cattle, other than cows, has been decreased by 2,000,000.

"From July, 1925, to July, 1926, cattle will bring the greater twice as much as he got in the highest period of 1920 and 21.4 times as much as in the average of the five-year period (1920-1925). Only in the record year 1919 did cattle bring the greater more than will during the next twelve months."

Dr. Friday finds that we will have 500,000,000 more bushels of corn this year than last. Fewer hogs will decrease corn prices. Beef cattle can then be fattened at a lower cost but with lessened competition from pork, beef will bring a high price. While corn may go as low as 70 cents in November and December this year, compared with 100 cents last year, native hogs ought to sell at $13 to $14 or even more, against $10 last fall. His advice to the range country is to hold cattle during September and October for marketing in November and December.

Good prices should prevail for cattle and hogs until the close of 1926. For five or six years high grade animals will bring a good price. Low and medium grade stuff should be sold while the markets are active in the next two years.

Dr. Friday finds that farmers who fed 60,000,000 city people fifteen years ago must feed 150,000,000 now. Production can scarcely increase as fast in the future as the mouths to be fed. So, he concludes, "farm prices will also more rapidly than other commodities, or if the general price level is falling, they will fall less."

A Heavensing Prophecy.
Lincoln Journal: Dr. Deas Friday, former president of the Michigan agricultural college, has followed his remarkable forecast of the price of wheat last year and of hogs in 1926 with a prediction of the course of the cattle market in the next two years that will put hope into the entire live stock industry.

Dr. Friday's predictions are based wholly upon a study of production charts and local and world market conditions. He finds that in the corn belt this year we raised 43,000,000 pigs, compared with 47,000,000 last year and 67,000,000 two years ago. We will now require 2,000,000 beef cattle to make up for the pork deficiency this year and 4,500,000 cattle to bring the meat supply up to the level of 1923. But the number of

IN DOUBT. Driving south of town Sunday, we saw miles of landscape dotted with black hickories and white oaks apparently contented amidst a wealth of luxuriant green. Granting the truth of theosophy, with its metaphysical we tried to decide whether we wanted to come back as a horse or cow or pig. Which motor equipment doing more and more of the work we were at first inclined to favor being a horse. But pride in service made us think accordingly of being a cow or pig, though eating and getting fat, and then in turn being eaten and assimilated, and thus a part of the food for the next morning, made us return to preference for the horse. We are still in the same dilemma.

But the wonderful groups of animals on green pastures hereabouts are suggestive of prosperous farmers who will be able to reap good revenues according to the high price level.

have caused many young people to become cynics, are the greatest hindrances to religious growth. But bigots and hypocrites do not represent Christian principles and have no monopoly on religion. Mr. Guest urges young people to understand and adopt Christianity as an essential part of their lives.

Two farmers in the neighborhood of Winona have bought airplanes, and they will use them in speeding up travel. Regardless of the condition of the roads, they can get into their own homes in a matter of hours. When Wayne county had its first automobile and the only one for several years, many thought automobiles would never come into popular use.

The one motor car became such a nuisance that a public meeting was held to pass resolutions against it. The resolutions recited the way horses—leading forces in taming the frontier—were terrorized and the satisfied people was imported. But in time those who protested surrendered and all bought automobiles, and the time-honored horse faded from the highways. Now we are wondering how long before many will follow the example of the winner farmers and become owners and users of airplanes. Does the airplane seem less practical now than the automobile did twenty-five years ago?

We heard of a man who bought a farm and largely got into debt for it at a time when prices were up. He was not dismayed by later shrinkage in values, but buckled down to business, and now has the place nearly paid for. He did not find fault or blame the government, but he and his pulled together and the business, worked and saved, and now they are well within the safety zone. At some time or other—and the sooner the better—people without inheritance, whether on the farm or in town, must get down to brass tacks and lay a solid foundation. They cannot yield to every whim and call of leisure and luxury and expect by some miracle to be planted on a granite base of assured success.

