Lawyers of District Honor Late Judge

At Norfolk last Thursday lawyers of this judicial district gathered to hold memorial services in honor of the memory of the late Judge A. A. Welch, Fred S. Berry and A. R. Davis of Wayne took part.

The Norfolk Daily News reports the services as follows: The services were held in the court room of the federal building and had a hundred members of the bar gathered there to pay tribute to the memory of Madison county's distinguished statesman and lawyer.

Services are being held by Judge Anson A. Welch, judge in the Ninth district, presided at the ceremonies which were carried out in a very impressive manner. On the left of Judge Welch sat Judge D. C. Chase of Stanton and on his right sat Judge Andrew Morrissey of the supreme court of Nebraska. In the audience were Attorney General O. S. Spillman; William L. Duxbury, son-in-law of the late Judge Allen, and many prominent members of the bar.

The resolutions eulogizing the late United States senator and district judge and expressing the sympathy of the court and the bar to the family, were drawn up by Judge John Eberhardt of Stanton who is sick in Omaha and who was unable to be present. These resolutions were read by Judge M. B. Foster of Madison. The memorial address written by E. C. Hastings of West Point who was also unable to be present because of illness, was read by A. R. Davis of Wayne. Fred S. Berry, president of the District Bar association delivered the address for members of the bar of the district and addresses in which the life of the late judge was eulogized, were given by representative attorneys from every county in the district. These addresses emphasized the activity of the late Judge Allen in the first half century of work as a public figure.

Point to His Great Heart. It was brought out that the greatest trait of the late judge was his great heart and the simplicity of his wonderful life. Lawyers told of the assistance of Judge Allen; of his helpful assistance to the younger generation of the profession and his ever willingness to aid those in distress. The popularity of the late judge among members of the profession was revealed in many experiences lawyers had during their acquaintance with him while he was on the bench in the Ninth district.

Judge Was a Friend To All in His Court

When thinking of the tragic death of Judge William M. Morning of Lincoln last week, visits to the court room in which he presided are recalled and the way in which this kindly gentleman treated those brought before him for hearing, is especially impressive. Children and grown folks as well as afraid of courts and are backward about telling circumstances of their troubles to a judge who sits at an elevated desk in the front of the room, the late Judge Morning treated those who went from the university to listen to his juvenile and domestic court trials. To get at the truth better and to remove any fear on the part of those appearing in court Judge Morning often sat at a table with a small group and conversation was so low that much of what he said to those by him could not be heard even in the court room.

In one case it is recalled that a beautiful girl of about 15 years of age was to be heard. The small group interested in her case, matrons of the court and Judge Morning took the girl into a private room adjoining the court room. The judge explained later that the girl was nervous and bashful and this method of adjusting her case was to make her feel that this was not a court trial. Judge Morning's method always was to make everyone feel that he was a helpful friend and this he surely was.

Delinquent children and members of families in which there were misunderstandings were often turned to the right by his careful advice. We heard a man and his wife, who were caring for a brother's child come into court and argued to a considerable degree because the father of the child had not paid a sum of about $15 which the child's mother was caring for him. The wife was dead and his father was doing all possible to earn a living. All interested parties, excepting the boy, were considerably aroused and even threatened to turn the boy out of his home if the bill were not paid. In a few minutes of advice Judge Morning made each feel friendly and the woman who said she had to have the money stated that she could get along without it and the man who was to pay the sum figured out that he could pay $5 about once a week. All left the court happy and the boy whose face bore a worried look for fear that he might lose his home, was happy and he and his cousin with whom he had been living ran out of the court room happy that they could be together. This was one of the cases in which Judge Morning sat with the small group about the table in his court room.

These are just two examples of the kinds of cases brought before Judge Morning constantly. What a great work this man was doing! One who visited his trials could not help but be impressed with the stern adherence to justice and the kindness of this man's procedure. Rather small of stature, with sparkling eyes and fluffy, snowy white hair, his personality was magnetic. He devoted the same careful attention to school boys' troubles as he did to a divorce proceeding. He was always glad if he could settle a disagreement before court proceedings were started. Judge Morning was a character whose influence is bound to endure. The way in which he was esteemed testifies to his statement that he wished everyone to feel that the court in which he presided was a true friend and that every decision made be deemed advisable for the best interests of all concerned.
