To Be President.
Omaha World Herald: Search the whole catalogue of embarrassing incidents and it is doubtful if you can find one to match that of being president of the United States.

It is almost literally true that every minute of every day of his tenure of office he is under the close scrutiny of a waiting press. There are of course refuges where none may enter except himself and persons whom he has invited to his private office, his living quarters in the White house, his friends in hotels or the houses of friends. But once he steps outside the comparatively narrow limits of his sanctuary he is scarcely able to lift an eyebrow that isn't noted.

Even his privacy is invaded by the frequent necessity of giving out information as to what goes on there or by the fortuitous discovery of some circumstance which gives a clue to the newspaper men whose duty it is to hang upon his flanks. We know what his recreations, if any, are. All his visitors, whether they come on business or purely social missions, are closely scanned. He is constantly shadowed by the gentlemen of the press, in a perfectly open and above board and legitimate way. It is true, but shadowed nevertheless.

As if it were not enough that the president should be his constant companion he cannot show himself in public but that a crowd gathers to stand and gaze at him. In the national capital he is one of the sights, like the Washington monument, the Lincoln memorial, the tomb of the Unknown Soldier or the new Mayflower hotel. A sight-seeing has company has even advertised a hand-shake with him as one of the features of its tour of attractions.

President Coolidge went for a quiet, restful weekend to visit his father on the latter's remote Vermont farm. The result was about the same degree of seclusion as that of the lone man in the sidewalk: Not only were there reporters at each side of him, in front and behind him, but the visit seems to have been the signal for the gathering of the tourists from all that part of New England.

He had to visit the village dentist. The crowd tagged him. He went for a climb over the hill which forms a rampart to the farm. The crowd trailed after like a gallery at the champagne reception at the government. He went to church. A sudden access of piety was observable in the crowd and a shortage of hymn books in the church after the service was over. He went out on the front porch to take a nap in the hammock and a dead line had to be established one hundred yards away to keep the crowd back.

Still there are millions of people enjoying the advantage of peace and quiet and content in an unobscured private life who think the most desirable thing in the world must be attainment to the presidency of the United States.

The Nebraska Corn Crop.
Omaha Bee: The Nebraska corn crop will not be as large as enthusiasts claimed about July 1. The farmers' enthusiasm were like the Irishman who bought a pig to fatten and boasted that when he butchered it would be the biggest hog in the neighborhood. When he butchered a friend asked him how much the hog weighed. "The pig didn't weigh as much as I thought it would, but I didn't think it would," was the reply.

Despite untoward conditions during July, the corn crop is now practically assured, and while it will fall short of early estimates by many million bushels, it will be close to the ten-year average in size, and considerably above the average in value. After all is said and done, the value of the corn crop is of more concern than the size.

Nebraska is now sure of continuing as one of the four greatest corn-producing states, just as it is one of the four largest wheat producers, one of the four largest beet sugar producers, and one of the four largest meat producers.

It is a mistake to sell Nebraska short.

All Year School.
York Republican: When this newspaper a few weeks ago referred to the fact that all year school is a likely eventuality in our public school system, some editors took us to task and ridiculed the idea. Last week a commission of educational experts in Chicago recommended to the board of education that grade schools and high schools of that city be conducted the year round. The committee found that summer recess is the most serious interruption of the child encounters in school life. And in addition concluded that injury is done to the morale of pupils whose parents have dumped the responsibility for their training upon the schools and do not properly embody or control them during the summer vacation period. The situation in Chicago is not of course the same as that in York or a rural community. But the interruption in the educational training of children and the idleness for several months of costly school equipment and expensive teaching forces will very likely bring students of education to the view that all year use of school facilities will prove beneficial to pupils, parents and the community.

Automobiles Collide.
Wayne, Neb., Aug. 17—When two automobiles collided near here Friday night during a heavy wind and rain storm, Mrs. Townbridge of this place suffered a broken shoulder blade.

Mrs. Townbridge and Mr. Larson, also of this place, were driving the two cars that collided. Both automobiles turned over but no one else was injured.

