From Other Editors

Wahoo Wasp: According to statistics three and one-half billions of dollars worth of property was stolen last year ranging all the way from bank robberies to chicken stealing and the amount seems to be increasing instead of diminishing. Enough to wipe out the national debt in a short time.

Fairbury News: Nebraska has the smallest per capita debt of any state in the union, and no bonded indebtedness. The census figures show the total debt of the state in 1923 was $488,832. Wisconsin was our closest competitor with a per capita debt of $1.07. The fiscalistic experiments in North Dakota increased the total state debt from $1,230,933 in 1919 to $26,896,501 and the per capita debt from $1.53 to $40.24 and still some Nebraska voters are found praying and wishing to follow the track which wrecked the state of North Dakota.

York Republican: A Californian sat in this newspaper office and gazed over the beauty of Nebraska, with its promise of a bountiful corn crop. A few minutes later we heard a resolute growling because a rain had passed around and great damage had been done to the corn crop. Now so far as the corn crop is concerned, it does not make a whit of difference what your view about it is. It will be a bumper crop or a failure according to the soil and weather conditions. But what an edge the Californian has on the Nebraskan! He has the great pleasure of the enjoyment of an enchanting scene.

same old farce all over again. Miners are asking a ten percent wage increase and their contract with the owners expires August 31, and say they won't work without it. This is understood to be unsatisfactory with operators. Of course the present wage is unsatisfactory to the miners and the prospect of a raise unsatisfactory to operators. It takes a long memory to reach back to the time when both miners and operators were satisfied. Disatisfaction is a chronic ailment. What is needed is an over-supply of government regulations in some arrangement whereby the coal consuming public will not be compelled to suffer from scarcity of coal and from high price while the miners and operatorsicker back and forth. Stern steps by the government are justified for the protection of the public. The annual coal bugaboo is getting tiresome.

Fairbury News: While the merchant has clothing, shoes or dress goods for sale, and the grocer depends upon the sale of foodstuffs for a living, it never seems to occur to some people that the newspaper-man chief means of getting a living lies in his newspaper space. It is just the same to him as goods on the shelf are to the merchant. If the merchant gave his goods away he would starve to death, and the same rule applies to the editor and his wages. We have always been willing to give a hearty boost to every worthy cause arising in Fairbury and we expect to keep right on doing so. But to ask us to donate our space—our stock-in-trade—to enable someone else to make a profit, is neither fair or just. Depend on us to get back of everything worth while; call on us when we can boost; any movement that is for the good and the upbuilding of the community, but if you are anxious to advertise something that is going to make money for you or your friends, then our space is just the same as you buy the things the merchant has to sell. It's the only way we know of that we can keep out of the poorhouse.

Aurora Republican: Again the American people are confronted by the specter of a semi-famine in coal, resultant high prices and general discomfiture of mind and body. It is the

The intensely hot weather makes us feel that if we had a million dollars we would give this newspaper to some one we don't like very well, and then we would take a long vacation.

We think Clarence Darrow got off on the wrong foot in objecting to pray for the opening of court at Dayton. If prayer is good in private, as most people believe, it would be quite as efficacious in the introduction of court proceedings.

People who are traveling from place to place, to mountaintops or take odd reports are more numerous than ever, the multiplied numbers being due to better roads and more automobiles, and a habit that has been usually and rapidly growing.

It is a pitifully impoverished mind that cannot interpret or measure the main structure of a story in order to excite attention. Such a mind figures that listeners will not be interested unless the thing said credits or hurts some one.

Rather late in the spring some birds were commonly seen to migrate the main structure of a story in order to excite attention. Such a mind figures that listeners will not be interested unless the thing said credits or hurts some one.

Manufacturers should not accept a symptom of improved times as a signal to boost prices, but hold back until people have been able to re-open their purses and establish themselves in easier sailing. Manufacturers and their employes will fare better in the long run if they anticipate their favorable anxiety to get advantage with first appearance of favorable signs.

Numerous applicants for the local school superintendency have been journeying here this week to present themselves to members of the school board in the hope of making a favorable and convincing impression. With so many capable men to choose from, it will be no easy task to select the one who seems best suited for the place.

