Report is Made For Postoffice

Prof. J. G. W. Lewis Explains Results of Effort in Behalf of Proposed Improvement.

At the meeting of the Greater Wayne club Tuesday evening, Prof. J. G. W. Lewis made his report concerning the possibility of securing a needed government postoffice building in Wayne based on his effort in that behalf while in Washington city recently.

Prof. Lewis had been followed by a group of local citizens to present Wayne's need to Congressman Howard and other members of the United States Congress.

Prof. Lewis found Congressman Howard out of the city, but presented the merits of the proposed improvement to his secretary and also left a communication for consideration of the congressman on his return.

Prof. Lewis also talked with Congressman Robert Simmons of the Sixth district. In view of the administration's policy of economy, Congressman Simmons said he did not look for any appropriations this coming year for federal buildings out in the country.

He said a building plan was contemplated for Washington, D. C., and that in inspecting the city, could not note that it was seriously suffering from lack of improvement.

Prof. Lewis interviewed Senator Howalla and Senator Norris, and secured their promises to cooperate in making provision for a building fund in the postoffice department and explained the needs of Wayne, strengthened by the presence of a growing population.

Prof. Lewis said that he had been formally discussed by members of the local club.

The club then turned to the election of officers for the coming year. Prof. E. J. Huntemer, president for two years, declined a reelection which had been urged.

D. R. Brainard, secretary and J. H. Lewis, treasurer, were elected as follows: E. S. Edholm, president; A. W. Ahern, vice-president; H. W. Wingo, secretary; L. C. Ehlers, treasurer.

A Lincoln meteorologist says the weather has been about the same for two thousand years. Before then, he does not remember.

Some one has suggested that the public library should be kept open after hours, and under supervision, for the accommodation of young people who want to go there to read.

Coating has become a popular outdoor sport for both old and young in Wayne. It provides an equality of riding and walking, and it is believed just as healthful as golf and more healthful and more invigorating than motoring.

Boys and girls who esteem the nature judgment of their fathers and mothers, and who are careful to observe the wishes of their parents, will make the best citizens. Young people who respect the feelings of parents and endeavor not to hurt their feelings by bad conduct, will stand higher in the estimation of the general public.

Prof. J. G. W. Lewis did well in pressing on to official Washington the need of a federal building in Wayne. And if members of congress would play less politics and devote themselves more earnestly and actively to serving the public, simple needs of rural communities like Wayne would be met without any stalling or fooling.

The first woman governor, Mrs. Nellie Ross, has taken her place as head of the government of Wyoming. She will soon be followed by a second woman governor in the person of Mrs. Ferguson who becomes chief executive of Texas. It will be up to these two women to prove that women are as capable as men to form and present opinions and lead affairs of state judiciously and safely.

Two prohibition enforcement agents and three deputy state sheriffs were arrested in Omaha this week on complaint of the county attorney of Douglas county who charges assault and battery and "oppression under color of office" in connection with raids in search of liquor. By their methods, some of these federal agents, as reported in Omaha and as revealed in Wayne recently, are doing the cause of prohibition less harm than good.

In a speech at Jefferson City, the state school inspector of Missouri, stressing the value of education to rising and succeeding generations, said he did not believe the young people of the country should be compelled to believe in the waste-by-use or of cheapened educational system. He believed the future should be safeguarded by maintaining highest school standards.

The state legislature is getting ready for business, and we hope its members will be guided from first to last by sound judgment, avoiding waste of time on foolish measures and spending up earnest consideration of the state's needs. Often legislators act more like children than statesmen. We hope the present members will show the world that they are capable of wisdom that will win respect and that will stand the test of time.

It is said that over a million people have gone from different parts of the United States to California and Florida to spend the winter and to spend their money, for the latter reason there will be plenty of opportunities. The California tourist crop which was lighter than usual last year, seems to be bringing back to normal this year, and this will be a great help to the state in view of the short crop of the orange crop which, due to frost, has fallen below the average of an auxiliary aid to the principal business of hearing eastern tender-feet.

