Mr. and Mrs. Julius Hurstad who were here visiting relatives, returned Monday to their home in Omaha.

W. B. Sharer of Wisner, S. D., has entered the employ of the Wayne Variety store here. Mr. Sharer was wounded in the World war while in the Black Hills and Yellowstone National park, stopped here the first of the week to visit Mrs. Shack's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Harston. At Herrick, S. D., the travelers visited Mrs. Shack's sister, Mrs. W. S. Slaughter. Mrs. Bertha Hood and mother, Mrs. Mary Wadsworth, were visiting with the latter's son and daughter in Page, Minn. and Mrs. James Simonin of Chardon, the latter a daughter of Mrs. Bertha Hood, who they drove to Page Tuesday last week and accompanied Mrs. Hood and Mrs. Wadsworth there. Next Saturday Mrs. Wadsworth and her daughter, Mrs. Mary Wadsworth, will come here and bring them home. Miss Mary Lush who has attended the funeral of Mrs. Harston, will next Saturday also to stay with her mother, Mrs. Hood, and go to school.

Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Wessell and Mrs. Wadsworth were en route to Colorado Springs, Colo., to attend the convention of the western division of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance company, arriving home Monday. The Wessells drove to Omaha to meet the Harringtons and the four went from there together. In returning Mrs. Harrington called to Wayne and Mr. Harrington stayed in Omaha until Tuesday evening when he drove here. The Harringtons left their son, John, at the Harringtons and J. W. Jones families and they took them home today. Mr. and Mrs. Wessell left their daughter Jane, Mrs. Wadsworth's sister, and their son Edward in Norfolk with Mrs. Wessell's parents. The convention was one of three in the "fraternal" circuit being attended by representatives of the company from the western coast to as far east as this state.

where she was united in marriage to P. F. Panabaker on May 24, 1922. To this union four children were born: Earl, Ralph, Mary and Lucinda. The family came to Dalton in 1916 and has since been a permanent residence the husband and four children. Mrs. Panabaker leaves her father, E. B. Chichester, of Wayne, Neb., two brothers, A. C. Chichester of Wayne, and L. W. Chichester of Dalton, and three grandchildren to mourn. All were present at the funeral. Fred Chichester, a cousin, and his wife from Chappell, and Ray Chichester from the same place, were other out-of-town relatives in attendance.

Mrs. Panabaker was one of the very highly respected women of Dalton and community. Her early training was grounded on the principle of fair dealing, loyalty to every acquaintance and for her family a love that knew no bounds. Together with these high qualities of character she possessed an ambition of a constructive nature and was known as one of the ablest managers in the community. Who misfortune visited the home of a neighbor or friend she always found her place there, ministering cheerfully and faithfully.

Her greatest desire was to know that her children were to be numbered among the best citizens of the community and before passing away had expressed her happiness that this aim had been accomplished. Mrs. Panabaker will be missed in her home, by her friends and by the community. To the bereaved goes the sympathy of the people of Dalton and vicinity.

The following are among the ones enrolling in high school from here: Leland Chambers and Florence Kilian at Wisner, Clare Buskirk at Wakefield, Georgia and Jay Sellers, Alice and Arthur Clouster at Pender.

Mrs. Geo. Buskirk won all prizes on her exhibit of poultry, having champion on her old pen, and was awarded the prize for the best and largest exhibit at the Wayne fair. Her chick won first on a basket of artificial sweet peas.

The Farmer's Union met at John N. Johnson's Thursday evening and were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Louis Gemelke. They plan a picnic in the Julius Knudsen grove on Sept. 20. Everyone is welcome and is invited to come and bring dinner.

The Ladies' Aid met with Mrs. August Meyer Wednesday with a large attendance. Quilting was done. Henry Korth was the work. They met next with Mrs. Robert Sneath. Everyone is welcome. The members plan to spend the afternoon on the 9th with Mrs. Murtien in Wakefield for a social time.

The local 338 gave a fine picnic at the Olson park west of Wisner. D. Herner extended them an invitation to the picnic Sept. 20. Cigars, cream cones, lemonade and watermelon were free. In the fat man's race with a watermelon under each arm the first prize was awarded to Geo. Buskirk. A. Olson gave a good address. The watermelon was won by the local and was one of the best ever witnessed by the writer. Many other races were had, but we cannot name the winners.

A very large crowd gathered at Rev. H. L. Borenman's church Sunday for a supper and concert in honor of his 65th year as pastor at this place. A large canopy of flowers with the figure of 25 on it was used as a decoration. A very large and fine cake was brought from a bakery and a purse of over $200 was presented him. Rev. E. Gehlke preached the sermon. It was a celebration long to be remembered by all present and especially by the honored guest. We hope he may celebrate his fiftieth anniversary with us.

Market Report

Furnished by Swanson, Gilmore & Walsh, Sioux City Stock Yards.

Sept. 9.—To a greater degree than was previously believed to be possible labor day observations interrupted the marketward movement of cattle over the country. Receipts the entire half of the week to the 11 leaders are not half so large as for the corresponding days of the previous week. The conditions stimulated operations to a marked degree and by midweek much of the previous week's heaviness had been eliminated.

Although of these promotions this week, the delivery continued to rush heavily to range arrivals. Practically no ripper corn fed was marketed, there being, however, one marked exception at this center when Tuesday produced two loads of fancy feeding steers averaging 660 pounds from the feed lot of Phil Mott, Laurel, Neb., at $14.75, the most for the week and just about the outside price obtainable on the river market at this time. Otherwise the daily assortments here and elsewhere were generally limited to ordinary and ordinary heavy grades. The top most of $7.50 to $9, with little puffed up, kinds around $6 to $7.

Packers continued to take on grass fat steers with fair freedom, but their purchases for kinds largely worth from $7 down, although as high as $5.00 and $4.00 looked for tops.

Calves all the way through the grades and fed steer mart figures unevenly steady to 50c higher for the week.

Packers and order buyers absorbed the offerings averaging 460 pounds of stock assortments this week on a strengthening basis. By midweek July 25c had been added to last week's level. Fair to good kinds cluster most thickly from $5 to $5.50. The week was productive of a few big corn fed feeder cows to $7.50, but few females were very scarce as a rule.

An appreciable amount of live hogs in the stocker and feeder trade this week. Actual advances are hard to quote, but certainly country demands were larger and dealers therefore took-hold-much more readily. A strong to 25c higher basis seems to about cover the situation for the first half of the week.

Numbers from west of the river topped at $7.85 Monday, but strictly fancy fleshy kinds might reach $8.50, which is about 50c lower than the extreme summit brought out so far this season in the sale of western feeders.

The increased activity this week also included all the range and choice kinds. Trabby and non-descript types continuing slow and showing few takers.

The advancing season is found that hot runs over the country are assuming larger proportions than was considered possible. Accordingly each market was Saturday increasing. D. H. Sellers on the river markets to maintain the crest on choice butchers up around $12.50. It seems very likely at this time that the developing bearishness has not been fully felt.

Feeding cows still reflect last week's clearing reductions in full and are moving entirely in a range of $8 to $8.50.

No Harm to Inquire.

Dr. A. H. Bixby: There is no conflict between science and religion. All the demonstrable facts of life conspire to make one reverent and obedient—to the Mighty, Mysterious Power that overshadows the infinite universe of which our own little earth is so small a part. Don't be afraid that finding out will knock some ally created into a cocked hat, or trust some preconceived dogmatic notions. To learn if this or that be so.

We arrange with a will, "How little after all we know Of what is good or ill."

Lord give us vision to discern, That we may daily live and learn.

We struggle nobly to find out Whence—spring life's hidden streams. Some things we know beyond a doubt, And there be dreams and dreams. Many who know but little keep Declaring that they know a heap.

The wise have wisdom, more or less, Conclusions based on fact. With their religion half a guess, Their science—inexact. The very best that they can do Is grope their way, like me and you.

I crave no reasoning abstruse, That has a highbrow slant, Or leaves any earthly use. For theologic cant, Christ taught the simple, righteous way For men to walk day after day.

He said: "Be good; and square; and kind. Be free from hate and strife," And not much more, that I can find, As teaching human life. He did not say that one must be A fundamentalist, not he.

AFTER EVERY MEAL

THE FLAVOR LASTS

Probably one reason for the popularity of WRIGLEY'S is that it lasts so long and returns such great dividends for so small an outlay. It keeps teeth clean, breath sweet, appetite keen, digestion good. Fresh and full-flavored always in its wax-wrapped packages.

Nature often exacts a severe penalty from those who try by drastic means to reduce fat or put on flesh. Care in diet may modify either extreme, but to attempt unnatural agencies, such as starvation, is full of peril and bodes more misery than the condition from which one wishes to escape.

President Frank O. Edgewood of the National Editorial Association advises in a communication to the local editors that no editorial should be written unless it is inspired by fixed conviction and lofty purpose. If we always waited for a profound inspiration to come along, "WHEEY" in our ears, we fear we would not write many editorials.