Because a former Wayne bachelor in California had elected to live peacefully as a hermit, on a diet of oranges and boiled cabbage, with unshaven face and uncut hair, the police gathered him in and have been investigating him. Were the officers inspired by the assumption that he was rich or by humanitarian motives? Suppose he did have a towering appetite for two articles of diet and no more, suppose he did shy away from barbets and tailors and the blandish-

FORTYTWO YEARS AGO.

Forty-two years ago, Wayne recalls a hail storm that mowed a seven-mile strip through Ohio and Cass counties forty-two years ago last Monday. Mr. Kostitz, of De Soto, Nebraska City at that time. He says some of the hail stones were as large as hen's eggs and that growing crops were laid low. The hail was ponded into the ground. He says log houses in Ohio county at that time were laid low. The hail was ponded into the ground. He says log houses in Ohio county at that time were laid low.

ments of society, was his judgment had enough to invite official interference? Is there no palladium of liberty in the state of California?

Groundless fear causes most of the anguish in the world. Fear of the elements, of disease germs, of the consequences of social investments, of what people will think or say causes misery that is never warranted by the facts. Fear monopolizes the mind, and hampers one in performing useful service. Fear that exceeds the needs of simple caution is a barrier that ought to be cast aside.

If the people generally of Tennessee are as narrow as the majority in Dayton seem to be it is not surprising the legislature passed a law regarding interpretation of the bible, and is not interpreting that Semper, able to illustrate his point by immediately available material, was led to think favorably of the theory of evolution and be prompted to try it on a young and promising generation.

A strange lady of kindly mien mistook us for some one else at the railroad station recently, and then, ascertaining her error, she spoke favorably of the individual she had in mind. We expressed a large measure of satisfaction over the finding, after fifty years, that we were not the only one of a kind in the world, but at once we noticed a feeling of tender and sympathetic solicitude for the other one creeping over us, knowing full well that at least his appearance has not been a very powerful asset.

Judge Tustison who presides over the Scopes trial, became overheated when he found his decision on the constitutionality of the Tennessee law had been anticipated and published in advance by the newspapers. He thought reporters had gained the information surreptitiously. But it was a safe guess that he would uphold the law, and evidently the court was a little too slow to suit the news gatherers. Coming into the courtroom suddenly, the judge is likely to find much difficulty in keeping his cranial anatomy from distending and popping open under circumstances it with securely riveted steel bands.

Public improvement is often hindered and sometimes entirely blocked by conflicting opinions on how to accomplish desired ends. The thing proposed and generally wanted is killed by a trivial disagreement over the way to proceed. Progress may be accomplished and great public good result from sensible compromises and a united pull ahead. The interposing of objections and the demand to substitute other ways or means cause confusion and often defeat. The reason one town goes forward faster than another is because the former pools its ideas and makes them at once practically workable.

Champion

Little George Marsters ran two miles in 7 minutes and 45 seconds at the Perry city meet in Philadelphia, inaugurating a new world record. Previous record was 7:23 seconds.

whereas the latter wastes time and energy and causes endless delay in trying to hurricane a lot of discordant suggestions.

SKUNKS.
On the Meier farm just south of town, Roy Meier is getting well started in the business of raising skunks for their fur which is very valuable. Recently he welcomed an addition of thirty little ones, and last Friday Dr. C. G. Johnson and Dr. Williams Hawkins, veterinary surgeons, removed from each one the two glands which, under provocation, cause people to grab their noses and make quick retreat.

The double-barreled glands mened, which we judge from results work in perfect unison, are employed by a skunk as weapons of defense, and people who have had experience know they form a very complete and effective defense. They can discharge a volley sixteen feet with accurate aim and terrible punishment. The surgeons informed us that in operating on old skunks, it was necessary to administer an anesthetic to keep them from opening fire, but that the young ones submit peacefully.

Young Mr. Meier has suitable pens for each of the skunks hide and frisk about. Properly geodorized, the animals are not at all embarrassed, and penned up, they cannot exercise their natural inclination to steal chickens.

THE DAYTON HIPPODROME.

The Scopes trial which involves educational freedom, is now getting under way at Dayton, Tenn., and is attracting universal attention. The proceedings will be stirred by plenty of comedy and pathos. As a mid-summer attraction, the trial will be both amusing and enlightening. The court arena is pitched in an atmosphere that is altogether favorable to the prosecution.

