Lincoln, Neb., May 19.—Fruit and potatoe withers might be retarded by frosts while other crops were retarded by lack of general rain and higher temperatures.

About one-half the corn is now planted, winter wheat condition was slightly lower and oats somewhat unsteady due to weather that was too dry and cold, the report said.

"The preparation of ground for corn is well advanced but slightly less than 50 per cent of the planting has been completed at this time and is in good till but it is too cold.

"Winter wheat has deteriorated slightly. Some of the wheat is in poor condition and is not doing well. In general the surface soil is too dry, which is quite unfavorable during this stage of growth."

"Oats are somewhat uneven. In general the weather has been too dry and cold. Some weather stations report insufficient moisture to sprout the grain. The acreage is slightly below that intended, due to the late season, but still larger than usual."

"Barley and rye are reported to be in favorable condition except for deficient moisture. The quantity of rye is small while the barley acreage is large."

"There was some injury to fruit from frosts, particularly to plums and to some cherries. In general the fruit prospects are good for all kinds except peaches. Leading fruit counties received the least injury from frost."

"A few of the early potatoes were slightly injured by frost. Most of them were planted so late that only a small crop went were up."

"In general livestock is in good condition. However, the losses of pigs have been quite heavy and in many cases the cause is pneumonia. A number report the loss of broods also."

Business

Sioux City Journal: The unmistakable decline in business generally has begun to exert a powerful wage schedules. This is particularly true in New England, one of the biggest manufacturing centers in the country.

The textile industry in New England has not gone so far as have the shoe manufacturers. Rumors of contemplated cuts in wages are not so numerous. In some instances, actual reductions continue to attract interest. Worcester carpet mill cut wages 10 per cent recently and this is expected to initiate a movement in that direction in many, or all, textile plants.

Business.
The unmistakable decline in business generally has begun to exert a powerful wage schedules. This is particularly true in New England, one of the biggest manufacturing centers in the country. The most conspicuous wage cuts have been in the shoe industry. A union organization in one instance voted two to one to accept a wage reduction of 20 per cent immediately following this action, 39 factories in Lynn, Mass., reduced wages about the same amount.

Here's hoping we see you Friday or Saturday, and that you will come early and make your selection while we still have a good variety to select from.

To the Public

Every home in this part of Nebraska knows that Jones stands for a fair and square deal every day in the year. Every piano offered during this sale carries an unquestioned guarantee. In doing business with an old established house, that is united by the ties of years to a community, the individual purchaser is assured of fair and square treatment—the fact that we are here and have been for years is your best guarantee.

This is a Fine Bargain.
A model of beauty in both tone and case.

Don't Wait! Come Tomorrow!

You will say yourself you've never seen such piano values—and we'll say, we've never offered such values before.

We can't urge you too strongly. Have music fill your home with happiness and enjoyable times. Don't drive your children away from home to get amusement. Put music in your home RIGHT NOW during this sale. You don't need much cash to get your piano if you get it NOW.

You may live as long without it, but you can't live half as well.

You Can Afford a Piano

Don't say you can't afford a piano now. You CAN afford one. ANY home can afford one now. This great sales opens the way. First—it enables you to choose from the BEST makes. Second—it enables you to save one-third to one-half in your purchase, a matter of $125, $165 to $235. Third—it enables you to pay on terms that YOU want that suits YOUR convenience; that fits YOUR pocketbook.

You CAN afford a piano now. You CAN'T afford to miss this opportunity.

They Are Going Fast

Many people have bought pianos at this sale. Many of them thought they could not afford a piano at this time, but they were wise enough to come and investigate. When they saw the pianos—the fine makes, the extremely low prices—and learned they could really buy on terms of payment they never dreamed of securing, 9 out of 10 of them bought pianos.

Senator Norris would suit us better if he would devote more energy to constructive effort and less to finding fault and hanging wrecks. We wish he felt like expressing un-encouraged optimism occasionally and did not allow himself to be monopolized by a few big blunders. He should offer a solution for problems instead of specializing in wails of discontent and despair.

The mayor's appeal, published in today's Herald, strongly supports the club in their campaign for a cleaner and more beautiful town. People are to be encouraged to get rid of unsightly rubbish, keep streets and yards clean and make their alleys and yards look neat and attractive. The movement is a most worthy one and merits the earnest cooperation of all.