The number of automobile accidents is not surprising in view of the carelessness of many drivers. We have seen motorists looking away from driving, and then it is entirely up to pedestrians to look out or be crushed. The very best that may be expected of a driver is that he should be sober and that he will keep his eyes fairly well fixed in that direction.

We have been told of a man who died of his wife and young children, and left them penniless and without means of support. The trial of a woman with no capital and no fitness to make money, but with the additional responsibility of caring for helpless children, appeals with force to sympathetic people. A man who dies with a woman and her family seems to be about the meanest of walking creatures.

Labor day which came Monday, is set apart and observed in recognition of the great constructive forces of the world. Labor is not restricted to factories and mines. It is everywhere wherever things, big or little, are being accomplished. Labor is essential to success on the farm or to vocations in general, and if labor is honored, dignity and encourage work, physical or mental, or both, it will serve a wonderfully useful purpose.

The president has returned to Washington after a vacation which, though not entirely free from public duties, has given him refreshing change and recreation. The president is reported in the best of health which is an important safeguard in the strenuous business of leading the forces of government. Many problems will arise during forthcoming months, and the president will be expected to exercise sound judgment in behalf of the general welfare, and in the past he has shown off well in keeping his head and using it wisely.

Julius Caesar was a constructive leader of the Roman empire less than a hundred years before Christ, and he accomplished much in behalf of the people and the teachers of his people. Considering the time, he was really a very helpful and sensible man. When a conspiracy, carried out against him, resulted in the treacherous murder of his friend, Brutus, Caesar yielded without further resistance, exclaiming "Even thou Brutus!" After 20 years of processes, there are those who, like Brutus, profess friendship, but who, by stealth, seek an opportunity to overthrow those of whom they are enemies. Easy is a poisonous state of mind, and it does more harm to the possessor than to its object. Rankling envy burns up more human energy and creates more force than would be required, if rightly directed, to match or surpass the attainments of the one or ones prompting it.

SNORING.

We have never heard of any cure or remedy for snoring, and we are surprised that nothing has ever been accomplished. If attempted, in that direction. No one ever admits that he snores, but he knows the other fellow does if it happens to be in the same house or on the same quarter-section. Snoring is not restricted to the fat or lean, rich or poor, high or low, as we understand. It is caused by currents of air sweeping through certain narrow throat fixtures, such as the uvula and soft palate, and making them vibrate and roar. Wind cave in the Black Hills, with air coming and going, would snore if it had such appendages. We do not wish to enter into conflict with food fanciers, but we would suggest that science might well exercise itself in behalf of finding something that would make the throat hangings lie down and behave themselves during hours when everybody and everything should be asleep.

of the first edition issued, and notes it contained a proclamation for a bond issue for the Union Pacific railroad. Like any newspaper that has lived fifty years, the Wasp doubtless has had all the experiences incident to the rise of country journalism from an innocuous and apologetic proto-plasm to a prosperous, respected and self-respecting business. Fifty years ago, every little huddle had a newspaper to chronicle the local and engineer politics. Little capital was required to start, and home pride was requisitioned to keep it up. Many struggling newspaper ventures perished along the way. Survivors, like the Wasp, are no longer in the doubtful stage, and there are no essential changes in commerce and industry as the hand and postoffice. We congratulate the Wasp, and extend to it our best wishes for continued and unobstructed growth in service and usefulness.

VITAL PRINCIPLES.

The opening of the school year and the return of students to their educational endeavors remind us of the need of more emphasis on Christian principles in all the workings of such institutions. We do not mean that is essential for students to struggle with problems of evolution or of modes of baptism. We mean that the Christian principles of honesty and square dealing, one with another, with neighborly attention to spiritual values, should be stressed in the classroom and in every activity of the school. The golden rule may well be flashed, ever and anon, to influence judgment and differentiate between right and wrong. Such underlying Christian principles, encouraged in school, are quite as valuable in improving citizenship as scholastic training. The school cannot do everything in molding character, but it can do much, and if the home will do its part, which it does not always do, we can in time quiet the gloom prophet's suspicion that we are sliding backwards and getting ready for another period of so called dark ages.

COUNTY FAIR.

Next week the Wayne county fair will be held, and people will come together to inspect the different products and developments of the year in town and country. Exhibits are usually better than anticipated, and they promise to be so this year. Wayne county grows best types of horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and chickens, and they show off to advantage next week. The showing of different boys' and girls' clubs encourages hope in the future of the farm, and school exhibits which are justly given an important place, are inspirational and helpful.

A race track has been provided, and a grandstand and other structures put up to better meet the requirements of the fair. Amusement features have not been neglected, and the week promises to afford both pleasure and profit. The fair furnishes ground for comparison and discussion. It shows what people of different communities are doing and what they are accomplishing. It suggests new and improved methods of providing education and recreation, and the fair board is doing everything possible to make the annual event the success that it deserves to be.

Ads for Education.

Norfolk Daily News: New Orleans is advertising its public schools, elementary and secondary, and trying to entice children into them by means of billboards. Some of the signs read: "Your future depends on education. The public schools open on Sept. 12. The high schools open on Sept. 9." The city's newspapers have been asked to co-operate in making school attendance attractive. The local business club has a fund of about $3,000 which it uses to help needy and worthy students. Most of New Orleans' youngsters are already in school. It is the leftover group that is to be reached by the ads. This group, to be found in every community, is composed of boys and girls out of school for all sorts of reasons. Sometimes it is merely parental neglect. Sometimes it is family poverty and the desire to get the children to earning money. There are always special cases of ill health or physical disability. And there are the many kids who have just lost interest and are drifting because they do not know what they need or where to get it. There should be proper educational opportunity for every child, in the school room or outside. Getting more youngsters to attend school is a good beginning, but it does not solve the whole problem of the out-of-school child. Finding the solution to that problem is one of the biggest tasks now confronting the state. Parents, far-fare workers, parents and every such public-spirited group as these school-advertising Rotarians.

A. H. Basler Weds Irene Brueckner

Miss Irene Brueckner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Brueckner of Hoskins, and Mr. August H. Basler, a member of the church of Mr. Charles S. Basler of Hooper, were united in marriage Wednesday, Aug. 9, at high noon at the Evangelical church in Hoskins, and the ceremony was followed by a three-course dinner was served. The young couple left for Sioux City Wednesday afternoon and from there they will go to the Black Hills for two weeks. They will make their home in Hoskins and Mr. Basler will continue his work for the guarantee fund commission in Wayne. The church was decorated in pink and white for the wedding yesterday, bouquets of flowers carrying out the colors. Miss Lisetta Deck of Norfolk as maid of honor and Miss Betty Harnigfeld of Emerson as bridesmaid, attended Miss Brueckner. Henry Kieper of Wayne, cousin of the bride, and Arthur Degner of Badar, attended the bridegroom. Mrs. Anna Gamble Johnson of Wayne played Lohengrin's wedding march as the bridal party entered the church, the bride being escorted by her father, Ralph Ganake of Wayne, singing "I Love You Truly" and "The Sunshine of Your Smile" and the ceremony followed. Miss Brueckner wore ducian charms with hat to harmonize. She wore a corsage bouquet of Ophelia roses. One of her accessories was a diamond platinum bracelet, the gift of the bridegroom. The bride's attendants wore pale blue crepe. The bridegroom's suit was of blue serge and his gift from the bride was a pair of beautifully engraved white gold cuff links. Decorations at the Brueckner home were also in pink and white for the reception. Mr. Basler has been in Wayne for about two years doing work for the guarantee fund commission. Mrs.

Second Story Wall of Building Started

Carpenters last week finished putting up the forms under the second floor of the new training school building at the Wayne State Teachers College, and masons started work Monday on the brick work of the second floor wall. After the wall has been raised to a height of three feet the steel work for the second floor will be laid and concrete will be poured. It is planned that work will be finished to the second floor entrances this week. An elevator is being used to hoist material to the second floor. A crew of about twenty-four men are at work and next week when the concrete is poured others will work and the construction will go forward rapidly.

A truck will be used to bring loose stone for the entrances of the building.

Former Resident Marries in Paris

Mr. James T. Wachob of Omaha, former Wayne resident, and Mrs. Margaret Hynes of Omaha, were married at the American church in Paris Saturday. They will go to southern France for a trip and will be at home in Omaha at the St. Regis apartments after Nov. 1.

The Omaha Bee tells of the bridal couple as follows:

Mrs. Hynes, accompanied by her son, William, went abroad early this summer. They joined the Ross party in July and with him toured Italy and Switzerland. Her son returned home two weeks ago and is now in the east, where he will enter Yale this fall. Upon his departure Mrs. Wachob went to Paris. Wachob left Omaha two weeks ago.

Both Mrs. Hynes and Mr. Wachob are well known in Omaha, where they occupy prominent social positions. Mrs. Hynes was head of the women's division of the community chest drive for four funds in 1923 and has been active in other civic affairs. She was divorced from William J. Hynes, Omaha grain man, in 1922.

Nature at Her Grandest.