It is not a question of the defendant's guilt. Doubtless he violated the Tennessee law, and it would be a disappointment to the defense if he were not pronounced guilty by the jury. The trial will not settle the theory of evolution, but it will bring to the fore the results of much scientific study and will tend to clear many misunderstandings between science and religion. The trial will lead to a testing of the construction of a law which proposes strict scientific inquiry, and that is the chief purpose.

The contest at Dayton is not calculated to establish evidence as fact, but to safeguard religious tolerance and educational development. If laws may be passed under our constitution to prevent the closing of evolution in the schools, they may be adopted to regulate inquiry into other half hidden problems. A law might be passed making it a crime to consider telepathy or spirit communication. If we would stop educational progress, we would justify the prediction of Hugo, the gloom prophet, that we were returning to the dark ages.

As we understand, the idea at Dayton is not to discredit Christianity, but to guarantee freedom of thought and expression to those who would extend animal heaven from the orthodox view of Christianity.

Gravel Pit Is To Be Opened Up Soon

A section of land eleven miles northwest of Bloomfield, estimated at having a supply of 50,000,000 tons of gravel, is soon to be opened. Roy N. Four, head of the civil engineering firm of Fowl, Nelson & Schwartz of Omaha, stated that the gravel is worth 30 cents a ton at the source and therefore the supply near Bloomfield is valued at $40,000,000.

The gravel is of the highest quality for roads and railroad ballast. Mr. Four stated it is in piles about 100 feet high and is thought to have been carried down from distant mountains in past ages and placed in piles. It contains lime and magnesium which are valuable materials in gravel to be used for roads. It can be loaded easily. The land is owned by Ed. Madow of Bloomfield.

Mr. Towl has surveyed for a railroad from Bloomfield to the gravel pits. Farmers have raised $60,000 to pay for the right of way. It is proposed to run the road to land ten miles from Bloomfield and here it is planned to establish a town. The road also runs five miles farther to the gravel. It is thought much of the gravel will soon be used on roads in this part of the state.

The largest gravel beds in the state, besides these at Bloomfield, are in a section near Plattie.

Does Your Poultry Bring Top Prices?

The 2 1/2 million American farmers with telephones have eliminated guesswork in selling poultry.

They call up before taking chickens to town and can get top prices because they sell when the market is at its best.

The telephone plays an important part in marketing about 400 million chickens in this country each year.

There is perhaps nothing the farmer buys, but he is getting more satisfaction as his telephone.

Does Your Poultry Bring Top Prices? The 2 1/2 million American farmers with telephones have eliminated guesswork in selling poultry. They call up before taking chickens to town and can get top prices because they sell when the market is at its best. The telephone plays an important part in marketing about 400 million chickens in this country each year. There is perhaps nothing the farmer buys, which for the money, brings him so much satisfaction as his telephone. NORTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE CO. There will be all except a few of the Indians themselves. She remembers as a child the Mormon immigrants stopping to rest at Traders' Point. She talks about Indian trails, and the gold rush to California, which her father joined. She personally knew such lively characters as Stephen Hecattay, and the Fenchelises.

Lives in the Old Home.
In 1880, when the Omaha Indians agreed to settlement of some of their land near Pender, her husband, Samuel H. Campbell, was given an allotment. He built the home, where she is living today. Three daughters in Pender are Mrs. Paul Easton, Mrs. Florence Hamilton, and Mrs. Ida Scott. William Campbell, a son, also lived there. Mrs. Louisa Joff is in Boulder, Colo. Mr. Campbell's father was Mitchell Barnaby, of an old French family in Quebec, Canada. He came to Traders' Point as an agent for the American Fur company to trade with the Indians. He spoke several tribal Indian languages, French and English. His mother was Mes-chon-dah, meaning "moon power woman," a Cheyenne Indian, a descendant of one of the best Indian families.

At the time her parents were married there was warfare with the northern Sioux Indians from the north, who attacked the Omaha Indian villages. When Mrs. Campbell was a child, the Omaha tribe of Indians invited her father to make a home for his family on a tract of land where Omaha now is. He built a log cabin on the land, but delayed moving with his family because of raiding Sioux who had killed women and children. Next spring when he went to look after his new land, he found it occupied by a claim jumper.