When one gets out to the family tree and dusts it off and puts it to wire, wonder how long it can be preserved without being defaced. When we see a phenomenally bright and useful citizen who has been discredited by illiterate and shiftless accidents, whose family tree looks as though it had gone through a store of shrapnel, we are inclined to regard emphasis of distinguished ancestry as a good deal of wasted time and energy.

J. S. Jackson, editor and postmaster at Inman, Neb., is a good deal pleased by a published report that he had been killed. He is not dead, and offers as additional proof the fact that robbery was the apparent motive of the murder of which he was the alleged victim. He would have been a great deal easier and more interesting just to have admitted the truth, had there been a scrap book for the inscription and preservation of all the postmortem things said about him.

The democrats of the south want a high tariff on cotton and the republicans of the east want a high tariff on manufactured goods, and accordingly the people of the middle states get soaked with high prices for the things they have to buy without corresponding benefit for the things they have to sell. We would suggest that the southerners and easterners shave down their respective tariff walls, in order to make a fair compromise with the producers of the great middle west.

A college town raises intellectual standards for many miles around. It is settled largely by people who favor education. It is convenient for people to send their children here to school, and these children grow into intelligent men and women. Thus the town and surrounding communities imbibe and meet the spirit of mind culture. They have a comparatively high idea of real values, and cannot be persuaded to applaud shallow popular entertainments. They know the difference. Thus, any one who thinks he can palm off very thin mental gruel as a rare delicacy, is likely to meet with a suffer disappointment at the hands of a better discriminating critic.

Congressman—Edgar Howard expresses the belief in his Columbus Telegram that if the democrats do not nominate a so-called progressive free trader, La Follette will be presented as a third party candidate with the result that the election will fall to the house of representatives. Congressman Howard thinks Governor Chas. W. Bryan is a strong possibility for the democratic vice presidential nomination. The congressman makes it likely that he prefers W. J. Bryan for president or that he would be agreeable to nominate Bryan for either president or vice president. Why not nominate W. J. Bryan for president and Governor Bryan for vice president? It would place the White House well within the family circle.

Until recent years, public school teachers were woefully underpaid, and even now wages are not too great considering the time and cost devoted to preparation and considering the expensive social standards fixed by society. But it is evident that men teachers receive higher salaries than lady teachers for the same service rendered. This manifest disparity is attributed to nothing but the fact that men cannot be drawn into teaching for the salaries paid ladies. It is deemed desirable to have a few men teachers, and in order to induce them to take up the work, they must be paid more money than the lady teachers. For ladies, most people believe, a woman who can give service equal to that of a man, should have equal pay, but the does not get it, and probably won't get it unless the command is through organized effort. Either a man is paid too much or a woman is not paid enough, but the fact of attending your discrepancies and regulating compensation to each sex according to merit is too great for any one to undertake voluntarily.

Bixby Answers Letter.

(A. L. Bixby in Lincoln Journal)
 Fairmont, Minn., May 14, 1924—My Dear Old Pal: The feeling is fast taking possession of my soul that your attending your discrepancies and regulating compensation to each sex according to merit is too great for any one to undertake voluntarily.

As I feel today I could vote for Senator Norris on any old ticket. It is incomprehensible to me how a telegram was received at Inman from South Dakota friends who know how he got killed. Other messages continued to pour in from Bonesteel where Mr. Jackson was an editor and a member of the Gregory County Pilot and also the Gregory County city council. Then Mr. Jackson got a copy of the Bonesteel Enterprise and was horrified to read in it that his body had been found in a thicket of trees with the head crushed in and the throat cut. Also that he had received a considerable sum of money on the day of the tragedy and that his empty purse was found a short distance from his body.

The implied motive was robbery convinced Mr. Jackson that he had not been murdered and he immediately notified the Bonesteel editor to that effect. In reply he was informed that a letter reporting that he had been murdered and signed "Mrs. Jackson" had been found for the story. Now Editor Jackson and Mrs. Jackson are hunting for the letter writer.

Editor Says He is Long Ways From Dead

O'Neill, Neb., May 20.—J. S. Jackson, editor and publisher of the Inman Leader and postmaster of Inman, east of O'Neill, is not dead.