Minneapolis Journal: An American does not really need to go outside his own country, which is truly God's country, to get all the thrills that nature at her grandest or most beautiful can supply. Niagara, the great lakes, the Mississippi river, the great plains along the border between the two Dakotas, Mt. Rainier from a distance on a clear evening, the Yosemite, Colorado, the grand canyon of the Colorado, what more in the way of natural spectacle can a mortal take this side of paradise ask?

Banister-Hoskins.

Mr. Dick Banister, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Banister of Wayne, and Miss Franchon Hoskins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hoskins of Wayne, were married last Thursday, Sept. 3, by Judge Bryant at Hartington. They returned to Wayne to make their home.

Far From Prosperity.

Sioux Falls Argus-Leader: In the first six months of this year, the people of South Dakota paid $7,000,000 for new cars and about 85 per cent of them were bought for cash. During the month of July, our people expended about $1,600,000 for gasoline. This doesn't present much of a picture of hard times.

A QUEEN'S DELICACY

ONCE all the court gallants, at world is to be placed on the market, the bidding of Queen Victoria went out in search of handsome suitors for the queen's table. But though the queen had offered a reward in money and promised many court favors to the hero who would bring in the precious fruit none was forthcoming. At that time fresh fruits were very difficult to obtain out of season and therefore, because it grew only in the tropics, and because of its poor shipping and ripening qualities, was held to be a curiosity that no one would buy. Now this most famous fruit in the most parts in the world is to be placed on the market, the bidding of Queen Victoria went out in search of handsome suitors for the queen's table. The trees are being grown in the West Indies, the Canal Zone and in a reward in money and promised many court favors to the hero who would bring in the precious fruit none was forthcoming. At that time fresh fruits were very difficult to obtain out of season and therefore, because it grew only in the tropics, and because of its poor shipping and ripening qualities, was held to be a curiosity that no one would buy. Ford "It Certainly Is a Smart-looking Car" That's what everyone has to say who has seen the latest Ford cars. That such attractive motor cars could be offered without the slightest increase in prices, seemed incredible to a public long familiar with Ford values. Yet enthusiasm for the smart new appearance can never supersede the fact that it is the quality of materials and workmanship that has made the Ford the world's leading custom-built value. New beauty has not crowded out traditional Ford reliability. The very volume of Ford output demands absolute accuracy of every working part. The steady flow of production is dependent upon parts fitting together perfectly; inaccuracies would interrupt and delay assembly. And to this precision must be largely credited the uniformly fine performance and freedom from trouble of all Ford cars. Closed cars now shown in color are unusually pleasing; new and finer upholstery gives an artistic luxury to the cars. Bright nickel radiators face the closed cars and nicked headlamp rims are on all types. The fenders are larger and longer, and the running boards are wider. Comfort is increased by the cars' lower center of gravity, by the low, deep, wide seats, by the added foot room, and by many other refinements that contribute to your ease, convenience and safety. Here is the ideal car for a woman's personal use—good-looking, trustworthy, easy to drive, and inexpensive to maintain. Here, too, is a practical car for any family—that every member of the family can enjoy. Well, Here We Are. William Allen White in Emporia, Kan., Dr. Edward C. Hays, assistant professor of Anesthesiology in the University of Pennsylvania, has just translated some tablets written 2000 B. C. by members of the race that built the tower of Babel. These tablets, the only books they ever had in those distant days, were "dug up" from a long-buried school library in Nippur on the Euphrates." They deal with accounts of creation, a question which apparently proved as disturbing then as now. There are several theories even before "Moses smote the water." This story attests Moses and Genesis by 5 hundred years and it forecasts modern evolution thus:

"The people walked with their four limbs upon the ground. They ate grass with their mouths like sheep. They drank water from the ditches." Well, all right; every man is entitled to his own guess. The point is here we are; no matter how we got here. Man is on the earth. He can't

Jump off - The best he can do is to be as decent as he can, and trust in God for the next world. Probably it will be better than this one, and whether we were made of mud or monkeys we are in for it and should make the best of it.

Why Mr. Coolidge Is Popular. President of Reviews - It is no wonder. He is using the power of government to rescue the people from the excruciations and miseries of an undue exercise of government power. He has assured us that he would do his best to reduce the weight high intelligible burden of war taxation that survives in a period of postwar peace. He has agreed to, unashamedly, to put forth our best efforts - through industry, personal and family thrift, and the exercise of private initiative in economic matters - to restore a high average of general prosperity. There are many evidences that this salutary advice has been taken, with excellent results. There has been discovered in Calvin Coolidge a genius for plain common sense. The country has undoubtedly come to feel strong confidence in his purposes and the trend of his convictions. All this is not because Mr. Coolidge is a down pat Yankee and a republican in politics. He might have been a democrat from Arkansas and shown the same shrewd qualities of cautious, well balanced judgment.

Yet Lives to Become Flower of Foo Chow In America

WHEN she was two months old, her parents, suddenly realizing that they had forgotten to have her betrothed, as is the Chinese custom, buried her alive in the swamp-land of the Fukien province. That American missionaries heard her crying and rescued her, is the story which is called, in finishing a course in kindergarten work in the United States, and she is going back to the land of her fathers to teach the gospel of Christianity. It is a native land she hopes to bring a ray of light to other children who may face the horror she faced when an infant. "They need me over there," she says, "and though my heart is in America, I must go back to my people, and carry to them a message they so badly need."

Ak-Sar-Ben Time is Here.

September 12th begins the racing season of the Ak-Sar-Ben fall festival, September 12th to October 10th. Don't forget the dates!

Ak-Sar-Ben is to be held in the central west and especially in Nebraska and Iowa. Every year thousands upon thousands journey to the state city to make merry in the King's Domain.

This year the American Legion National Convention will be in session during the fall festival and everything is shaping itself to show the guests the "time of their lives."

Ak-Sar-Ben has been a great factor in the development of chess and confidence as far as the western prairie winds will carry them.

The fall racing program opens September 12th with as fine an array of horses as has ever been assembled at any American track. Over 500 horses will participate in these running races and there will be seven races daily, rain or shine, except Sundays and Tuesday, October 6th which is the American Legion parade day.

The carnival festivities open September 20th and close October 10th. The great Snapp Bros. Exposition Shows will have twenty-five car attractions with two free attractions. Matinee, the diving window who dives from a 100 foot tower into four feet of water, will be a feature worth coming to see.

many miles to see.

The electric parade will be held Wednesday, Oct. 7th and will be by far the greatest spectacle ever witnessed by AK-Sar-Ben visitors in the automobile to set in.

parade is based almost entirely on the American Legion constitution and activities and will be very elaborate and educational to say the least. So it's on to Omaha this fall!

Begin Here Today.

Sir Dudley Glenister is suspected of murder when a crowd drops a splayed finger in the midst of a picnic party on his estate. He asks Kathleen, Kathleen's niece. Two women to marry him, to ally suspicion. When she refuses he goes into a rage and suffers a beating at the hands of Norman Slater, Kathleen's niece. Two women are being prepared as persons for the lovers when Mrs. Simon Trickey calls upon Sir Dudley.

Now Go On With The Story.

"Sir Dudley Glenister at home," she asked, accentuating the mimicking "Sir" which had made her business to cultivate.

The old servant's eyes ranged critically over the visitor's face and over her sash, brand-new mourning. But there was no sign of recognition in his survey.

"I think he came in a short time ago, madam."

The visitor produced a card, its black edge eloquent of the deepest woe.

"Will you give him that, please. You might say that it is very important. I bring him some news that will interest him."

"With a gesture the butler invited 'Miss Maud Blair' into the hall and begged her to wait while he ascertained if his master was visible. — He was gone some little time, but when he returned it was with the air of the servant whose master's friend is in trouble."

"Sir Dudley will see you, madam," he announced.

The baronet was standing on the hearth with his back to the logs. He held the card twist finger and thumb and he wore a puzzled expression.

"Doesn't the pleasure—?" he was beginning lamely, when his visitor cut him short.

"You haven't," she chipped in briskly. "Unless you've seen me on the pictures. I always use my professional name out of doors, but in private life I am Mrs. Simon Trickey."

The baronet's manner stiffened. "The devil you are?" was his exclamation.

"Do you want to know, Mrs. Trickey? I should have kicked your husband out of this room the other day if he had not taken himself off."

"Well, replied the cinema actress sweetly, 'you'll have to kick me now if you feel that way. I came to inform you that Sir Simon is dead.'"

Sir Dudley shifted a leg. He failed to keep a most unholily joy in his countenance. "What considerate of you," he murmured.

"I also came to ask you," the widow proceeded coolly, "if you intend to continue the mourning. I have been making him. I earn good money at present, but you never know, you know."

Sir Dudley had no ready answer to the demand. He glared at the fascinating attractive woman who was berating him.

"Your cheek is simply colossal. I paid your husband handsomely for the slight increase the mourning rather than the time when he was enlarging his demands for leaving this world it is no affair of mine."

The visitor would much have preferred to be called "Miss Blair." In fact at that moment she was feeling the need of the camera man. How would she could have "registered" triumph on her impudent face.