Fared the Sioux War Parties.
Mrs. Campbell relates that it was about this time that negotiations were in progress to have the Omaha Indians cede their land to the United States for settlement. This was done by treaty in 1854, and the Omaha tribe moved north. Because of the closeness of their own reservation to Sioux war parties, many of the Omahas established a new home, and it was there her father and only brother died.

When a Presbyterian mission was established in about 1846, in the Omaha Indian territory, Mrs. Campbell relates, she attended and learned the English language. The school was built, she says, by Edward McKinnin and Mark Reed. She remembers that it was in this school that Francis Burt, first governor of Nebraska, was cared for while sick.

About seventy children were in the school, Mrs. Campbell recalls. The grounds were enclosed by a high tight fence, with strong gates, to protect against attacks. About two miles up the river from the school was a mission for the Pawnee Indians.

Through her close association with Indian life, Mrs. Campbell knows Indians as few living persons know them. She remembers the "buffalo hunts and how parts of the slain animals were preserved for food, clothing and shelter. She remembers how skins were tanned and how raw hides were prepared for tents and many other uses. She still knows how to prepare Indian foods, long forgotten except by some of the very old Indians.

Despite her age, Mrs. Campbell enjoys good health, her hair is still black and her step firm. She has eighteen grandchildren and thirteen great grandchildren.

Pioneer Recalls
Early Days Here
Omaha World Herald, July 12: Among Nebraska residents of historic interest is Mrs. Emily Campbell, who has lived for forty-five years a mile north of Pender, and who was born eighty-three years ago in a log cabin near Traders' Point, on the Iowa side of the Missouri river, about opposite the town of Bellevue on the Nebraska side.

Versed in Indian lore, and with Indian blood in her veins, she remembers some of the arts that now have become lost to all except a few of the Indians themselves. She remembers as a child the Mormon immigrants stopping to rest at Traders' Point. She talks about Indian trails, and the gold rush to California, which her father joined. She personally knew such lively characters as Stephen Hecattay, and the Fenchelises.

Deer Creek Giants Win in Two Games

The Deer Creek Giants of near Carroll, won two baseball games the past week, one on Saturday from the Wakefield team at the Farmers Union picnic in Windsor with a score of 10 to 4 and the other from Magnet at McLean last Thursday by a score of 11 to 0.
The game between the Giants and the Wakefield team at Winsie was exciting throughout and the former took the lead early in the game, scoring four runs. The Wakefield pitcher had to retire from the game and Fritz Himmel took his place and held the Giants to four runs in the rest of the game. Lage struck out twelve men and only allowed a few hits.
In the game Thursday at McLean the Giants won from Magnet at the home of Herman picnic by a score of 11 to 0. This contest was also interesting and looked a little unfavorable for the Giants in the first inning when Magnet scored one run and three in the second. The Giants scored six runs in the second inning and from then on kept in the lead.
A. Lage, Ketchmark and Stoltenberg starred for the Giants. Lage hit two home runs and a single with four trips to the plate while Ketchmark got one home run, two singles and was struck out once with the same number of turns. Stoltenberg got two singles and two runs. Blum, Grunwald and Volk were on the mound for Magnet, Hohenstein was in for the Giants.
Next Sunday Magnet plays the Giants at the Lage field near Carroll and a good game is promised.

W. Y. Miles and his nephew, Elmer Sassaaman of Coloridge, returned Wednesday from their automobile trip to Pennsylvania. They made the trip to Pennsylvania and back as far as Clinton, Ia., in their car without mishap, but when near Clinton the car refused to go, so they abandoned it and came the rest of the way home by train. Mr. Miles says he enjoyed his visit in Pennsylvania very much but would not care to live there. He brought back some very interesting snapshots which he took on his way.

Among them are scenes on the battlefield of Gettysburg which he visited; views along the Susquehanna river; others of Penn's Cave, and various scenes along the mountain roads and curves. Among the most interesting pictures are those taken at his boyhood home at Madisonburg, Pa., at the old log house where his mother was born and raised, which is 116 years old; the old barn, 103 years old, 46 feet wide and 84 feet long, made of logs, the logs being 84 feet long; the old log school house where his mother went to school. The closest living relative that he found is a sister of his mother. Mr. Miles says that Nebraska looks pretty good to him.

