Norfolk Men is Chairman.
York, Neb., July 1.—At a meeting held here in the interest of freer rate adjustment for interior traffic, the commercial clubs of Superior, Hastings, Norfolk, Grand Island, Lincoln and York were represented. W. H. Blackman of Norfolk, was appointed temporary chairman, and R. A. Freeman of York, temporary secretary. No organization was effected, as the policy has not been decided in obtaining a readjustment of rates and are unwilling to form an organization representing of all ports. The next meeting will be held at Hastings.

Senator Pat's New Pharo.
Kansas City Star: The rival had charged. United States senator with "shirt sleeve diplomacy." Now comes Senator "Pat" Harrison charging the Coolidge administration with "key-hole diplomacy." For unlabeled observers he would substitute representatives with credentials, empowered to act. Of course, our unofficial observers really have not been spies, as the senator charges. Nevertheless he has coined a new term that is likely to stick. If not exactly pat, it is, at least, "Pat."

Writes Observations In New York City

W. O. Jones in Lincoln Journal: New York, June 28.—In all my life I have never seen so much political tension as has been seen and felt in New York in the opening week of the convention. It seems to me that the atmosphere of suspicion that soon developed into hostility and even hatred.

There is no danger that another convention will come here for fame as I remember what was done to them here in 1924.

It is agreed that the convention oratory during the opening days, at least, has been very bad. The length of the nominating speeches was appalling. Give the average man a chance to speak on an important occasion and he straightaway loses all sense of fitness and proportion.

My seat in the reporters' stand has given me a good opportunity to study the New Yorkers, for it is not far from the boxes given to big donors to the convention. They are full of naive curiosity; these women privilege. They are so sure of themselves that they are willing to talk to a stranger man because if they think he can give them some information. Nice, womanly women I found them to be, frightfully ignorant of the politics and so full of wonder over what it was all about.

Foreign Advertising Representatives THE AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION
Sunday is so much a day of diversion for some people that they do vote three days to anticipating and getting ready for it and three days to getting over it, thus occupying most of the time going or coming.

Many delegates to the democratic national convention were yesterday reported to have exhausted their funds and either were leaving for home or were transferring from expensive hotels to cheap restaurants. They had gone to the convention with the idea of flying high for a few days, but they were not equipped to finance a prolonged siege.

While care is being taken to protect child labor in factory and mining districts, too little attention is being given to stimulating all kinds of labor in other districts. Some politicians who forget that they are grown up, seem to think they come within the restrictions of child labor laws. They are so careful not to work too hard that they don't work enough to earn their salt.

A lot of ingenious literary effort is wasted in writing political platforms. The democratic platform is a late example. It is so strong in its assumption of party credit and so violent in its opposition that it is seriously weakened in the minds of people who are not prejudiced partisans. Such a platform really means nothing. It is designed not so much as a basis of party action as a pronouncement to catch votes.

Committees working at the instance of the Woman's club have been inspecting Wayne yards this week to determine their neatness and beauty in the course of a competition to be completed with the awarding of prizes in the fall. Greatest improvement made between inspections will count in the final judgment, as the Herald understands. The yard with a low score now may be the final winner. Anyway, the contest has aroused a good deal of interest and has caused people to stir themselves in the direction of cleaning and beautifying their premises.

There are not very many one hundred per cent gloom dispensers. The one hundred per cent keeper the southern boundary of his face drawn down to his equator, and breathes not one note of hope. It is too wet or too dry, too cold or too hot, and even in the presence of wonderful friction, something terribly lugubrious is lifted to the surface to maintain a uniformly ink assortment of blueveils. The one hundred per cent looks through smoked goggles, wears a shroud and perfumes himself with coffin varnish.

The habit of fleeing from financial obligations, rather than meeting them squarely and, if necessary, arranging for their later satisfaction, destroys confidence and credit. A person to whom payment is due, likes to have a man explain what he can do and what he cannot do, and to see a postponement through cunning avoidance. People cannot always pay as they had planned, but they can have the manly courage to state their positions instead of pretending. Robin Hood's barn to shirk responsibility and seek concealment.

Leading women are seeking full equality with men in all affairs of government and employment, and they will be satisfied with nothing less. While people applaud the sentiment that the greatest women in the world are those who maintain homes of wholesome influence, raising children who are orderly and useful, women are not going to rest contentedly on the beautiful traditions of home building exclusively. They are pushing further and further into politics and business, and their power will be felt more and more as their experience and understanding develop. They are demanding equal hours, equal pay and equal consideration in all respects, and they will eventually get what they want.

Recurrence of the Fourth leads one to contrast the demands of the present with those of the early days. Forty years ago, a few hundred dollars meant a band and covered all the necessary expenses incident to what was considered an adequate celebration. The parade consisted of a hayrack load of girls representing the different states, led by a band and followed by a group of callithumpians. In the grove where a platform and rows of terribly hard seats had been erected, a patriotic speech was given, preceded and followed by patriotic songs. Reading the Declaration of Independence usually was included. During the program the surrounding air was kept filled with the noise and smell of exploding firecrackers. Then came picnic dinners and visiting, then catching a greased pig and running foot races, with a feeble display of fireworks in the evening. People traveled for hours in lumber wagons, under a hot sun, to attend the annual celebration. Now thousands of dollars are devoted to the amusement of people on the Fourth. Elaborate and costly plans are essential. No half way of doing things will satisfy. People travel in automobiles and spend little time on the road. They can go long distances in a short time, and they will go where promise suggests greatness novelty and enjoyment. Demands of people for the Fourth have greatly enlarged, as a review of the past shows.

