house, unloaded his pigs, and called on the tiller. Finally the Ponca man came in with a grin on his face that reached clear to the back of his neck. He asked for the weights of the hogs, and the farmer handed him the scales. They were given him. He studied the figures for a brief moment and then proceeded to kick himself so rapidly before he could be detected, that he had made the circuit of the office room six times and was well started on the seventh round. He had lost $20.00, and was on his trade with the Dakota county man, home in town.

Business.
Sioux City Journal: With the rush of holiday buying over, and New Year's just around the corner, the railroad men are looking for what will be what it always has been at this time of the year—the extent of the midwinter slump in activity. Usually there is a slowing up immediately after the holidays, which lasts until the first signs of spring make their appearance. It has been a habit of long standing for business to hibernate somewhat through January and February. There was little of this hibernation last winter, if it could be called hibernation, inasmuch as in the fall having been so strong that business was carried forward briskly through what ordinarily is a dull season.

Winter activity last year followed an extraordinarily busy autumn. The railroads were extended to the limit of their carrying capacity in meeting the demands of the shippers. Car loadings in the winter months made records. There was little rest motion in business activity. This year is going to be a slow one, as expected. Indicating what industry expects on the part of the buying public, various manufacturers are ready to plant plans of expanded production. Announcements that come from various lines show a greater expectancy as to turnover. Motor car manufacturers especially are optimistic. Many of them having decided to surpass the output of their plants for this year. They must have good reason for expanding production in 1924. The market must exist. They have been too long in the business to be without the ability to forecast sales possibilities.
Steel orders have not been quite up to the market, but that is only a temporary condition. When the railroads continue adding to their equipment and motor car manufacturers plan expansion, steel production is bound to react favorably.

There will be a good demand for steel and iron. Another thing that will make its demand for steel is the building program. The country is not yet through with construction. The mild weather this fall and winter has made it possible to build everywhere in the country, and while it is expected that activity in construction will fall off somewhat in the next two months, the spring and summer will be active.
When congress reconvenes early in January and gets to work on tax revision, business will be able to look ahead and see what it may, or may not, be able to do. The tax reduction issue is foremost both as to interest and attention. If taxes are reduced in a way that will give business an appreciable relief from heavy levies, industry is going to pick up rapidly. Then there is the question of railroad legislation to be considered in its effect on business. What happens to the railroads is sure to affect the money market. The ownership of the railroads is vested in hundreds of thousands of stockholders, but vast quantities are owned in Wall Street. If values of railroad property are weakened through legislation, money for improvements is going to be hard to get and expensive as well. The danger of radical railroad legislation lies in crippling the lines so badly that they would be unable to meet transportation requirements. Big business simply cannot go on unless the railroads are given an opportunity to function properly.

A Remote Possibility.
Fairbury News: The State Journal gives out the information that Governor Bryan will be a candidate next year for Senator and also for vice-president, with the idea that he could resign the former if he is elected to the latter. If he should be nominated and elected vice-president the people of this great nation would be more concerned about the health of the president than they have ever been before.

With Grateful Appreciation of your Friendship the Past Year We wish to extend the Season's Greetings and wish you abundant Prosperity and Happiness for 1924.

We Wish You a Happy New Year

Another Day! Another Year!
A laugh—a sigh—a joy—a tear.
The older we grow, the faster they flee,
Nor can we halt them—your or me.

As we waited for Santa when we were small,
We thought they'd never pass at all.
But now, by George! They're running away,
And a year seems less than a child's one day.

We dreamingly wanted (you know how it is)
To make big money—get into Biz.
Now we've been in "Biz" for thirty years,
And the big money made is in arrears.

But the most satisfaction to any man,
Is serving the Community as best he can.
So, with your Good Will and half a show,
It's still our hope to grow and grow.

The Theodore Carlson Company