Dr. A. L. Babby: Nothing more violent than the language of contending legal luminaries is reported from the battlefield at Dayton, Tenn. The score at last reports stood 0 to 0.

Market Report

Furnished by Swanson, Gilmore & Walsh, Sioux City Stock Yards.

Sioux City Stock Yards, July 15.—Northwestern's continued operations on the already-serious hog receipt/contractors over the country the packers managed to retard live pork prices slightly over the early half of the present week. However, even by the most sanguine application of insurance sweaters would not force much of a reaction. A constant upward pressure seems to be underlying the deal and with packers fighting to stave off a psychological split, operations are being along from day to day what appears to be a decidedly jagged edge. Just how much longer buyers will be able to hold a sentence of control is a question, but prevailing conditions certainly indicate an early break away to a new upper limit for the year of 1925.

The middle of the week shows prices for butcher hogs on the river between $15.50 and $14.00. According to quality and finish, packing cows worth anywhere from $1.50 to $2.50 under butcher rates. Many of the cows are coming out of hard fat bucks, where expectations had been for an almost straight grass delegation this summer.

Last week hog receipts at the eleven leading markets reflected a decrease of 357,900 head, as compared to the corresponding week in 1924. By the same comparison the first two days of this week show a shrinkage of 145,000 head.

The already wide gap between prices on corn fed and grass cattle was enlarged considerably this week, the one class being offered in super abundance and the other in not sufficient quantities to fill trade needs.

While corn fed steers and yearlings of all weights worked about 25 cents higher this week than grass cattle, allowing extreme tops to be quoted at $12.25, the bullfinches was never pronounced. It was just a steady gradual climb that suggested real stability behind the trade.

Current sales indicate that packers are showing more favor than ever for the fancy young heifers, which probably would not be given any consideration except for the sharp discrimination practiced against fed heifers last week. Tuesday of this week yearling heifers were sold in a mixed lot to $13.

The first half of this week brought about 20,000 more cattle to the eleven leading markets than arrived the same days last week. The increase makes it practically certain that the aggregate for the week will run over 250,000 head. As a big preponderance of the delivery in oil southern ranges and out of northern pastures, the reason for the almost complete bearish treatment for grassers and slippery cattle is obvious.

Losses on grass cows and heifers, as well as all but the best grass steers amounted to 50 cents the first half of this week. The decline from the high time now ranges from $1.50 to $2.00. Slippery types, that is kinds that came out of the lot and entered the pasture, received a full measure of adverse treatment. The decline catches practically all classes of fat steers and yearlings worth from $10.50 down, while the 25 cents advance quoted on ripe corn fed figures on all classes worth more than $11.00.

Begin Here Today.

Sir Dudley Glenister, English baronet, recently came in to the title through the death of a cousin, suspected of the murder of the cousin by Kathleen Glenister, sister of the dead man, when a crowd drops a skeleton. Flung, hearing her brother's signet ring, in the midst of a picnic party on the estate. She enlists the assistance of her lover, the Rifle Brigade, in obtaining evidence to convict Sir Dudley.

Now Go on With the Story.

"Perhaps you would oblige this worthy officer's longing for the ward," Sir Dudley addressed Willoughby Melville, who rose and left the room. "My friend, Doctor Melville, has been making a private autopsy on the bit of bone," Sir Dudley rattled on. "Have a glass of port, sergeant?"

CHAPTER III.

Kathleen's bedroom was on the main landing at the head of the fine old staircase at the Grange. It was still very early for the house party had retired for the night some after dinner, spending but little time in the drawing room, where an air of constraint had prevailed.

Kathleen was in no hurry to undress. Seating herself in an easy-chair, she strove to recall every phase of the mystery surrounding her brother's fate. The process carried her back to a period about a year before the death of Sir Philip Glenister, her father. There had suddenly arisen a violent quarrel between the old baronet and his heir, the cause of which had been carefully concealed from her. George had left the Grange in high dudgeon, taking a tender farewell of his sister, but merely telling her that he was going to the western states of America.

