Your Income Tax.
The exemptions under the revenue act of 1924 are $1,000 for single persons and $2,500 for married persons living together, and heads of families. In addition a $400 credit is allowed for each person dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer, if such person is under 18 years of age or incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

The normal tax rate under the revenue act of 1924 is 2 per cent on the first $4,000 of net income in excess of the personal exemption credit for dependents, etc., 4 per cent on the next $4,000, and 6 per cent on the balance. Under the preceding act the normal tax rate was 4 per cent on the first $1,000 of net income above the exemptions and credits, and 8 per cent on the remaining net income.

The revenue act of 1924 contains a special provision for reduced taxes which did not appear in previous laws. All net income up to $5,000 is considered "earned income." On this amount the taxpayer is entitled to a credit of 25 per cent of the amount of the tax.

For example, a taxpayer, single and without dependents, may be received in 1924 a salary of $20,000 and from a real estate transaction a profit of $3,000. His total net income was $5,000. Without the benefit of the 25 per cent reduction his tax would be $20. His actual tax is $50. From his net income of $5,000 he is allowed a personal exemption of $1,000; the tax of 2 per cent on the first $4,000 is $80, one-fourth of which, or $20, may be deducted.

Norma Talmadge Plays Four Roles

Norma Talmadge, in her latest First National picture, "Secrets," received in 1924 a salary of $20,000, and from a real estate transaction a profit of $3,000. His total net income was $5,000. Without the benefit of the 25 per cent reduction his tax would be $20. His actual tax is $50. From his net income of $5,000 he is allowed a personal exemption of $1,000; the tax of 2 per cent on the first $4,000 is $80, one-fourth of which, or $20, may be deducted.

It is a picture of modern romance with glimpses into three other periods of American home life. Starting out in 1923, the picture later shows Norma first as a young wife of the early days in Wyoming and the far west.

Then the action switches to the year 1870. Norma has become the mother of a growing family. The passing years of the photoplay's story show her in the garb of the late '80's of the last century. Her hair has grayed and the children have grown but it is the same Norma of the early sequents of the story. Last of all, Norma is shown again in modern costumes in 1923 settings.

"Secrets" is an unusual picture. It has an unusual story which is developed in a novel fashion. And in it Norma has a splendid opportunity, of which she avails herself to full, to display a remarkable range of characterization.

One is hardly able to believe that the Norma seen in the early sequents as a young wife and as a mother is the same person who is shown later with grey hair and in the black silk dress so much favored by our grandmothers.

The Coal That's Hotter Than Blue Blazes

Kentucky Blue Flame Coal

There are few coals anywhere, for actual heating qualities that can compare with Blue Flame. We do not recommend it for cook stoves or in any heating apparatus where the draft is poor or sluggish. But we can highly recommend it for furnace use where a coking coal is desired and the draft is of sufficient volume to insure complete combustion. It is very high in carbon and heat and low in moisture and ash—less than 3 1/4 per cent of ash.

Owing to its relatively low price, it is much more economical to use than any of the Illinois coals.

Paramount Picture Glorifies Shop Girl

Motion picture fans will have the opportunity of seeing Gloria Swanson at both ends of the fashion ladder, in her latest Paramount picture, "Manhandled," which is scheduled for Friday and Saturday at the Crystal theatre.

In her role of a shop girl, Miss Swanson wears one dress that cost $7.50, and doesn't look half bad in it either. It is a party dress of brown taffeta and the kind the home economics department of any school might hold up as a shining example of how the American girl can dress without spending a fortune on clothes.

To complete the outfit, Gloria wears a cheap pair of blue hose and plain black oxford. However, in the progress of Arthur Stringer's story, which Allan Dwan directed from an adaptation by Frank Tuttle, Miss Swanson is given the opportunity of wearing some stunning gowns and one of them cost just one hundred times as much as the little taffeta dress.

An all-star cast, headed by Tom Moore, supports Miss Swanson in "Manhandled," which is by far the best picture of her notable screen career.

Since the freeing of all the oranges in Florida, the fever to go to that country has somewhat abated.

Those who go there now do not see a myriad of green orange trees loaded with fruit. The leaves and oranges have all dropped off and the trees are as naked and dreary as the trees in Nebraska.

Last winter people dressed in summer clothes and went swimming in Tampa Bay, but this winter they dress in northern clothes and skate where they swim a year ago.

Our readers like to know occasionally how Father Martin of the Dakota City Argus, progresses with his "Manhandled."

That marvelous story was commenced about eight years ago, and now contains nearly four hundred chapters, and is likely to continue eight or ten years longer, and have, when finished, not less than a thousand chapters. Besides the lives, experiences, and adventures of various heroes and heroines (who have advanced from the halcyon days of youth to age and gray hairs since the story began.)

His learned novelist gives us numerous useful and interesting disquisitions, explanations and instructions. He treats of religion, politics, law, medicine, the woman's rights, intemperance, war, love, creation, cookery, catwaba, history, biography, evolution, prize fighting, and many other arts and sciences, and shows an astonishing acquaintance with them all.

When finished, his tale will form in itself a complete library of useful knowledge, and no one can afford to do without it.

The NERVOUS WRECK

Begin Here Today.