Mrs. Townbridge was taken to an Omaha hospital.

Arizona Romance is Coming to Crystal

Popular acclaim was responsible for placing Alice Terry and Conway Tearle in the roles of Ruth Jordan and Stephen Galt in "The Great Divide," the Metro-Goldwyn screen version of William Vaughn Moody's famous Arizona romance which comes to the Crystal August 25 and 27.

Suggestions from the public and from dramatic critics throughout the United States, solicited by the Metro-Goldwyn studio after film rights to the famous play had been acquired, named Mr. Tearle and Miss Terry the ideal stars for the star parts in "The Great Divide."

Almost every leading man and woman in motion pictures was put forward, but the names of Alice Terry and Conway Tearle led those of the other candidates by a wide margin. Other prominent players in the cast include Wallace Berry, Zasu Pitts, Huntly Gordon, Allan Forrest, Ford Sterling, William Orlandom and George Cooper. Woldemar Young prepared the adaptation.

Divine Laws.
Dr. A. L. Bixby in Lincoln Journal: Henry Drummond was a scientist who found in every proven fact of life reasons for a fuller, deeper and greater conception of the Great First Cause whom we call God and try so hard to comprehend as Father and Friend to all in this sorrowing world. Science exemplifies the wholesome and helpful truth that this is not a world of chance, but of order and purpose; and that nature's ministrations are God's ministrations and are purposeful and holy; that her laws are divine, and "to obey is to love."

THE First National Bank of Wayne became a National Bank on August 25, 1885, when it was evolved from the pioneer Logan Valley Bank. After forty years as a National Bank, this institution is able to make a showing that is most gratifying to all concerned, including the general public. The following condensed statement, issued June 30, 1925, gives stimulus to the satisfaction felt on this anniversary:

The First National Bank has been closely linked with the evolutions of the town and surrounding territory. It has been constructively progressive and at the same time soundly conservative. It has been a source of strength to worthy enterprise, and has helped steer many a bark over dangerous waters. It has been sustaining, and in return it has been wonderfully sustained. It has grown with the community, has been in accord with the community and has been a part of the community. Built on the success of those that we have helped.

The First National has all the functions of a good bank. An important auxiliary is its saving department which is taken advantage of by a steadily increasing number of patrons. It opens the way to systematic saving and permanent financial gain. The popularity of this department is amply warranted, and it will therefore grow.

The First National, mounting as a tower of financial strength, invites additions to its army of depositors. No account is too small to receive the most careful attention. Sound business methods are reflected in the minutest details, and every one, regardless of the size of his bank account, is given utmost consideration and is treated with utmost courtesy. Seeking new business on our record.

Reviewing its history, the First National sees a future full of bright and encouraging promise.

Hospital for Animals.

Lincoln, Neb., Aug. 17.—Rover's broken leg will be treated with modern surgical methods in a dog, cat and horse hospital to be erected this fall by the humane society at a cost of $14,000.

More than 10 cities in the United States have written Supt. C. E. McClain, of the Lincoln Humane society requesting specifications of the proposed shelter.

"It will be one of the most modern animal institutions in the country," commented Mr. McClain.

Nearly every stray dog, cat, and horse will be taken care of in clean, airy, up-to-date pens and stalls in the new building. More than 250 canines can be housed at one time in the institution.

Modern operating facilities to treat the injuries of these domestic animals and experienced veterinarians are a part of the equipment of the proposed shelter. The building will be 100 by 150 feet, constructed on three and one-half acres of ground.

One side will be occupied by the hospital department, including the operating room and a suite to be used for a free clinic for all kinds of domestic animals.

The center of the structure will be two stories high, the first occupied by the administration offices and the second fitted with a five-room apartment for the caretaker. The other side of the building will be fitted with pens for dogs, feline wards, and horse stalls.