Six months later she had a letter from him dated from Lone Wolf City in Montana, informing her that he was well and engaged in prospecting for gold. Kathleen remembered that she had mentioned this letter, and the place where it was written, to her cousin Dudley when he had spent a week-end at Beechwood Grange.

Shortly afterwards Sir Philip had been stricken with a mortal sickness which killed him in three days, and during which he had been too ill to alight to his son and heir.

By the time the heirship, old-fashioned lawyers had sent out a representative to Montana and procured evidence which after the law delays established the fact of George Glenister's death and gave the baronet and Beechwood Grange to Dudley, the latter's cousinly sympathy had merged into something warmer. It was he who begged her to suit her own convenience in leaving her own home, hinting that there was a very simple plan by which she need not leave it at all. The result had been that with all speed she had put herself under the protection of her relative, Lady Marablene, and had gone to live with the eccentric dowager in Cadogan Gardens.

What would Dudley's next move be? Kathleen asked herself. He had murdered George and left his body so lightly hidden that a carrion bird could molest it. He would go out on a very night, and in the dark, hide it more effectually before the two searches, one by the estate laborers and the other by the police, began on the morrow. He must either be prevented or caught in the act.

Having changed into outdoor garments and put on slippers and a diamond cap, she opened her bedroom door by a few inches. The light on the landing had been extinguished, a sure sign that she need not leave it. The house had come to rest. The girl closed her door noiselessly and tiptoed over the thick carpet into one of several passages that lay with her from the landing. She drummed lightly but insistently on one of the doors till it was opened by her brother Norman. Sir Dudley was standing at her face he stood aside for her to enter, waddling gently shutting the door, turned the key.

"Don't look so scared," she whispered. "It's me, not you, that's up against Mrs. Grundy if we're spotted. Don't ask questions, but on my own bottom and come to my room on the landing."

Seeing that his ladylove was in no mood for argument, with a shrug and a compromise in face of an emergency Norman did as he was bid, and they stole to Kathleen's room. There in balmy twilight she explained that she had had a dream which she had hid to hide the traces of his crime, and they would follow and confound him.

at such other for a decision. The sound was unmistakably the cautious opening and shutting of a door. "You've hit it," whispered Norman. "He's on the move!" "We had better give him a good start," said Kathleen. "He is sure to leave the house by the side entrance through the gun-room."

CHAPTER IV.

The moon had risen well over the trees surrounding the glade where the crowd dropped its slender burden. On leaving the house by the gun-room door, Kathleen and her companion had seen no sign of Sir Dudley Glenister, and they had agreed to make for this place of evil omen. There they would be the better able to get their bearings as to the direction whence the predatory bird had flown. So they came to the borders of the glade with an eager expectancy peered into the open spaces. At any other time they might have been struck by the contrast between the earlier scene—the profanation of the night with its crowd of chattering guests—and the silent vista of tree-girt, moonlight solitude, carpeted with moss and fern.

"There he is!" Kathleen scarcely breathed, clutching Norman's arm. "On that stump to the left!" "Sure enough, on the trunk of an oak that had been felled, a man was sitting. He must have heard us following and was waiting for us to come up," Kathleen added. "Shall we show ourselves and openly accuse him, or go back?"

But Norman was slow to reply. "That is not Sir Dudley," he said at length. "No, so tall by six inches, and he is wearing an inverness cape, which I don't believe your cousin possesses."

"Doctor Melville has got an inverness," rejoined Kathleen tentatively. "It isn't Melville," said Norman. Motionless as a graven image, the man on the stump watched their advance as they broke cover and emerged into the moonlight. As soon as they were near enough for recognition he rose and took off his cap.

"Miss Glenister!" he exclaimed. "I was wondering who was abroad in the woods. For some little time I have heard some one moving about."

"Why, it's Mr. Colne!" said Kathleen. "We've been wondering. We thought you were gone." She broke off suddenly, and the cabinet minister tactfully helped to cover her indelicacy.

"Thought I was a poacher?" he laughed merrily. "Very natural. No, I'm not setting snares for rabbits. Miss Glenister, you were accompanied thereby to greater frankness."

