The device consists of a door opener between two of the accordion folding doors of the garage. The bumper of the car lifts this lever which in turn causes the door to operate by the mechanism of the door and the door, thus releasing, slides open and the driver is allowed to enter the garage with the only effort of releasing the clutch of the car for a moment while the door is in process of opening.

Both were picked up bodily in an auto, followed by several dozen cars, and a trip to Laurel was in order; upon return to Belden, a turnout greeted them, including almost every man, woman, and child in the community. Looking Backward.
Denton, Neb., Oct. 20.—Dear Mr. Dixby: I see by the Journal that forty-six years ago hogs were selling at Columbus for less than $3 a hundred, and the best wheat at 60 cents. The same year I hauled a load of six fine barrows as I ever saw, sixteen miles to Lincoln. Tom Lowry offered me $225 per hundred. I hauled them up town and sold them to Bob Mitchell for $240, delivering them to the slaughter house on the Antelope, near the entrance to the fair grounds. The balance I hauled to Grege and sold to the Fremonts for $240 per hundred. Corn was selling at eight cents and wheat at sixty. I agree with you in the query which it that answers for those years ago.

J. C. MILLER.

I do not think we'd care to bend our steps back there again. Cash was so scarce, my dear old friend, That faith sustained us then.

We gave to wealth but scanty thought,
We talked from six till six.
Our hogs were tacky (were they not?)
But we were happy. BIX.

Foodstuff Advancing

Owing to firm markets and steady advances on 60 per cent. of grocery items the tendency has been to heavy purchases at reduced prices. We have a large stock purchased in anticipation of higher prices and we are in a position to appeal to the economic buyer who would save the difference while there is an opportunity.

Business

Sioux City Journal: The outlook for business is promising. The political situation has assuming a do-die character. The change that has come and is still under way is not due to the hopes and promises of one party or of another. Political parties that have a difficult time getting enough cash to defray their campaign expenses hardly could be suspected of hurling millions into an economic scheme that has as its object the subversion of a political jackpot. It simply isn't done.

As the Journal has insisted all about business is bigger than any political party. It is bigger than all political parties combined. Business does not lend itself to a plan that effecting a change in government as a decoy for votes. Nor yet does Wall street—that area wherein real financiers move—consider it a good investment to retailer to consumer, or campaigns and elections. Wall street always has more important work than that, and besides, it never undertakes what it knows is impossible.

But business is better and is improving right along. And this is a presidential election year, too. The fallacy that presidential election years are notoriously disastrous to business has been proven by recalling campaigns when the economic situation was good. It has been a sort of act that they with some ordinary denial election year is bad for business, yet such persons are sufficiently versatile to explain when business improves during the year that it is all the result of the administration's activity. So there one has it: Business is either bad or good whether it is a presidential year or whichever it may be, the influence is bound to be sinister.

Nothing is farther from the truth. Business was not good in this country for some weeks after the two major party conventions. But when the harvest began and a good yield of money was reported from the middle west with prices shooting upward, business got better. Wall street did not buy millions of bushels of wheat and boost the price. The old reliable law of supply and demand was operating instead. This country had a better wheat yield than had any other in the world. Therefore, the supply was short and American wheat was in demand at once.

The corn crop was short. American raises far more corn than any other country. So, in sympathy with the short wheat crop and greatly on its own account, corn went up. Corn in the crib had elevation may be considered as hogs in a different form. A hog in this country is, economically speaking, so many bushels of corn that he costs and sells about the same going with corn. All this put the farmer in a better position than he had held for some years. His buying power was increased without him, or Wall street, or the politicians having a single thing to do with it. The effect on industry was automatic and immediate. The wheels began to move faster in the factories, and that meant bigger pay rolls. Goods went in greater volume from factory to wholesaler to retailer to consumer. And all this made bank clearances loom larger, absorbed unemployment, and created on the whole a much brighter prospect. Meanwhile the European situation, thanks to the Daves plan, is constantly improving. That will help American business, in fact, helping it now.

Awake to Danger.

York Republican: The attack which Senator La Follette is making on the United States supreme court is arousing good American citizens to the perils of the situation and causing a greater number of those who have looked with some favor on the La Follette candidacy to pause and reflect a little before following that leader to the logical end of his declarations.

There is a socialistic group in this country that has a deep contempt for the courts and would overthrow them by popular will. They think the socialist way of dealing out justice superior to ours. To this group the candidacy of LaFollette appeals with great enthusiasm. But good Americans, who love the traditions of their government and believe its stability is guaranteed by the integrity of the courts, cannot and will not accept the doctrine of a court of appeals against the supreme court of the land established in the congress. The members of the congress are not able or competent to decide court issues and the people know that well enough.

The doctrine is full of peril for sound government. But it cannot be a menace to the peace and existence of this nation if good American citizens, with the fires of true patriotism in their veins, will exert their influence to check this form of socialism before it gets beyond the fire guards.

Big Still Discovered.

Newcomb, Neb., Oct. 27.—Word has reached here that a farmer whose name was not given, living north of Fordyce near the Missouri river, discovered a big still with a complete outfit for making "moonshine" on his farm while going through a back pasture field that is seldom visited. A peculiar-looking arrangement in the side of the hill attracted his attention and after removing some sacks, barrels of mash and a quantity of camouflages which were used as a liquor. It was difficult to determine how long the still had been in operation as the owner did not talk in operation and there were seven barrels of mash and a quantity of liquor.

To the Voters of the Ninth Judicial District

My friends have been making inquiries whether my name is going to appear upon the judicial ballot at this election. Having made no campaign their inquiry is pertinent.

I filed for this office in the fulfillment of a promise made a long time previous to the filings to make it a four candidate election. Eight years ago I was in a three cornered contest, with two to be elected, and know what that means.

During that campaign a prominent attorney in this district said that if I should be elected he would mean that one half of the lawyers in the district would be compelled to go out of business because of my attitude to discourage litigation and the prompt disposition of cases necessarily in court. I was not re-elected so that calamity was averted.

I do not believe in encouraging nor prolonging litigation.

I do not believe there should be one law for the rich and one for the poor.

I do not believe that the influential ones should receive a different law pronouncement from that accorded to the humblest citizen.

I do not believe that a judge should have friends to favor nor enemies to punish in the discharge of his duties.

I do not believe that my views under the present day conditions will meet the approval of those who especially interest themselves in the election of judges.

My own interest prompts me to say that I should not be elected.

That is my personal preference.