"Would you be surprised to hear," she fired her shot, "that my poor Simon left, in the form of a diary, a written record of the services he rendered to you? It describes his two journeys to America with the papers with dates and all complete. Scotland Yard would like to see that diary, Sir Dudley. And my husband told me one or two little things which he thought would be useful to the tea-inquiring about that finger."

The owner of Beechwood Grange forced a laugh, but she admitted that she had received a nasty jolt.

"Then you have a better case than I thought you had," he said. "But it is a case for a bargain rather than for threats, Mrs. Trickey. Under no circumstances shall I continue the annuity your husband has enjoyed. But if you care to register me this precious diary I will make you a fair offer for it—or its merits. I can estimate its value and my offer will bring what Simon committed to paper."

The fair visitor raised no objection. On the contrary she received the proposition graciously. She turned to whom a lump sum down has a far greater appeal than periodical payments.

"Will you suit me all right," she replied. "Trickey was such a liar that I wouldn't believe it myself. If every line of it didn't seem capable of proof, I have read it myself, you see. You would be wise to buy it, I think. When you have burned the thing, if you can find enough gold which you would have me locked up for libel or blackmail or something."

Sir Dudley bowed with mock po-teness. "That point had not altogether escaped me," he rejoined. "Then I may expect you to bring me this interesting volume of reminiscences at an early date."

He failed to keep a hint of experience from his voice as he added the question. The lady glanced through the windows across the park to the south of the silent woods beyond. A shudder shook the trained grace of her tenuous body.

"This place gives me the hump. I'll send you the diary by registered post."

Sir Dudley raised his eyebrows. "That implies great confidence in me," he declared. "What if I burn the thing and never give you a halfpenny?"

"You wouldn't dare," was the impudent rejoinder. "I shall take a copy before I post it. That would be enough to make the whole subject for you, even if it wasn't sufficient to shove you in the dock."

"I shall watch the postman," said Sir Dudley grimly.

Without any pretense at formal leave-taking, Mrs. Simon Trickey turned herself to the railway station. A slow train brought her to London and in due course, tired but purposeful, she entered Number 16 Lincoln Road, Brighton. She let herself in with her latch key.

Passing into the dining room where Mr. Trickey had so recently given up the ghost, she took a bunch of keys from her pocket and opened an initial-sheraton bureau. A moment later she opened a drawer and found it empty.

"She got herself under control at last," she thought. "I'll write to her that was a rotten excuse she made for coming back the day Simon turned up—her—oh—writing her beauty-need."

A prowling taxi, routed out of the Brighton Road, carried the wrathful young woman to Cecil Mansions. She rang the bell of Mrs. Coningsby's luxurious flat, and brushing aside the servant who opened to her, burst into the drawing room. Mrs. Coningsby rose from a couch by the fire and eyed the intruder not altogether kindly.

"Whatever is the matter, Maud?" she exclaimed. "You might have a little consideration for my poor nerves."

"Matter?" shrilled the actress. "Nerves? What about my nerves, you awful lot! I've come for the diary you sneaked out of Simon's bureau the day he died."

"My dear Maud, you are raving. I would advise you to get a diary and certainly haven't sneaked one, as you so elegantly put it."

"Miss Maud Blair's limited intelligence struggles with the problem of how much truth there is in this. She recognized that she might have been rash in preferring an accusatory letter to the opportunity which her sister-in-law had had. She would have to beat a retreat with what grace she could.

"It must have been that beastly, Gladys. No one else had a chance. I'll go home and talk her with it as soon as she comes in."

After her visitor's departure Mrs. Coningsby sank down on the couch and murmured to herself with a gasp: "I wish I could tell her where the diary is," she sighed.

CHAPTER XVI

Mrs. Coningsby was a late riser. It was therefore with annoyed surprise that she heard the warning tinkle of the bell a few minutes after the ornate French clock on her mantelpiece had struck noon.

A minute later her maid came to her and announced that Sir Dudley Glenister was in the drawing room. When she entered that apartment a few black touches with ornate pigments and a moderate use of the powder-puff had thoroughly justified her visitor's remark:

"By Jove! Viv, how well you are looking!"

Mrs. Coningsby waved the baronet to a chair and subsided on to the recently vacated sofa.

"You didn't come here to flatter me," she said.

"Well, hardly," Sir Dudley laughed. "I came to see if you really meant the promise you made to me at a recent party, you said if I got into a tight place you might be able to help."

"Things have taken a wrong turn."

"As yet not definitely, but I am getting the jumps. That vindictive little devil, Kathleen, is waiting her chance and she narrowly missed a knock-out. I will begin by requesting that I did not murder my cousin George."

Mrs. Coningsby's lip curled. "Go on, old boy," she said.

"I had in my city office," Sir Dudley proceeded, "a confidential clerk who did odd jobs for me."

An Empty Trap.

Lincoln Journal: The anthracite owners counted on their ability to get the country rolled up in their favor. The demands of Mr. Lewis' "labor trust." Mr. Lewis' men miller on the country to get excited over an anthracite famine to the point of demanding coal even at the cost of high miner's wages.
What the combatants actually find themselves facing is a public enemy wishing a plague on both their heads and calmly resolved not to pull chestnuts for either party. The public is not only mindful of the level of anthracite wages, but has become critical of the increment which anthracite owners—mostly railroads—have appropriated to their anthracite lands on the basis of monopoly coal prices.
Such a situation is new under the sun and to both the upper and nether millstones of anthracite this refusal of the consumer to be ground in between must be extremely disconcerting. Our prediction is that the parties to this fight will find a chance to call it a draw before the public has time to get much blacker in the face.

Auction Sale of 50 HEAD OF HOLSTEINS

Tuesday, Sept. 15

Beginning at 12 o'clock.

On the above date we will sell at our home place on the Paul Nelson farm, located 5 miles north and 3/2 miles west of Pilger, 7 miles south and 2 1/2 east of Winside, 11 miles south and 5 1/2 miles west of Wayne, 8 miles north and 4 1/2 miles east of Stanton, the following described Holstein cows, heifers, bulls and calves:

21 head of Holstein cows—some of these cows are fresh now and most of the balance will be fresh this fall; 4 two-year-old heifers, due to freshen soon; 8 yearling heifers; 3 Holstein yearling bulls, good ones; 3 Holstein bull calves, good ones; 10 yearling steers; 1 two-year-old steer; 1 three-year-old herd bull—a purebred bull sired by a bull whose dam produced 35 pounds of butter in seven days. The dam of this three-year-old bull produced 31 pounds of butter in seven days.

A Word about the offering
These Holsteins have all been bred and raised by us and we have been very careful in our selection and in the culling of the cows. At this time we are offering you a selection of cows of which we are extremely proud and we can assure you that each and every one is a producer. Remember! We are selling practically our entire herd. Every cow is practically a purebred, although we have not kept up any registration. We have used purebred Holstein bulls for years and if you will come here sale day we can show you the results of careful selection and judicious crossing. These cows will be tuberculin tested and sold under a test.

Will also sell some Alfalfa Hay.

Free Lunch at 11:30.

Autumn Millinery

Stresses the Importance of Individual Type with Hats Large and Small

The first hats of fall show a delightful versatility in the matter of size and style. So that if the large hat is the most successful for one's particular type—the large hat is to be chosen. But though the mode shows this obliging spirit her preference is really for the small close hat. And here it is in any number of smart new versions.

Velours is the Favored Fabric.

It almost seems as though the felt hat—beloved for so long is about to give place to the small smart hat of velours. The velours of this fall is not the velours we have been familiar with but a lovely lustrous, silky fabric as soft as velvet. Its beautiful nature makes the exquisite colorings perfectly so as to bring out their richness and jewel-like quality. Purple, pansy, heliotrope, coach shell, yellow, green and red are the shades most often seen, though soft wood tones and beige are favored too.

Some have the brims bound with velvet, but most of these hats are cut at the center. The finest of brims roll softly from the face or droop becomingly. Sometimes they are caught up at the side with a charming line.

The velours itself is most often the medium of these fetching little hats. Cut in flower-like ornaments of geometrical designs it is applied about the collapsible crowns or placed at the side.

The Collapsible Crown.

Many of the smartest hats have the soft collapsible crowns so long familiar in hats from France. They have an easy look that adds to the charm of the entire hat. Particularly is this noticeable in the larger hats. Some of these have wide graceful brims of velvet of bengaline—with just an artfully posed flower or twisted circle of ribbon for trimming.

Small Hats of Velvet.

Tiny little hats with collapsible crowns and wee up-turned or rolling brims are a fetching complement to the fall coat or suit. They fit the head so snugly and have so trim and tailored a look that discriminating women are certain to welcome the addition of one or more hats of this sort to the fall wardrobe.

These, too, are in deep rich colors—and with these as with the velours hats the material of which the hat is fashioned serves as trimming oftener than not. Sometimes however one notes the flash of a rhinestone pin or buckle or the glow of a colorful flower.

Hats for Formal Occasions.

In the realm of the picture hats are graceful shapes with drooping brims that seem to bend to the weight of a rich-hued flower or lovely trailing feather. These hats are of satin, velvet or lace. Sometimes the crown is of velvet—the brim of lace that lends its becoming transparency with special charm to hats of this sort.