"We are not exactly setting snares," she said. "Hunting would be a better word for it. Captain Slater and I agreed that an attempt might be made tonight to remove, or more effectually bide, my brother's body and so forestall the official and unofficial search which will, I suppose, begin tomorrow."

"You are still convinced, Miss Glenister, that the finger was your brother's?" "I am absolutely certain of it." "Mrs. Stephen Colne asked of me."

"I'm of the same opinion," he admitted. "I will confess that my reason for this nocturnal prowling is on all fours with your own. You will forgive me for saying that I think that you have defeated our common objective."

With which Mr. Stephen Colne moved off in the direction of Galbrook Towers. Norman and Kathleen started homeward, not wholly disappointed with the result of their excursion.

Their immediate concern was how to get back into the house and regain their bedrooms without their expedition becoming known to their host. Emerging from the covert into the open park, they were partly reassured by seeing no human figure on the wide expanse ahead, though Norman's military anxiety for his rear administered a prompt corrective.

"Perhaps the lightest is behind us," he whispered. "Don't!" was Kathleen's shuddering protest. "And when they had crossed the park and passed through the gardens to the terrace under the rows of darkened windows, the young soldier's theory was demolished by the materializing of the other, if less creepy, more decisive one. The gun-room door was latched."

"What are we to do?" murmured Kathleen. Norman domineered round for a loop-hole of escape. The word "compromise" veered its ugly head. He was seized with an inspiration. "Only thing to do is to go round to the front door and ring 'em up!'" he said. "We can pitch a yarn about being tempted to take a stroll by moonlight, but to put us on the lawn we shall have to announce that we are engaged."

"We are not engaged, and we are not going to be, while George's fate is in doubt," said the indignant rejoinder. "I will talk to you!" Norman accepted defeat gracefully. "Sorry," he replied. "Carried away by my feelings, I suppose. Here's another plan. How about sticking it out in that summer-house over there? As soon as the house is opened up and the servants about we can sneak in. With luck we might get to our rooms without being spotted, and if not we could return to our domestic life as usual."

"It's a good idea," said Kathleen. "I'll try that first." "I'll try that first," Kathleen looked at the summer-house, a substantial structure across the lawn beyond the rose garden, its thatched roof bathed in moonlight. She knew the comfortable interior, with its pine-pane walls and cushioned basket-chairs. As a little girl she had given dolls tea-parties there.

"Come along!" she said. "At any rate for a time—I'll be on my something not quite so crude." They crossed the dewy turf and entered the dining-room, not least for a possible occupant at that time of night. But on the threshold they came to a sudden halt. The dull red glow of a signal in full blast met their astounded gaze, explaining the frantic smile of Heaven's smile that assailed their nostrils.

"Miss Glenister and Captain Slater, I think," said Willoughby Melville. "In a little difficulty, eh? Well, if you will permit me, I shall have pleasure in helping to surmount it by showing you how to get into the house. I have been waiting here in order to offer my services."

Norman tried not to look like a detected criminal. "Nearly everybody seems to be wondering about tonight," Kathleen laughed. "The news specialist had risen from his seat and come to the door of the summer-house."

"You must not let your disappointment make you cross, Miss Glenister," he said pleasantly. "It is not my fault that the object of your moonlit stroll has proved elusive. Don't let that worry you, my dear young lady, for to use a coarse colloquialism, you have been backing up the wrong tree."

He struck across the lawn towards the mansion, but Kathleen, keeping pace with him, was determined that he should be more explicit. "You seem to be pretty sure of the reason for our stroll, Doctor Melville," she said. "I wonder if you have hit on the right one." "I seldom make mistakes in reading the human mind," was the reply. Doctor Melville had shepherded them to one of the French windows of the dining-room, which proved to be unfastened. "Pray take advantage of my provision for my own return," he said, standing aside for the wanderers to enter and following them in. "I must leave you to your own device in gaining your rooms, but I should advise caution."

The finishing is one of the newest developments in felt hats.

Such calves are uncommon, triplets are out of the ordinary and quadruplets are very much out of the ordinary, but here they are!

The picture was taken when they were 24 hours old. The calves weighed 24 pounds each at birth, and were four hours old before they were able to stand on their feet.

The calves and mother are the property of Guy Little, Tucuman, N. M.