The "Nervous Wreck," an electric wire messenger, is driving Sally Morgan from her father's ranch to the railroad station when they run out of gasoline. The occupants of a passing car refuse to lend them any, and the Wreck takes five gallons at the point of a gun.

Later they are held captive at a ranch along the way because the foreman, Charlie McSwear, needs a cook and Sally fills that need. They discover that the wealthy owner of the ranch, Mr. Underwood, is the owner of the car which they held up. Underwood and his boy and girl are expected to stay at the ranch for several weeks. At the risk of being recognized, the Wreck waits on them in the dining room, and overhears their discussion of the highway robbery.

of course we didn't think. We didn't think that the country was running wild, with a lot of desperadoes doing as they damn please. But we found out differently, didn't we? You shout at him! Why, there were three more of them up by his car, I saw them."

"Timothy said he didn't see anybody else," said Miss Underwood. "Timothy's a blind ass. What do you expect of a chauffeur who is scared so stiff that he forgets how to work a tire pump? I saw there were three men, lined up at the side of the road—with guns. Why, if it hadn't been for them I'd have had the other one."

The Wreck collected the soup plates and piled them carefully. "You could have jumped on him while he was trying to put his car started," observed Miss Underwood, with a nod.

"Her father mumbled something that did not appear to be a reply. The Wreck was feeling jubilant. He would not have missed waiting on dishes for the world. Now he knew how deeply he had bitten into the pride of Jerome Underwood; for even in the intimacy of the family circle

"I don't want his deputy. I don't do business with deputies. I want the man in charge. Lord knows, I pay enough taxes in this county to get a sheriff when I want one. He must be a fine sheriff to let a state of affairs like this go on."

"Well, I guess you could get another one elected; if you wanted to," remarked the young man, with an effort at lightness.

His father glared at him. "Don't be an ass, Chester. What were you wanting—a sheriff on the job?"

"Not running next year's election."

The Wreck, having ladled soup up to three plates, picked one of them up and crossed toward the table. This was the crisis, and there was no longer any use in trying to postpone it. He laid the plate in front of Miss Underwood, and then, for the first time since he had entered the room, seemed to attract family attention.

The girl gave him a casual look and picked up her napkin. Chester's examination was equally brief. Servants were a matter of no great interest, either to himself or his sister. But the scrutiny of Jerome Underwood was more prolonged. The Wreck blinked painfully and wished that he had his glasses; he wanted to read the big man's expression more accurately.

He had fetched a second plate of soup and laid it before the ranch owner before a word was addressed to him.

"You didn't work here last summer," announced Underwood.

"No, sir."

It was a bitter wrench, but the Wreck kept his voice low and respectful.

"What is your name?"

"Williams."

"Where are you from?"

"Pittsburg, sir."

"Just working here for the summer?"

"Yes, sir."

Underwood nodded and picked up his spoon. The Wreck moved off toward the serving table and got another plate of soup. He felt as though he were treading on air. He did not believe he was going to mind waiting on the hog; after all, it was so much satisfaction to fool him.

The head of the ranch ate his soup with purposeful deliberation, but the plate and began drumming on the table with the tips of his thick fingers.

"It's a telephone service we got out here," he grumbled. "I suppose that girl hasn't bothered her head about it since."

"The telephone service they take time to locate him, father," said Miss Underwood.

"It ought not to. What's a sheriff for? This suppose she'd write and call if I knew anything about his business. Here's a bunch of highway robbers running around the country, and I don't hear of never heard about it, and they talk about improving the roads for tourists."

Jerome Underwood's voice trailed off in a low growl and he continued to drum with his fingers.

"Well, I wanted to take a shot at the one in the road and you wouldn't let me," he said.

"That would have been fine business, wouldn't it?" observed his father. "He'd have shot every last one of us here, you could hit your finger. You never had a chance after you got out of the car. If you wanted to take a shot at him, why didn't you let me know you intended to?"

"But it was just a bit unexpected, father. We didn't think—"

Underwood silenced his son with a

"Who is he?"

"It's an actor's son's wife."

The Underwood family signed comfortably in unison.

"It's a funny fellow, got somebody who can cook," said Harriet. "Remember how awful it was last summer?"

One of the ranch boys had reached for the omelette platter.

"Tell your wife that she's a good cook," he said. "Tell her to keep it hot. Tell her to have dinner ready tonight, and browned potatoes and beans, and corn, if she's got any—and more biscuits. Understand? More biscuits, coffee, too. And I want her to make some pie. If she hasn't got stuff to make pie out of, we'll send for it. And tell her to cook a lot of everything."

Harriet Underwood frowned and glanced at her brother.

"Remember, father, the doctor said—"

"The doctor's in New York," interrupted Underwood. "What he doesn't know will never get into his ball. Let her to have dinner, whatever you say your name was—have your wife kept right on cooking."

The Wreck, passing the biscuits again, scolded the commandant with a nod. He was hungry himself and he hoped there would be something left of the omelette, although he knew it would be eaten, what ever against him. He did not need to be told that Sally Morgan could cook; he knew it where they did, back at the Bar M, where Sally often abused her mother out of the kitchen and ran things to suit herself.

"People can eat more out in this country," he thought. "They're apparently talking to themselves. It's the dry air and the altitude. Back in New York—"

There was an uncertain tinkle of the telephone bell in the next room. He lumbered hastily out of his chair in answer to it.