To keep from having the Inman postoffice swamped with advertising literature addressed to Mrs. Jackson by ambitious tombstone manufacturers who are desirous of decorating his last resting place, Editor Jackson, in an issue of the Leader, publishes a general denial of his death, an account of which appeared in the Bonesteel, S. D., Enterprise, and particularly denies that he was strangled off in the grewsome manner described.

Mr. Jackson first discovered he was dead about two weeks ago when a telegram was received at Inman from South Dakota friends who know how he got killed. Other messages continued to pour in from Bonesteel where Mr. Jackson was an editor and a member of the Gregory County Pilot and also the Gregory County city council. Then Mr. Jackson got a copy of the Bonesteel Enterprise and was horrified to read in it that his body had been found in a thicket of trees with the head crushed in and the throat cut. Also that he had received a considerable sum of money on the day of the tragedy and that his empty purse was found a short distance from his body.

In reply he was informed that a letter reporting that he had been murdered and signed "Mrs. Jackson" had been found for the story. lated. And now look at them! Some of us have even refused our sympathy to the farmers on the ground that they thuswise brought their misery upon themselves. Now if we ourselves are to exercise the stern sense which we demand of the farmers, there is but one answer to the taxation question. The nation is in debt in the neighborhood of twenty billions. The bonus bill adds to that debt by a disputed amount. Say it is three billions. America as a whole is fairly prosperous. Pay your debts, we must say to ourselves as we said to the farmers. Pay off the debt, even though that tax us to the bone. Then when calamity comes it won't find us unready as the speculating farmer was. This wisdom of ours requires the president should veto the tax reduction bill or at least reducing the national revenues. America is capable without harm to itself of paying off its debt at the rate of a billion dollars a year. Thus far we have approximately done this. Keep this up, and in twenty or thirty years this generation will turn over to its successor an unmortgaged country—just what any healthy minded farmer wants to do for his children with his farm. Such will be our national fiscal policy if we are willing to apply to ourselves the sound advice we have so cheerfully given the farmers.

Red Cross Inspect School Children

More than 2500 school children in 140 public schools in Nebraska were inspected by Red Cross public health nurses last month. Of this number, 1498 were found to have physical defects. Many of these defects were of course minor in nature, including abnormal conditions of the eyes, ears, nose, throat, teeth and heart. Through the intelligent cooperation of teachers, parents, and doctors, all of whom are equally interested in giving the children the best possible chance in life, 611 of these defects were corrected in one month.

According to Walter Davidson, Manager of Central Division of which this state is a part, this is a record of which this organization is justly proud.

Red Cross nurses in this state have placed great emphasis on nutrition. Thirteen nurses in the state found nearly 500 children seven per cent or more below normal weight. Hot lunch projects, health clubs, consultations with parents as to proper diets, fresh air and rest have all yielded splendid results. The children themselves realize the importance of keeping themselves well

Conferences During Two Weeks in June

Baby conferences will be held in each town in Wayne county during the first two weeks in June. The babies will be weighed and measured, and a record—stating normal weight for height and age will be given to each mother. Each child will be examined by a local physician who will advise the mother in the care and feeding of her child. Many children of pre-school age have symptoms of malnutrition, which is a great handicap to a growing child. No medical advice will be given, but where defects are found, the mother will be advised accordingly. Children who are sick or have symptoms of an acute cold must not be brought to the conference, as they would expose the other children to infection. The conference is for children under 7 years of age.—Laurenz Slavkin, County Nurse.

"Helping the Farmer.

Lincoln Journal: The struggle that everywhere in the vicinity of Washington just now concentrated on helping the farmer, no one suggests the simplest of all means of easing his lot. Lower prices to farmers would help no less than higher prices for him. A gradual letting down of an excessively high barrier against imports would gradually restore the local parity.

Morning

Somewhere away off, so we've been told, people rise early and bow low to worship the morning sun. This ceremony, strange as it may seem, is a part of their religion.

But is it so strange? Here in America we are growing a habit, which, though different, is not so different after all. This habit is close to a religion.

Our Americans may rise early or late—perhaps late—and instead of bowing low to the sun, they lift their arms skyward and sense the joy of living in a world of water over their bodies.

This morning bath is a religion. For it is health, cleanliness, and is not cleanliness next to godliness? "Bathe your bodies in running water," commanded a prophet of old.

Well, then, a shower is running water in the home. And to stand under a shower every morning for a minute or two is to start the day about as well as a day can be started.

Let me install a shower bath for you, using the Famous Kohler Ware.