Woman's Influence in Politics.
Christian Science Monitor: "At no time in the history of the United States, or of the world for that matter, has the influence of women in politics been as great as it is today. Only that person who has been admitted into the inner councils of the two national parties which have recently deliberated platform pledges, and has studied secretly the tactics of the campaign about to be waged for the election of a president and vice president, could disclose the true measure of the influence of the women voters of the United States. It has been an open secret, of course, that both the democrats and the republicans have, at least nominally, accorded to the leading women of their parties a place in their conventions and in their deliberative councils. This fact has been freely advertised as the veteran party managers and dictators intended it should be.

But between nominal and polite recognition and the recognition of actual power and influence in shaping and defining party issues and naming candidates, there is a wide and deep gulf. How powerful and influential have the American women actually been in this respect? The inclination is to believe that they have wielded unassumingly and without show or pretense, a really great influence. They have accomplished this as much, however, by the potential strength which they possess and are ready to exert, as by open participation in the discussion of issues and men. So far as they have agreed among themselves, their demand for the enactment of progressive laws, for needed reforms in the administration and enforcement of existing laws, and for remedial legislation in their own and their children's behalf, has been heeded to and generally heeded.

The woman in politics has advanced beyond the white ribbon and pink tea stage of activity to the sterner and more vital work which she has found to do. She has become convinced that her right to have a part in every state and national movement is recognized. She may have gained the impression also that she is, in a measure, under close observation by those who have long assumed the privilege of making and administering the laws for her. Perhaps those inquisitive gentlemen are endeavoring to discover just how insistent and full she will be in asserting an equal share in her country's rights. It is not too early to dispense the minds of any who have doubted that the extension of the franchise to the women of the United States would simply double the total of the usual party vote. Nothing of the kind has resulted, apparently, and it is likely that the shoe and boys in the direction of absolute political independence on the part of the women.

Now, with the realization impressed that the newly enfranchised voters actually make up a vast floating and unascertained balance of political power, it naturally follows that any reasonable concession or consideration will be extended in an effort to attract and hold that controlling strength.

Both Economists.
Sioux City Journal: The democratic platform, as was expected, assailed the republican party on the score of extravagance, but at this stage of the 1924 campaign the charge falls rather flat as the electorate considers the character of the men chosen for the ticket at Cleveland. Both Mr. Coolidge and Gen. Dawes are already famous as economists. It is well established that neither candidate was in any way responsible for the irregularities of the Harding administration. Only a politician looking for an advantage, and not caring how nor where he found it, would make the attempt to attack Mr. Coolidge and Gen. Dawes because of extravagance.

As the campaign gets warmer between now and November there no doubt will be charges from the democratic camp seeking to indict the republican candidates for waste of public money. That may prove to be a boomerang. The people will know the purpose of the assault, and they also will realize that the charges have no foundation in fact. Calvin Coolidge is more than an economist. He is a thrifty, careful, prudent man. In some respects his habits are even frugal. What marks the individual in his case marks also the executive. His official acts prove the assertion. He wishes to save the public money, to cut down the cost of government.

Less Talking Desirable.

A. L. Bibby in Lincoln Journal-Past: Harrison says America needs Paul Revere, not sphinx, in presidential chair. Pat was excited when he made the statement. More than anything else in high public position, the man is needed who knows enough to think calmly and coherently, and keep his mouth shut. Study history—from Exodus to where we are, and you will discover that the men of power and purpose in leadership have been calm, silent and self-contained. Everywhere since the days of Moses—himself an example of method and modesty—men of matchless strength and high purpose have first learned the lesson of "silence and circumspection." You might almost hear them think, but they have not been of those who open their mouths to insert their feet.

I honor the leader in virtue reposing. Who hasn't the room in his mouth for his feet; Who shuts up the same when the time comes for censing. Nor opens it up till he's ready to eat.

So many aspirers are ready to gobble.

In favor of saving the nation with laws;

Their methods are merely to stir up the rabble

By any fool statement that calls for applause.

Great thinkers are needed in state and in nation

To show us the road and to lead us aright;

Loquacity never will bring us salvation.

Or point out the highway from darkness to light.

Boss La Follette.

William Hard in the Springfield Republican: Mr. LaFollette is the greatest combination ever known in America of professional officeholder and a voice in the wilderness. Most voices in the wilderness, most radical reformers, do not politically know enough to come in out of the rain or even how to raise an umbrella in it. La Follette is boss of his state. He is able to make his law partner republicans national committeemen from his state. He is able to make his son republican state chairman within his state. He is able to do anything that any other state boss can do—and today more. He is today the greatest state boss in America, since the death of Boies Penrose, of Pennsylvania.

COMMISSIONERS' PROCEEDINGS.

Wayne, Nebraska, June 24, 1924.

Board met as per adjournment. All members present. Minutes of meeting held June 16, 1924, read and approved. Bids on steel and concrete bridges for the year 1924, action on which was deferred until this date, were taken up at this time and on motion of Miller, seconded by Bethwich that all be rejected on the grounds of there being no competition. Voted yes: Miller, Bethwich and Dralben. Nays: Not any. Chairman declared motion carried and ordered that certified checks be returned to bidders.