Then for the debutante come little cap-like hats of gold or silver lace. Fitting the head snugly—with fetching flanges of lace and the gleam of a jeweled pin or colorful flower for ornament. Many of these tiny hats have accompanying scarf made of the velvet or lace that makes the hat. These are charming for young girls.

Hats for Sports Wear.

The felt hat is not forgotten for all that fashion stresses the smartness of velours so strongly and it appears in new interpretations for fall and winter. Small and close—as hats of this sort are apt to be—with trimmings of ribbon—in bands, cocades and novel ornaments. Embroideries, too, are used lending a brilliant note of color with decided effect. The colorings are clear and vivid or blend to the pastel or crayon tones so much approved. Altogether this promises to be a millinery season singularly free from prejudices in the matter of size—but very particular about the fabric chosen.

Hat and Scarf Sets for Sports.

Among the most attractive of millinery fashions for fall are the small, close-fitting hats of fabric, with scarfs to match. These are especially smart for sports wear and may be chosen in the vivid shades so much approved for this type of apparel. Duvetyn and velvet are used for these occasions with embroideries or appliques in contrasting colors.

The hats may be in tam effect or have soft crush crowns and snug little brims that roll back becomingly from the face or turn down demurely.

Millinery Modes for Children.

There is a youthful jauntiness about the hats designed for children that is charming. Quaint adaptations of grown-up fashions—they are suited to every individual type.

Smart hats of velvet in Tam style are topped with pom-poms of silk—these are for the younger lass. Then for sister—more grown-up—come snug little hats of velours in the same jewel-like colors that are so strongly favored for mother or big sister. They are trimmed with pearls, rabbits, ear-bows of the velour. Or the hat may be embroidered in silk or worsted in designs and colors that blend with the rich shades of the velours.

Velvet Hats Are for Dress-up.

Very charming are these new hats of velvet trimmed with bows and ornaments of gros grain ribbon or streamers and clusters of colorful flowers. They are a lovely frame for youthful faces. The colors are clear and bright—green, garnet, rose, as well as navy blue and black.

A very practical and attractive fashion is this of having hats made up in the fabric preferred for top coats. For in this way a delightfully complete costume is assured. Some of these hats are of pole cloth—others of soft plaid fabrics or duvetyn. Made with sectional crowns and becoming rolling brims, they are trimmed with ribbon streamers in colors to match or contrast with the hat.

Correct Accessories.

Since so much of the success of the outfit depends on the choices of accessories the woman who regards every detail of her costume as important will find much that is interesting in these suggestions for fall.

First of all there is the daintiest of neckwear. And perhaps of all the accessories it contributes most to the success of the costume. There are frilly collars and jabots of net and lace with pleated cuffs to match. Some are run through with narrow ribbons in black or color. Others with fast-forward collars and plain vesper fronts are of tucked net set with insertion in Valenciennes tulle—these are for the silk or cloth frock. Then there are the more tailored styles of linen—the collars flat and rather stiff—but very youthful with their "choir-boy" lines. There have still starched cuffs that fasten with links. Some very smart starched sets with the rounding collars are of figured fabrics—chiffons, gingham or printed linen.

Then, for the more dress-up frock one chooses lovely graceful collars with soft jabots of Georgette crepe or chiffon. These are in grey, beige or delicate pastel tints.

The Correct Gloves for Fall.

The "tailored woman" chooses swagger gloves of chamois skin—in two clasp or pull-on style. These are often stitched by hand in black tints. Others in self color have "arrow heads" on the back.

Fascinating new versions of the gauntlet glove brings charming new elaborations in the way of turned back cuffs—elaborately embroidered or appliqued. These are of fine kid in all the varied colors to harmonize or contrast with the smart new fall shades.

Smart New Hand-bags.

Stunning flat bags of lizard skin in shining "patent" effects are brilliant in color. Some in green, others in yellow, brown or the rich purple tones so prominent in fall fashions. Good-looking pouch shaped bags of vachette are mounted in silver or gold-colored metal. They are very roomy and contain mirrors, change purses and toilet accessories.

Lovely bags of silk in satin-striped or moire effect are set with medallions of petit point. These have beautiful filigreed mountings. Other silk bags in flat envelope style are embroidered in graceful floral designs or set with bits of colorful tulle.

Colorful bouterones are Lovely.

Great gorgeous flowers or tiny clusters of field posies to give a brilliant color note to a costume that seems a bit somber. Designed in a variety that makes it possible to accent any color scheme.

Colorful Silken Scarfs.

The scarf is still important in fashion this season and many lovely new ones are presented. Some are of printed silk, bordered with contrasting fabric, others are of chiffon weighted with heavy silken fringes. Some very attractive scarfs are made of fur and fit closely about the neck. These have long, graceful ends of chiffon that tie in a soft bow. Caracul, leopard and fish are the furs most often used for these.

The scarf is still important an accessory of a continued fashion. Particula when the scarf and costume are made of harmonizing, or the same fabric. In this way the material that makes the dress is often used with bright embroideries or appliques in bands or borders.

Beauty Aids.

At the close of summer with its vigorous out-door activities the careful woman pauses to take stock of the ravages wind and sun have exacted of even the most "peaches and cream" complexion. For the demands of the fall and winter season make it imperative to possess a skin as clear and faultless as care and the selection of the proper beauty requisites will make it.

Cleansing Creams for the Face.

For cleansing it is best to choose a "light" workable cream with an oily base. There are many such to choose—some women prefer the various theatrical creams for this purpose, though both oils are excellent. These should be applied liberally and wiped away with soft tissues that are to be chosen in different sizes. Then the face should be thoroughly re-cleaned again and after the second cleansing with hazel or one of the astringent lotions applied. This closes the pores and imparts a pleasant "glow" to the complexion.

Vaseline Cream and Cosmetics.

After the face has been cleansed it is well to rub some good vaseline cream deep into the skin. This gives an excellent base for make-up and does away with the drying effects of powder-and-rouge.

In the selection of powder special care should be taken to choose a tint that blends well with one's skin. Nearly all powders come in brunnets, flesh deep pink to the skin. Many men mix their own powders from two or more of these "standard" shades. Thus two boxes of flesh color and one of brunnets make a soft creamy-pink powder—excellent for the blonde. The brunettes would reverse this with one box of flesh-colored powder to two of brunette. For the girls with Titian hair one box each of flesh brunnets and white make a clear pretty tint that blends with the natural complexion.

Rouges now-a-days run such a rainbow list of colors that every individual type may be provided for.

Lip sticks, too, are imported in shades. The orange colored sticks "kiss-proof," as they are called are ideal for certain types. Then there are the deeper reds imported from France and to be had in gold-colored containers, and in delicate shades.

Never neglect to apply a softening lotion to the hands after washing them. There are creamy lotions with an almond meal base, "cucumber" lotions that are readily absorbed into the skin and sweet scented liquid creams.

Perfumes and Toilet Waters.

Every woman knows the charm and allure of perfumes. And perhaps never before have there been so fascinating—both in scent and in their certain types. Then there are the deeper reds imported from France and to be had in gold-colored containers, and in delicate shades.

Never neglect to apply a softening lotion to the hands after washing them. There are creamy lotions with an almond meal base, "cucumber" lotions that are readily absorbed into the skin and sweet scented liquid creams.

From England come perfumes from Loris and Atkinson. Perfumers here send rare scents compounded of flowers or delicious blends of exotic fragrances.

Business.

Slout City Journal: The business outlook is better week by week. There has been a steady gain in the various lines for several months, with few losses noted. Failures have been reported, but there never has been a time, however prosperous, when that did not obtain. Failures, as The Journal has undertaken to explain hitherto, are due oftentimes to other things than the economic situation itself. One business fails when it has good a chance to succeed as another that survives. Failures—and for that matter successes—are due to the character of the business personnel more frequently than to a lack of demand for goods or service.

Notable indications of the past week that business is getting better right along are many. The most impressive in the middle west area is the fact that crops are better on the average than they have been for some years. Corn especially is far ahead of the last two seasons. Early maturing has quite eliminated the frost danger and has saved the sections injured by the drought, the yield will be satisfactory. Some regions average a higher yield per acre than for many years. Incidentally, corn is expected to command a high price. Old corn is still quoted at a satisfactory figure. The wheat shortage will in-

Fashion Decries Millinery that fits every personality and suits every occasion

The small pirate shape is especially favored for the miss with bobbed hair, and large drooping brims are most attractive for the matron or miss who can wear this style. Other models have brims that are turned up, turned down, slashed or rolled. With such a variety of chic types each woman and girl can be fitted with a style that best fits her personality.

In materials and colors fashion also favors an attractive array. Lyons velvets, gleaming panne, hatter's plush and soft velours in black, wood, henna, sand, pencil blue and almond green are made up in the stylish models.

Our fall showing is now very complete and we invite you to see it. We have the well known Gage tailored hats.

