Books Accessioned At Wayne Library

"The Constitution of the United States, Its Sources and Its Application," by Thomas James Norton, is one of the new books accessioned at the Wayne city library. This volume gives briefly, but adequately, the origin of the leading provisions of the constitution and amendments. It then gives the application of these in the great cases which have arisen in the actual life of the nation from its beginning to 1921. The book is a fascinating constitutional history of the United States. "The Bearded-Up House," by Augusta Huel Seaman, is a delightful story for children. "Kathleen's Probation," by Jodynn Gray, is the story of a girl named Kathleen who had a most attractive personality. She was a leader in college and the training school for nurses but her personality was also her great danger because she came to think only of herself. She all but failed her family in a crisis of affairs and she was untrue to her own standards. "Sticks and the Bell Dolls" written by Margaret Widdemer tells of Anabel who has a whole family of dolls and one by one they disappear. She suspects her dog of taking them and finally she finds them in a curious place. "Tommy of the Big Top" is by Allen Chaffee. This is an admirable story of the circus for young people. It deals with a girl of 17 who is born to life of the circus. She is an aerialist and the ward of a tiger trainer. Her younger brother is helper with the elephants. The two find a place in the great clean-living family that plays and works under the white tops. "The Black Wolf Pack" by Dan Beard, is an adventurous story and depends upon a boy's attempt to find the father he has never seen. He accidentally discovers he has been adopted by the Crawford and they show him letters which suggest that his true father went into a certain wild region. His experiences from there on are thrilling. "The Boss of the Big Horse," written by Erling Whitney, is a hunting story that will win the heart of every red-blooded American boy who reads it. The action takes place in the action lakes in the Rocky mountains and tells of interesting hunting experiences. Wayne County Man Tops Cattle Market Sioux City Tribune, June 17: For the second successive session feed cattle reached a new high Thursday on the Sioux City market for the year 1925. The latest skyline figure landed at $13.50 per hundred weight and was paid to Frank Woehler, farmer and feeder, of Wayne, Neb. The price surpassed the crest of the previous day by 10 cents per hundred weight. At the new summit Mr. Woehler cleared 17 steers averaging 3,205 pounds. Part of the toppers were his own raising and the remainder originated in western Nebraska. All were of the Hereford breed. The purchase was made by the Cudahy Packing company. In addition to the toppers, Mr. Woehler cleared 21 head of mixed steers and heifers averaging 810 pounds to Armour and company at $12.50. This is the first time in 20 years of feeding that Mr. Woehler has shipped away from the Omaha market. He expressed himself as well pleased with the transaction and indicated that two loads still in the feed lot would undoubtedly come here later in the season. The cattle he sold Thursday had been on full feed for about six months. State's Income Returns. Omaha, July 18.—The state of Nebraska has 1,112 individuals reporting net incomes of more than $10,000 last year, instead of only eight such incomes—this fact was revealed by the Omaha World-Herald. Recently an incomplete report from Washington got into news circulation giving the number as eight. This report was not handled by the Associated Press. The World-Herald's investigation brought a message from David H. Blair, commissioner of the bureau of internal revenue, fixing the number at 1,112. The only fun out of doing most things is in doing them right.

Eight years is almost old age for some cows. But Victor Hearty Lass, an Ayrshire, and the property of the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station, has come up to the age of 22 years and has produced 140,000 pounds of 2.94 per cent milk. Her test month's yield for the year was 2255 pounds of milk.