Mr. and Mrs. John Kay and daughter, Ruby, of Council Bluffs, Ia., came to Wayne Friday to visit at the Mrs. Chris. Thompson home. Mrs. Kay is a daughter of Mrs. Thompson.

and the retail traders are the first to feel the onsets of general depression and about the last to experience a return to prosperity. When hard times approach, the merchant knows it without delay. The first sign of depression that tightens money has an immediate effect on buying. Sales fall off as any merchant is bound to know. Not that he has stopped buying usually continues long after the time when caution is justified by conditions. The public is quick to practice thrift at the first sign of a change for the worse; it is just as slow to begin buying again, and that's business.

John W. O'Leary, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and vice president of the Chicago real estate company, in a recent banking institution, addressed the merchants' council, declaring that prosperity actually is here. In this he was echoed unanimously by the members of the council, men who represent mercantile interests scattered throughout the country. Mr. O'Leary made the following statement:

Those who once doubted, today are encouraged. The assurance of a generally satisfactory agricultural year is demonstrated throughout the latest crop reports and the prices prevailing for soil products.

Some of the following statements of extravagance or the wisdom of complete stoppage of purchase is giving way to a spirit of intelligent purchase.

Fundamental business conditions are good in the United States. We have a government which is striving to let business correct its own troubles.

Mr. O'Leary's reference to agricultural conditions is not extravagant or exaggerated. It is seen that the season it will be "a generally satisfactory agricultural year." The country as a whole will not produce bumper crops. That is a settled thing. Wheat was short and there will not be as much corn as was indicated a few weeks ago. Still, the clover crop is expected to be worth as much as or more than a bigger one would have brought. Likewise the corn yield will not be so low as it was. It would have sold for if the yield had been some hundreds of millions of bushels larger.

Some sections in the corn belt will have no crop at all this year. Due to drought, some fields have been abandoned to live stock already. Fortunately those areas are not large nor many. For the most part, the corn crop will be average to good. It is admitted that it will be even approximately a record, but it will be better than last year, and the prices, because of various influences, will not fall. Mr. O'Leary seems justified in saying it will be a generally satisfactory agricultural year.

As to other business conditions, it can be said that they promise well. Manufacturing, building and transportation are all thriving. The railroads are asking for an increase in freight rates, but no one expects that the lines have not recovered appreciably as they struggled back to normal with other business. The export trade is firm with a monthly balance in this country's favor of more than $200,000,000. There is nothing to worry about, not even the threatened miners' strike. There will be no strike such as could bring distress to families or to industries. The government would favor a settlement and protect the people in their businesses and in their homes.

SHORTHAND-ACCOUNTING TELEGRAPHY AND CONVENTIONAL BOOK-KEEPING BOYLES COLLEGE

Begin Here Today. Sir Dudley Glenister, suspected of the murder of his cousin, James Glenister, to obtain his title and estate, goes into a rage when Kathleen Glenister, cousin of the dead man, refuses to marry him.

Now Go on With the Story. "Thank you, my dear, but I don't think I'd better not," replied the inspector in a tone of self-negation. "Tricky mightn't like it. Besides, I can find him all right—the old blighter."

The Entry in the Case-Book. On the evening after his return to Harley Street, Doctor Witherspoon, having finished his solitary dinner, retired to his consulting room.

His meeting with Inspector Wragge at the lodge gates of Beechwood Grange on the previous day had struck a chord of memory concerning the liveliest curiosity. He had already become obsessed with the mystery of the skeleton finger, and when he recognized the doctor's kindly clergyman looking there as a Scotland Yard officer whom he had treated professionally years before, he at once guessed that he was engaged on the case.

Ignoring the clerical disguise, he had given Wragge the surprise of his life by addressing him by name, and recalling their old relations as medical adviser and patient. Immediately afterwards he had made amends by assuming that the inspector was on duty there and informing him that a shady-looking individual had just faced himself upon Sir Dudley Glenister.

He found the entry—his system of cross-indexing was the last word in method—without any trouble and he settled down to peruse it. His first glance at the length of the entry told him that the state of Inspector Wragge's nerves five years ago had demanded careful attention.

He read his own diagnosis of the symptoms with a revived interest that recalled the examination to which he had submitted Mr. Wragge. "James Wragge, Inspector Criminal Investigation Department," the page was headed. "Age 43, height 5 feet 6 in., weight 12 stone. No trace of organic disease. Appearance and pulse indicate temperate habits."