In rich fabrics and luxurious furs, The MODE costumes her Actors in the PLAY of fashions for fall and Winter

With the new season comes a note of elaboration a new depth and richness of color to the mode. The definite change—the silhouette marks the transition from summer to fall and winter fashions.

The past season has accustomed us to the flaring line and this is emphasized again with the introduction of these new modes—Only now the flare appears in the back as well as in the front. This, indeed, may be considered the dominant change—the influence most strongly felt in women's apparel.

Tailored Frocks for Daytime
The importance of the tailored frock for early fall is stressed. Particularly smart are the styles just launched. Their effect is simplicity, but to the initiated a fine skill is evident in the cut and fitting of these frocks.

They are beltless, but those that are belted tie with the narrowest of belts. The flare is often present—suggested either with insets of pleating or skirts. Sometimes the skirt flares all around. Again in the front—but oftentimes the back flares.

Twills, reps, and fine cord weaves are the favored fabrics. Some of the smartest frocks are of these materials in checks, woven in self color. Navy blue is very strong with green, doe and brown shades close in favor. An occasional frock suggests the bohemian—either in the placing of its trimming or in the aviator cut. Collars and cuffs are of white satin or linen, or of the fabric stitched and embroidered.

Afternoon Frocks Are Elaborate
Very new and unusual are the garnitures of the frocks designed for afternoon. These frocks are of cloth, or silk, when of the latter they are preferably of satin. The wool materials favored are the sheer wools, rich and supple. In some they are charmingly adapted to the intricate cutting and draping of frocks of this type.

Rich bands of embroidery are applied to emphasize the flaring grace of these frocks. Appliques of leather, tinted or gilded are combined with wool and silk embroideries. They have definitely forsaken the round or bateau line and give their allegiance to the high neck or the "Paris" just presented. This neck line is a deep "V" as the name suggests, but departs from the familiar neckline of this sort by extending to the waistline—many times with a wide border of lace or contrasting fabric.

The high neckline may hug the neck closely or be by fitting snugly at the back produce an effect of height. In frocks for afternoon navy blue is also promised much vogue. Green, and the brown tones also share in favor.

The mode in whimsical mood prefers to give her continued favor to the lighter fabrics in fashioning the frock for evening. So Goggette, crepe, crepe Romaine and chiffon are seen most often. Occasionally one finds the traditional frock of heavy gleaming metal cloth—glowing in color and rich in texture. But the palm goes to the airy type of frock—Flareless Skirts Are Angered!

Perhaps the preference is explained by the delightful way in which these fabrics take the lovely colors that are smartest for the fashions of fall and winter. All the flower shades are approved—cyclamen, orchid, pansy. Indeed all the shades that verge on purple and blue at special place. Green, red and pink follow close in fashion's regard.

For trimming—embroideries, sequins, rhinestones are used. But most often the fabric itself is the garniture. It falls in graceful panels, is set in folds or fan-like platings, giving the lovely, fluting flare characteristic of all new fashions. Fur and again fur, is the slogan of the mode in designing winter's coat fashions. In high collars, deep narrow cuffs—in panels or godets on the skirt or making an entire section of the skirt at front or back—it blends its rich texture with the fabric. The lovely colorings match or contrast with the smart new colors.

The favored fabrics are the twills and the lightly piled materials. Green, some grey, browns and black are colors most often used. Mustard natural or dyed is used as trimming. Such summer-creams, leopard, and skunk are also used with distinctive effect.

In coats as well as in dresses the flare is given prominence. The effect is obtained with godets, circular insets and pleats. Collars are rolling and somewhat full—or, more often high and rather close. Sleeves are usually tight and when fullness does appear it is gathered closely into a narrow cuff-fitting snugly at the wrist.

The Suits in Its New Guise
Fall and favor give scant attention to the ensemble suit. Occasionally it appears, it is true. But most often the suit with a long coat and separate skirt is favored. For these twills—reps and poplins and the lighter piled fabrics are chosen. Colors are much the same as those approved for the frocks.

The Mode in Resume
Altogether the new season presents a surprising allegiance to a single fashion theme—the flare in some guise. Though the straight simple line so long in vogue continues to be presented with some slight variations.

Business.
crease the demand for corn, and majority opinion holds that the heavier grain will maintain its present price practically without change—unless it goes higher.

Better corn crops everywhere, higher prices for live stock and a recovery of the farmer's dollar—now quoted at about 97 cents—give assurance of a stronger buying power in all markets. It is because of the agricultural recovery that industry today is in such a healthy condition. The demand for goods has increased enormously in the last six months. Merchants have had increased sales all summer as compared to last season. Trade has been good, and is being an improvement which is not surprising. Business is going forward.

The reports of many class I railroads on their net operating income show a remarkable improvement in transportation. Profits have been heavier and the service has been more satisfactory than it had been for years. New records have been made in the handling of freight shipments. Equipment has not been enlarged in proportion to the increased business, but the lines have met the demands for transportation apparently with ease. Better management explains that.

Figures on the foreign trade are encouraging, showing as they do an enormous increase of close to $1,000,000,000 over the previous fiscal year. Imports are more voluminous than they have been for many years. Meanwhile the export trade has grown rapidly. The United States is both buying and selling more than in pre-war days. The foreign trade is not so heavy as it was at one time during the world war, but the situation then was far from normal. Consequently the best comparison to be had is one considering the present activity and that before the war started.

kets where the surplus may be sold. The rest of the world is recovering at last from its lethargy produced by the war, and the United States is in the strongest position of all countries both to buy and to sell. Business, both domestic and foreign, is expected to continue on the upgrade henceforth without interruption.

Charming whimsical adaptations of grown-up fashions are these for the modern boy and girl.

The really "party" frocks are of chiffon or Georgette, and flow like they are in their charming colors and styles.

These have broad ribbons and bright emblems. This is the traditional costume for the school girls and its practicality and smartness explain its popularity.

For occasions just a bit dress up there are crisp frocks of tulle. These are often ruffled or multi-colored with bands of wide embroidery.

Here too are little dresses of crepe de chine—many all made by hand with the most exquisite details of garniture that mark them the product of skilled needlework. These are to be chosen in lively pastel colorings.

The most attractive little set may be chosen this season, the coat and hat matching and producing a most harmonious and attractive ensemble.

To be correctly shod is of prime importance to the woman who chooses every detail of her costume with the same fine care that she gives to the selection of her frock. So this season she looks to it that the style complements perfectly the type of costume she is wearing and that the leathers, too, accord with the style.

Shoes for Daytime Wear. Fashion decrees that the strap slipper is the thing and though her favor is so single hearted there need be no lack of variety in the selection. For "strap slipper" is a term that admits of a great many interpretations.

For instance, there are strap slippers that feature with an intricate lace or intricate work of straps—others content with a single strap buckle or button at the side.

Others are particularly smart with the more tailored type of costume. Then for the more formal afternoon frock one chooses slippers with greater intricacy of detail. Pat-

Brilliant rhinestones flash from the buckles on slender slippers of satin. A new note is the high close quarter that fits snugly up over the back of the foot to a point some four inches from the base of the natural heel.

Leathers and Materials in Vogue. Fashion employs nearly every leather in designing the new shoes. Particularly effective is the use of alligator with patent leather—Suede, too, is much in use—often dyed in lovely pastel colors and when shoes of this sort are chosen they are worn with history to match.

The American Accent in MEN'S AUTUMN CLOTHES.

As far as changes in styles in men's clothes for fall are concerned, there are radical differences between those worn last spring and those made for this current season. Probably the most widely noted difference is the shaping of clothes to adhere more closely to the lines of the body—clothes that give the average wearer that athletic look. In other words the mode is a bit more body tracing than heretofore.

That means there is a decided variation in the modeling lines from those of six months ago. Coats are, for the most part, along wedge-shaped lines with ample trousers and broad lapels, fairly short coats and waist effects. The 18-inch trouser bottoms seem to be best liked by the young fellows. These taper from a 19-inch knee. Heretofore, some trousers were made as wide as 22 inches at the bottom, but, of course, these were rather freakish and gave the appearance of sailor's pants—when waives in the breeze.

Fun to Darker Colors.
As for colors, there is a general tendency to a gradual return of darker shades. This does not mean that the lighter shades worn so extensively last spring and summer will be discarded entirely. It is true that the makers were quite revolutionary in introducing these "ice cream" tones, but the younger fellows liked them and may continue to wear them again this fall.

While it generally has been the accepted thing to return to the darker tones for fall and winter, there may be a certain class of wearers who will cling tenaciously to the lighter shades, probably not as light as they were last spring, but still light enough so that there will be a marked difference between the clothes worn this season and a year ago. Makers are predicting an excellent season for browns. Among them will be warm browns, colors of a more somber shade than the suits of the last four seasons. Braiken, heathland, grouse and pheasant are some of the shades you will hear about.

Blue Tones Also Favored.
Viewing with these will be blue tones—the shades of Antwerp potteries they tell us. The color schemes sound interesting—at least to the average consumer who demands something a bit unusual in his dress. Esguady is another shade that promises to have its following unless certain large distributors have made an erroneous guess in the color distribution of their lines.