Philosopher's Birth Is Noted in Passing

Immanuel Kant, 1724-1804.

To the Herald.

So far as concerns of external fortune are changed, the life of the greatest philosopher of the eighteenth century is of no interest. Born in humble circumstances, Immanuel Kant, a quiet and almost undisturbed existence without ever having traveled more than 40 miles from his native place. His education was chiefly in the school which was his birthplace, and during a prolonged academic activity in that retired Prussian town, he gave forth the works which have exercised such influence on European thought that, in the estimation of some judges, they may be placed on a level with the French revolution, as the most important factors in determining the characteristic features of the nineteenth century culture.

The fact indeed all too soon became known to him, and he was a synonym for profundity among those who do not know in the least why he was profound.

The English Empiricists who preceded Kant were chiefly concerned with the problems of knowledge. "How can we know anything or how can we know we know anything?" David Hume had started the world by saying in effect that we are not aware that we know anything. His assertion that causality could not be demonstrated shook the foundations of the sciences of that day and made it rest upon mere belief.

It was Hume who Kant said had awakened him from his dogmatic slumbers. Kant continued the investigation of the experience possible. "How can we know anything?" Kant asked. It is not a problem that would bother many, but upon its answer he thought depended the basis of both science and religion. Science had been almost wrecked by the skeptical Hume and religion had been almost wrecked by science.

Kant's chief work was the "Critique of Pure Reason" published in 1781. According to his statements, it was the result of his reflections covering a period of twelve years. It was written professionally for professionals and is a book which he wrote for these two reasons a very difficult book.

Of course it is impossible to give an epitome of Kant's ideas in a few paragraphs. His discovery, however, was that space and time with which the exact natural sciences operate, are not real objects or attributes, but are merely a mode of our perception. He further concluded that our seeing phenomena as cause and effect was but another substitute of our perception, or simply a way of looking at things. He worked out an elaborate set of "categories" twelve in number which he considered the foundation stones of the understanding.

However daring and brilliant Kant was as a scientist and metaphysician, he is probably as well or better known in the field of orthodox and simple morals. Kant declares in another of his works, that Rousseau taught him reverence for mankind, to ascribe a certain dignity to all men which is not merely based on the degree of their intellectual culture. In his "Critique of Practical Reason" he formulates the moral law as follows: "Act according to that maxim that you could at the same time will that it might become universal law." That action alone is good which springs from pure regard for the moral law. Neither authority nor experience can be the source of this sense. Moral principles reveal the inmost responsible nature of our will, and neither psychology or theology can here furnish the basis. The moral law manifests itself in opposition to our egoistic tendencies and desires in the form of duty, an unconditional and categorical imperative.

The "Critique of Practical Reason" is one of the most striking discussions in the whole range of German metaphysical literature. One of its paragraphs has alone sufficed to render it famous. The passage concerning the starry heavens and the moral law as the two transcendently overwhelming phenomena of the universe, is perhaps as frequently quoted as any other written by a German author. This treatise stands midway between the "Critique of Pure Reason" and the "Critique of Judgment." In it Kant takes up the position of a vindicator of the truth of Christianity, approaching the proof of its validity by first establishing positive affirmations of the immortality of the soul and the existence of God. It also includes a discussion of happiness and an argument concerning the summum bonum of life, the special aim being to demonstrate that man should not strive to be happy, but should by absolute obedience to the moral law, seek to become worthy of that happiness which God can bestow.

In general it may be said that in spite of Kant's involved literary technique, his main propositions are not difficult. Although time and space and causality are but modes of our perception, nevertheless we can depend upon scientific knowledge of the world because the reality behind the appearance must conform to these a priori laws through which we see and understand it. To him the world of experience was simply a picture and an appearance of the underlying reality which he called the "thing-in-itself." In this other world were to be found the eternal truths.

He made a clear division between the realm of science and the realm of faith. The material world, the world of phenomena was for science. But above and beyond this world, in a world which could not possibly be known by science, were God and the immaterial world of duty, the categorical imperative.

It is not the purpose to herein estimate the validity of Kant's results or the value of his solution of the problems which he attempted to solve. That is properly left to the professional philosophers. It seems fitting, however, to pause a moment on the two-hundredth anniversary of his birth and take note of a man who during a life of solitude, in a small city, created such huge intellectual monuments as the Three Critiques.