"And if," he reflected, "I had to diagnose Mr. Wragge over again I should probably have to use precisely the same words I used five years ago. He looks as fit as ever, and barring a few gray hairs not a day older. But there is a look of mental strain about his eyes."

"When I pressed him for the cause of what was complained to describe as a nervous breakdown which threatened creeping paralysis, his frank demeanor disappeared. He prevaricated and dangled with my questions till I was obliged to tell him that unless I was informed of the source of worry I could do but little to remove it."

Placing his finger between the leaves, the doctor leaned back in his chair and closed his eyes. The scene in that consulting room, now so long ago, came back to him as though it were yesterday. The hard-bitten detective officer, pressed for the cause of his trouble, had burst into tears confessing that he had been caught by a high official, holding a minor post in the government of the day, accepting a bribe for allowing a defaulting banker to escape from justice. The official accuser, whom Wragge had not named, had consented to be long before I can see your husband!" "He will be in directly. I left him in the dining room with—a man who's rather difficult to get rid of. You don't show much interest, Miss Glenister, in my present circumstances. You would be surprised to hear that I am the chief breadwinner in this humble abode—Miss Maud Blair, if you please, of the films."

Kathleen had the haziest idea of what the woman was talking about, but she made a few polite inquiries which more than enlightened her as to the nature of "Miss Blair's" occupation and the fame she had won thereby. And then a sudden intuition told her that her hostess was not only talking from vanity but to gain time—and that all the time she was listening intently.

Kathleen listened, too, and she was almost instantly rewarded by two sounds in quick succession. The first was the swish of a silk petticoat in the passage and the second was the furtive opening and shutting of the front door. Kathleen was sitting too far back in the room to obtain a full view of the person leaving the house, but she caught a glimpse of purple and blue—of a singularly attractive woman by the man's with whom, according to his wife, Mr. Simon Tricky had been engaged on the other side of the passage.

CHAPTER XI. Kathleen turned a deaf ear to Norman Slater's plea that he should accompany her to Simon Tricky's house in Brixton.

Tricky was evidently a drink-soaked reprobate, formidable possibly as a crafty rascal where money was concerned, but not the sort of ruffian who would use methods of violence. So it was that Kathleen drove to Brixton without escort, to be set down in front of the garish little villa in the middle of the afternoon. Telling the taxi-driver to wait, she rang the bell and was admitted by the maid's maid without the opposition encountered by Wragge on the previous day. She was shown into a tawdry sitting-room to the right of the narrow entrance passage, and it was not until the servant had closed the door on her that she awoke to the fact that she had neither been asked nor given her name.

The Times of a strong cigar had assailed her nostrils on entering the room, and she concluded that Mr. Tricky had observed her arrival from the room on the other side of the passage and that he would join her presently. She only hoped that he would be sober.

But five minutes passed and, neither drunk nor sober, did Mr. Simon Tricky or anyone else appear. Another five minutes passed and the door opened to admit the staid lady who had parleyed with Wragge from the doorstep the previous day. Recognitions were mutual and instantaneous. "Sally Grimes!" exclaimed Kathleen.

"Miss Maud Blair" advanced, a tentative hand ready, but dropping when no responsive sign of it being grasped was shown.

"Do sit down, Miss Glenister," she implored. "My husband told me he was expecting a lady on business, but who would have dreamed that it would be you!"

"But you were there with a sense of physical nausea she could not account for, Kathleen sank into a gaudy, plush-covered chair. "Mr. Tricky is your husband?" she gasped.

"Yes, I am quite an old married woman," was the giggled reply. "But my husband told me he was expecting a lady on business, but who would have dreamed that it would be you!"

"Kathleen ignored the braced suggestion. "Nothing but the local gossip that you were married reached me," she replied coldly. "I have not been much at Beechwood lately."

"But you were there when the crow flew over the shooting lurch," the lady of the house insinuated slyly. "That is a matter I cannot discuss with you," said Kathleen. "If it like-