The weaves are running largely to two-stated, chevrons and cassimers, with a pronounced imitation of tweed, except in a very few Scotch looking effects that require this weave to bring out the desired pattern treatments.

Trousers Slightly Narrower.
To conform to the body tracing fad, the trousers are a bit narrower than they have been. From the knee to the bottom there is only an inch difference, but at both points the dimensions are slightly smaller than last spring. That means that the drape of the trousers is much neater than before and approach the conservative lines.

In coats both two and three-button models will form the bulk of styles shown. There will be some four-button models, but they will not be shown as largely as they have been in the last three years.

As for the vest—most of these are single breasted, but there will be some double-breasted styles for the younger man who prefers a bit of novelty. These vests are cut high and have only a slight V at the top, but the bottom shows a return to the former style with a decided inverted V shape. That means that some of the light cut mode of other seasons is almost passe. Some makers are putting six buttons, instead of five on vests and this reduces bulging to the minimum.

Little Change in Topcoats.
There will be little variation in styles of topcoats, which are presented in two principal models. The most fashionable is known as the guard model, an English importation, but slightly altered to conform to the American idea. These are very chesty, have narrow shoulders, body tracing at the waist and have a decided flare to the skirt. Most of these coats are made to fall slightly below the knees.

The other model is known as the tubular topcoat. This is a straight hanging garment, which falls in part ally line from the armpits to the bottom. Some of these coats are slightly longer than the guard model, coming often to the cuff of the leg. There is no flare to the skirt. Most of them are single-breasted styles, button-through models. A few are fly front models.

The belted coat, even the back-belted style, is almost a hack number. They are sparsely shown and where displayed at all are in raincoat texture.

Guard Models in Overcoats.
In overcoats the guard model again promises to hold its popularity. This coat has broad peaked lapels and tails, slightly to the waist and then drops from the hips in nearly straight lines to the knee or slightly below. Plain or flapped pockets are shown in these coats. Various colors have been introduced, but the smartest appear to be in blue or dark grays.

Another style is the town ulster, the bigger coat than the guard model, but as massive as the Ulster of other days. It is toned down in several ways. The collars are not cut so deep, the lapels are not so wide and the coat is somewhat longer than the standard ulster of the past.

Few of these coats are belted—scarcely any having the belt around—as was the style of other seasons.

Many have fancy cuffs and pouch pockets and are shown principally in Scotch fabrics of mauve tones, blues, tans and browns.

Chesterfields Still With Us.
Two other overcoat models are the box Chesterfield and the regulation Chesterfield. The box Chesterfield is square and longer than the conventional type that we have known for years and years. It is almost a straight hanging coat reaching a few inches below the knees. Some are shown with velvet collars.

There have been few changes in the regulation Chesterfield. Most of them have fly fronts and some have silk facings. A slight variation is the double-breasted model—the style that is favored usually with dress clothes.

Where John Bull Stands.

Kansas City—Oct 7. You always know where John Bull stands. He stands for the interests of the British empire. When he says he is standing merely for the interests of humanity and civilization, he is wholly sincere. Because to John Bull the interests of civilization and of the British empire are one and the same.

Colorful Textures and Appropriate Furniture for Autumn Home Planning

By Marjorie Howe Dixon

From action to reaction and back to action seems the usual history of man. The color red has been considered an active color, if not a violent one. Some of its strength when it was quite usual to see an entire room papered in a perfectly soft, long red, a strong, harsh, staining color. People must have unrelentingly fought in such rooms, and yet no one stopped to consider the mad color to be blame. That was before the days of "salmacious" and "complex" and "norms."

A reaction followed and brown became a favorite color. "A living room with dark brown walls that absorbed all light with brown curtains and rugs, differing tones, to be sure, but seldom venturing on anything so cheerful as tan, presented a dreary and forlorn aspect that saddened those who entered, or lived there. "Suppressed desires" had not been released then, and perhaps it was just as well, since in such rooms frigidities would be entirely justifiable.

Cayer Cheerful Colors.
A profound change brought into our homes gayer, brighter, more cheerful colors, until this year we may even use red again, but with a difference, on what a difference from the past, when unjustified asides were allowed to glare from the walls.

We know that wall paper has definite function—and that is to stay back on the walls. The minute it intrudes it is no longer in good taste. And yet at that it may have red for its dominant color and still fulfill its purpose.

A case in point. Picture for yourself this living room. One would notice first a beautiful red leather secretary. Intricate Chinese designs in gold with a little black, soften the red and keep it from becoming monotonous. Curtains draped in sweeping folds in arched windows, are of scarlet tussart. Against the red is there but it is soft, of a lovely quality and subtly changes as light and shadow fall on the pattern.

Use of the Chinese Note.
The Chinese note begun by the secretary is carried further in the portrait of a Chinese gentleman over the mantle, a framed print closely resembling Chinese painting on glass. Bronzes with heavy crystals hang either side the portrait. Brass and iron stand in the fireplace below. An old divanport in green plush or drapes, close to the fire, and opposite is a dived in green tapestry. Artistic side tables stand about the room. There is one at each window. A pair of lamps made with glass, blue and pale green shades, light the room, one on each table.

The wall paper, now we have finally reached it, comes last, because it really does so sweetly stay back on the walls. It is a formal red pattern on ivory white. One lone chair in scarlet tapestry gracefully balances the secretary.

Combining Furniture.
Old and new furniture are now combined very effectively. Many of us can afford a complete outfit in a definite period of some other day, but with the excellent reproductions now made we can approximate it, and create an impression of age with its quaintness and charm. A four-poster bed is a good start, and who cares, so the design be good, and from it matter, whether it were constructed recently or long ago. A canopy of glazed chintz in pink and green with white ball fringe belongs to the bed, and a quilted spread, the chintz may very happily repeat its gay color at the window and in the covering of one overstuffed chair.

A Colonial room this, as you may easily guess, and a fireplace would be pleasant as in the old days, if it were a necessity. And a spinning wheel at one side, would seem quite right, wouldn't it? Above the mantle a large mirror should hang and a three-part set of candlesticks will properly stand below. There were two favorite designs in the old girandoles, Paul and Virginia, and Jenny Lind. The two and sticks held single candles, with hanging crystals, and the center one was arranged to hold three.

Overstuffed Bedroom Chair.

At the foot of the bed a few old overstuffed chair in blue would blend with a fat cushion in blue on the floor in front of it. A pleasant tulip pattern would be prim and dignified on the walls, with framed prints of ships. Between the windows a lamp shade might hang above a small table.

If one's tastes turn toward the French periods instead of the Colonial, a Fragonard print makes a good starting point from which to advance and create a sophisticated bed room with furniture of rosewood and walnut. Tan and green upholstery, grey paper, green rug, three combings with a chaise longue and a bronze and (Continued on Page Seven.)

speaking generally, farm people and town people.

"They are all the same kind of folks, only some live one place and others another. They have the same desires, interests and expectations. The town could not live without farms. The farms would be valueless without the towns. Farmer and townsman must consider themselves co-workers in a gigantic enterprise to make better living conditions, happier citizens and more generally distributed material and spiritual goods. That is the lesson and effect of co-operation, which is the cornerstone of the farmers' union structure.

"On that rock, whether we live in town or country, we will be secured with hand or brain, whether we produce food or something else as necessary to human progress, each of us can build and upon it will be erected an economic and social structure that will stand all the assaults of that unscrupulous, insidious foe which would divide people into groups and classes and pit one against another in a senseless conflict of extermination. It was revealed in the addresses at the farmers' picnic and in the spirit which obtained there that a better understanding of the common interest of all citizens is gaining the floor and will soon be an effect of that better co-operation, better friendships and better times."

To Know and Teach the Truth.
Omaha Bee: Anti-evolutionists, and all others who would restrict the freedom of learning, should read what Charles Evans Hughes said to the American Bar association at Detroit:

"Believing as I do that the freedom of learning is the vital breath of democracy and progress, I trust that a recognition of its supreme importance will direct the hand of power and that our public schools and state universities may enjoy the priceless advantages of courses of instruction designed to promote the acquisition of all knowledge and may not be placed under restrictions to prevent it, and that our teachers may be encouraged to know and to teach the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. This is the path of salvation of men and democracy."

"That sums up the case so well that it needs no further comment. It is right to teach the truth. Henry Fairfield Osborne referred to James T. Slocum as the wisest man in America, because he dared upon the Tennessee anti-evolution law. That language was a little extravagant. Mr. Slocum was courageous, but not more so than many who at other times and in other places have exhibited similar courage in the combat against bigoted laws. He will live to see himself vindicated, because great men like Charles Evans Hughes strive to emancipate men's minds from passions, errors and prejudices. Freedom of learning is of vital importance to our liberties, for it leads to freedom in other things. To know and teach the truth is vital to Americans."