An authority discusses on common deformities of the feet, due in a measure to faulty nutrition which does not develop ligaments and bones. Some of the deformities are: flat feet, over-exercised feet, bones and ligaments that we need. We wish the authority would prescribe a course of nutrition that would lead of bone development and stimulate adipose tissue. But neither overly fat people nor overly lean people are at ease or satisfied. Some of us looking for an auxiliary aid to the principal business of hearing eastern tender-feet.

ASSAULTS LAND OF NATIVITY.
Writing for "The American-Mercury," Gretchen Lee, native Nebraska, who once taught physical education in the Nebraska university, gives this state most unfair criticism. She conveys the impression that the state is inhabited by unlettered barbarians who are struggling for a mere existence. According to her opinion, incompetency is the rule and every where apparent. She thinks teachers, from those in the grades of rural schools to those at the heads of departments in the university, are incompetent. She deprecates the misfortune of being born here and the still greater misfortune of trying to live and develop here.

It seems Gretchen Lee left Nebraska and located in the east, and we hope she stays there. We can't understand how one who was born and reared in Nebraska can leave the state with such a feeling of hatred and prejudice. What has the state done to make her feel so spiteful and devilish?

Does Gretchen Lee like the east better? Doesn't she find more inspiring polycolloids in the east? Doesn't she find more one-eyed-ism, brains, more physical defects, more narrow selfishness in the east? Or is her sphere of acquaintance so limited that she does not know?

What about Nebraska? It ranks less in illiteracy. Its sons and daughters inherited the iron will and dauntless courage of hardy pioneers. Its people do not know—and do not want to know—either the feeble-brained codfish aristocracy or the struggling human undertow of the east. Nebraska teachers whom Gretchen Lee is pleased to belittle, may go to either the eastern or western coast and command higher salaries than these paid to natives. Often it has been pointed out that the keenest brains, the most courageous spirits, the highest stratum of civilization in the whole world may be found in the middle states including Nebraska. Gretchen Lee to the contrary notwithstanding.

The NERVOUS WRECK

Begin Here Today.

The Nervous Wreck is an exciting young easterner, drives Sally McSwen, daughter of a Montana cowboy, over a rough, mountain trail from the ranch to the railroad station.

They run out of gasoline and the occupants of a passing car refuse to stop for them. The Wreck takes five gallons at the point of a gun and drives on. Next morning they stop at a ranch and meet Charlie McSwen, the foreman, who is in a quandary because he has lost his coat just before the arrival of the owner. Sally cooks a breakfast which she serves to Charlie. He takes a wheel off her car in order to keep them on the ranch. Forced to accept the inevitable, Sally takes a nap.

Now go on With the Story.

"Probably she dreamed. But she was never quite sure of it because it began as a dream it ended as something that really happened. There was a rhythmic throbbing in her ears, and she came slowly and reluctantly to consciousness it grew steadily louder. There was a mechanical regularity about it that reminded her of the handmill at the Bon-M, but she realized an instant later that she was not at her own home. And it wasn't a windmill, either; it was more like an engine. Her eyes were blinking now. Why, it was an automobile!

Sally uncurled herself and straightened up. In her chair, if Henry Williams had resurrected that flyover, if he had found that wheel, if he had been in a fight with Charlie McSwen—well, then, he was going to have some first-class trouble on his hands. Her ears were sharper now; she was completely awake. She listened a second or two longer. No! It was not the flyover. It was a different kind of an engine, more orderly and dignified in weather.

She leaned forward and pushed aside a corner of the curtain, finding that made the noise had just come to a stop outside. Sally stared at it with roared eyes.

"Why, I believe—Oh, it is!"

She flipped out of the chair with the sudden speed of a cat and raced in the direction of the kitchen.

"They've trailed us!" she gasped as she ran.