Sheriff's Sale.
By virtue of an order of sale, to me directed, issued by the Clerk of the District Court, at the door of the County of Wayne, upon a decree rendered therein at the March, 1925, term thereof, in an action pending in said court wherein Charles M. Craven was plaintiff, and Kathryn Evelyn Thompson, et al, were defendants, I will on the 21st day of September, 1926, at the office of the Clerk of said Court, in the court house in Wayne, in said county, sell to the highest bidder for cash, the following described real estate to-wit: The southeast quarter of section ten (10), township twenty-seven (27), range two (2), east of the 6th P. M., Wayne County, Nebraska, to satisfy the aforesaid decree, the amount due thereon being $16,274.00, with interest and costs and accruing costs.

Dated at Wayne, Nebraska, this 14th day of August, 1926.

From Other Editors

Wahoo Wasp: The business men in one block in Fremont have agreed not to park on Main Street. This is done in order that the city engineers will have plenty of parking space. The Wahoo Chamber of Commerce made such a request to our business men for Saturday nights, but quite a number continue to park.

Harrison Herald: The pretty ladies in Cedar county since 1917 and in that time have heard some wretches do this, but this is the first year in that time that the Herald's country correspondents ever wrote about "cutting corn." It means the situation is hopeless. The corn is so far gone that it is good for nothing but fodder.

Geneva Signal: The legislature handed on 200 new laws last winter. How many of them have you broken, do you suppose? Unless you are arrested and brought into court for violating one of them you will not know whether you have violated any of them or not unless you learn by hearsay what some of them are. In a number of states the law requires that as soon as the legislature adjourns the text of every new law shall be published in every newspaper in the state. This is a very small expense by having all of the printing done at one time in the form of a supplement. The cost is small and every citizen has a chance to know just once what every new law is. If laws are passed for the benefit of the people and with the idea of having them enforced, the people ought to be kept promptly what the new laws are.

Aurora Republican: The good old days are gone. The little red school house is no longer little and red. The old oaken bucket is no longer old or oaken. The woodshed where dad was wont to apply the pitch was the woodsheds is also a thing for the memory to revive. The village smithy no longer has a spreading chestnut tree under which the school children of his brawny arm, and the smithy himself is a thing of the past. The polished brass rail that used to repose next to the counter at a proper distance above a sandvut cover floor has been discarded. We are living in a different age. In different places we have modern inventions of modern man. For the little red school house we have costly and expensive erections of modern architecture that might easily pass for an office building. The place where the old oaken bucket hung in years gone by, has been filled in and the place where the woodshed stood, and chemically treated plant. A garage now stands in the place of the woodshed, and dad has forgotten the name of the man who sold his arm. The village smithy has forsaken dobbin's boots for the more lucrative job of putting on tires, and the garage stands where the chestnut tree spread its shade for the poet's delight. We don't know what became of the brass rail to which we referred, but we do know that sandvut is exclusively used for tabernacle trails at the Billy Sunday. In other words, things ain't what they used to be, and most of us are willing that it should be so. Just the same the fellow who can't call to memory the "good old days" is to be pitied.

Fairbury News: We see a news item to the effect that a man living near Goshen, Ind., has been deposed from the orthodox church he attended because of making a living by growing flower bulbs he hybridized them so as to create new varieties. The pastor of the church, who seems to have been the leader in the movement to excommunicate him, however, explained that the man had been interfering with the divine scheme of things. "If the Almighty had wanted flower bulbs hybridized, He would have made them that way," declared the parson as he shut the doors of the church in the face of the Goshen man. "We wouldn't have anyone around Fairbury who can endorse this kind of Christianity." According to that view of reasoning, the orchardist could not improve his quality of his fruit by grafting and still be a Christian. No Christian should be allowed to improve the quality of his cattle by genetic breeding. The Lord gave man an inquiring mind for the purpose of improving upon earthly things. If a man finds that by grafting one can produce a better variety, he can produce a healthier or a better variety, is it a sin for him to do so? Such doctrine is foolish and nonsensical. We are thankful that we are living in a community where Christianity is on a higher plane and men are more advanced in their views as to what constitutes right and wrong.

York Republican: There is no such thing as metropolitan journalism and country journalism. The two are one. Sometimes we see different aspects of the species, but, traced to their roots, they are found to be different phases of the same business calling. The editor of a country weekly newspaper knows the demands that are made upon him to print this or refrain from publishing that. Personal pride and selfish interest, in the shape of good customers, request the editor to do things his conscience revolts against. Sometimes he condescends to flat-footed and says "no," sometimes he straddles, and too frequently he comes across, and by coming across makes a pretentious show of himself. The writer sat in the office of an editor of a large metropolitan newspaper for a day and heard that editor relate how the principal editor of the newspaper was disciplining the newspaper by cutting down his advertising to a minimum amount, because the newspaper refused to exclude an item of news that told of the arrest of the merchant for doing an unbusinesslike thing. Fortunately, the editor and the newspaper owner had reached the news-ownable and only reasonable conception of the proper thing to do, namely, that it was not in material gain accruing from an adjustable business policy, but in the moral satisfaction that comes from the long-lying recollection that one has done his duty and refuses to be swayed in his course by money, influence or patronage. And that it is the only way to a successful, happy, proud-of-his-calling editor or publisher can take.

Dealings Between Men.
Geneva Signal: The editors of Nebraska newspapers knew why they placed Joseph C. Alden of the York Republican in the office of president of their association. If we desired to explain that reason we could not frame a better explanation than this: The reputation of the editor of the editorial columns of his newspaper of some such article as the one that follows. This one is not uncommon in newspapers of the common variety. The article is being reproduced because it presents a vital fact of modern civilization lucidly and convincingly.

Mr. Alden says:

"The members of the York County Farmers Union had a fine picnic in York last Saturday. All speakers remarked on the success of the picnic and service that is coming to the fore now in dealings between men. The war taught us all that selfishness and competition can win nothing but disaster. For self protection we must go to a policy of rendering service to our fellow men. We know that our rewards will follow that service as certain as the sun shines again in the morning. It must be put out of thought that there are two classes

Appropriate Furniture For Autumn Home Planning
A sunporch with a strong French feeling is new. Of course it would want wicker pieces, and these painted in green should be trimmed in coral and lavender. Besides the usual straight chairs and low seat, a desk is useful, as are shaded wood table lamps with picailed blinds will light the porch in the evening. Daylight will shine through point de sprit glass curtains with overdrapes of glazed chintz in pink and green with a band of pink.

Bright Colors Prevail.
One thinks of sunporches and breakfast rooms almost in the same breath, as it were. For the gayest of colors may here abide. Perhaps, when a family is so unfortunate as to possess a before-breakfast porch, the gay colors will be able to dispose of it.
The following recipe for a breakfast room should have some effect on that porch, but as to the nature of that effect, no guarantee is offered.

Take four chairs of red and white wicker and into the back of each insert a basket design, painted in gay colors over wood. Place a painted black table in the center of these chairs. In the center of the square of fiber, resembling a patchwork quilt. Garnish the whole with whip-poor-til, cherry colored glass plates to the table, and what further could be desired.
Here's Spanish Room.
Let us visit a Spanish dining room and see if it pleases us. A handsome refractory table takes the center of the room, set with wedgewood chairs in cream color on linen mats. On one wall has decorative wrought-iron braces beneath it. Below the mantel a carved walnut cabinet. On the sideboard of Spanish pottery, a pair of candlesticks replete with a fruit bowl of character. The walls of this room are paneled and painted accentuating blue. Over a pair of blue and rose linen hang black close curtains of creamy netting.

edged with rose fringe. A very dignified room this, but friendly withal, and it is most inviting please us.
For Lovers of Old China.
Lovers of old China will enjoy picturing themselves in this room. Between a pair of double windows old glass used as a base for each. An Adam fireplace first attracts the eye. Over this are open shelves, in ivory enamel making a pleasant background for a distinctly good collection of pink and green china, porcelain and cloisonne. Some of the pieces are of Chinese origin. Add to these lovely things, overdrapes of pink and green linen at the windows and the effect is indeed happy.

Across the room, keeping company with a walnut high-boy are two odd tables with a lamp on each. If there be such a color as coral amber, that is the color of the usual base of the lamp. Through some modern miracle the silk shades match this illusive color.
A dull apple green rug and a Chinese lacquer secretary complete this room. A host of other roses and greens are all that could possibly be added.

Obituary.

Lorenzo Dow Dypart was born in Henry county, Indiana, on Jan. 28, 1849, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Russell Williams, in Huron, South Dakota, Sept. 3, aged 76 years, 7 months and 5 days. He moved to Jasper county, Iowa, in 1873, and to Nebraska in 1882, being on a farm south of Wayne. He was united in marriage to Miss Emma Ford, Feb. 10, 1870. He moved to Winside more than 50 years ago. He leaves to mourn his loss, his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Russell Williams, one brother, Scott Dypart, and one sister, Mrs. Charles W. White, all of Lincoln.

On Easter morning Mr. Dypart was baptized and united with the Methodist church and he was buried here at its services.

Mr. Dypart was sick about a week, having eaten a heavy supper the cause being abscess of the prostate gland. Services were conducted at the Methodist church, officiated by the Rev. J. D. Walker, and burial was made in the R. Keckler and home cemetery.