CHAPTER VIII

Hiding Out

As Sally charged into the kitchen by way of the pantry, the Wreck was coming in through the door that opened on the yard. He stood at her in plain surprise; he did not know she could run so fast.

"What's the hurry?" he asked, mildly.

"We're trailed!"

"Trailed? What do you mean?"

"Have they seen you?" she panted.

"No! Why not? I haven't seen anybody but some horses down in the corral."

"Well, we're trailed all right, Henry Williams. They're out in front now!"

"Who's out in front?"

"The people you stuck up—the big

"You—you stuck up the owner of the place!" she wailed.

"He was a hog," said the Wreck, with little simplicity.

He was not worrying about the plans to revenge himself with the insults of 'Charley McSwen.

"Of all the awful licks!" continued Sally, in an awed whisper. "To think that we walked right into his hands. I know there was something queer about this place the minute I took a look around the house."

"Well, what do we do now? Swipe the horses?"

Sally considered; then shook her head slowly.

"No; I think we'd better wait now. I don't believe it's quite as bad as I thought. You see, they didn't trail us here, after all. They were coming, anyhow. Probably they don't know we're here; if they did, we'd have heard from it before this. We've got to figure this out now—carefully. The main thing is to keep them from seeing you. That's why I wouldn't let you go out to help with the baggage."

It was not a good hand at playing a waiting game, and said so. He was still in favor of going out and taking the big cat, a feat which presented to him no considerations of dismay. But Sally sharply ordered him to put the idea out of his head.

The situation befuddled her, but she did not think it had yet reached a crisis. Nobody in the car had seen her; it was very unlikely that they even knew their hold-up man had a girl with him. So long as she could keep the Wreck out of their sight and as long as the flyover remained locked up in a shed, there was still a chance to figure something out. But how utterly exasperating it was! Just when she was satisfied that they had wandered into a safe hideout, she discovered that they had really walked into the lion's den.

"The thing to do, of course, is to keep them from seeing you," she said. "You'll have to stay in the kitchen all the time, I'm afraid. I don't suppose they'll come in here."

"They're not going to coop me up in a kitchen," he growled. "Besides, it was dark last night anyhow. They didn't get a good look at me. I had my cap pulled down."

Charley came into the kitchen again.

"We got that baggage in, thanks to nobody that washes dishes," he said. "And now ma'am, I have to ask you to hustle dinner. They're real hungry."

"They'll have dinner just as soon as I can get it," said Sally, promptly.

The Wreck regarded her with a look of amazed disappointment. Was she going to turn and cook for said hog? It was enough to be drafted as cook for an unknown, but to do chores for your enemy was humiliating. He was about to speak when she stopped him with a look.

"Seems they didn't get any regular breakfast, except crackers, which they had with 'em," explained Charley. "That leaves 'em kind of hungry. They got hung up on the road. In fact, they got held up."

"You don't know!" exclaimed Sally, who was digging into the flour barrel, as a first step in the direction of making biscuits.

"Oh, it don't seem like it was serious ma'am. That is, there wasn't anybody got shot. Feller just took watches and valuables and let 'em flat without any gas."

Sally ventured a look at the Wreck. He seemed to be curiously elated.

"It's been done before," said Charley, who was about to speak for "I ain't anything to what they used to do. Only the boss is pretty well stirred up, which maybe is natural enough—comes from the fact that where they don't know anything about such things."

The Wreck was standing near a window, polishing his spectacles. It was Sally's first conscious glimpse of him without the horn rims. He gave her a swift impression of being an average person. But she had time to study him; Charley was too interesting.

"Who is the boss?" she asked, trying to be indifferent but failing.

"His name is Underwood," said Charley. "He's from New York. It's funny the way these New Yorkers put themselves places that take such a pile of travelin' to get 'em. And he don't come here often, but once a year. This time he drove all the way. It don't seem reasonable, but he did it. He's got his boy and girl with him. I expect he'll stay a few weeks."

The average person would rather have an ounce of help than a ton of sympathy.