They cannot give their source of income the last and least consideration and hope to arrive anywhere in time to take advantage of opportunities. They cannot safely yield to frequent and prolonged periods of relaxation during the time when their material support is rocking in the balance. Whether you see a sound and profitable industry or the restriction of many sure that at some time some one has had to take off his coat and pay the price in earnest, though and hard endeavor. For the one who would succeed and be secure, there will be no snags, and even a silver spoon is not safe if it falls into indolent and careless hands.

Those editors who protested against the proposed editorial meeting here on the ground that it was purposely designed to hurt the tri-state convention in Sioux City meant no worse than the others in different avenues of the world who are chronically suspicious and irrevocably childish. It is too bad. The next editorial function will be planned for Wayne the last of a week when publishers have the time to relax and refresh themselves.

Dr. A. L. Bixby in Lincoln Journal. In response to a personal request from one of the editors of the National Cyclopaedia of Biography, we gave as much information as might prudently be transmitted through the mails, closing with these words: "Have never sought political favors and made strenuous efforts to get rich. An out of debt, and out of blame about everything else, but enmeshed in coming in to keep the wheat ground. If I might choose an epitaph for my modest marker, when I get ready for burial, it would be all: "He Had a Good Time."

The most exciting election in many years resulted in a vote of 364 against and 87 for the sale. Some of those opposing the sale estimate the plant to be worth $150,000.

The Corn Crop. O'Neill, Neb., Sept. 23.—Holt and neighboring counties in north Nebraska and southern South Dakota will have a corn crop a little better than the 50 per cent of normal according to final estimate by local buyers, farmers and other experts conversant with conditions.

The southern one-third of Holt county will have the heaviest crop of corn in years, at least 50 per cent above normal, but unfortunately the average in this section is not heavy. In portions of the east part of the county and around page the crop is normal. This also is true of the north-east and the northwest end, but in the central portion where the acreage is heaviest the yield will be light, averaging less than fifteen bushels to the acre. In this section many of the farmers are cutting up their corn for feed.

The alfalfa crop over the entire county is light and in some sections was not cut at all, while in others not more than two cuttings have been made. This commercial wheat crop is at 50 per cent of normal, but with the expected advance in prices the hay producers will realize as much as normal on the day fixed for sale. The county will produce enough corn to take care of its local feeding.

FASHION FLASHES

We spent considerable time last month observing the latest styles as exhibited at the Eastern fashion shows. You can depend on finding the latest approved styles in women's wearing apparel at our store. We will make other trips East during the season and bring home the new things as they are developed in the Eastern

Dresses
 In silk dresses the various flares—front, back and sides, are favored, and sleeves are long. Crepe-back satins are the silks most used. Pansy (a shade of purple), pencil blue (a shade of royal blue), and cuckoo (a cocoa shade with a reddish cast, are the newest colors. Fine is quite popular and black satin for street wear is very popular. Here you can choose a dress with these newest style details at almost any price from $16.75 to $37.50. Every day brings new styles and constantly buying dresses to replace those that are being sold now in our out of town sales. There is a vast selection of dresses here in flannels, poiret twills and novelty fabrics at $13.75 to $37.50. Extra charge.

Coats
 In coats, flared styles predominate, but there are also many straight line and wrap-around styles for those who prefer something quite conservative. Your coat must be fur-trimmed however, in the neck and there seems to be no limit to the amount of fur that can be used, some of the more expensive models having fur down the front and on the hem of the skirt in addition to fur collar and cuffs. If you are not well informed about furs you will find it advisable to buy your coat here where you can have the benefit of our experience in helping you choose. Many fur trimmings of very humble origin and questionable wearing qualities have been given high sounding names and only an experienced buyer can recognize them and tell you what to expect of them as to wear.

The cloths most used are variations of the well known fabrics such as Lustrosa, Rulustra, Needle-point, Merida, Val Prece, etc., the finer ones being a lustre like silk. Suede finished cloths and polo cloths are also shown. Copper, rosewood and rust shades are very popular, and brown and black are as much in demand as ever. Prices range from $18.75 to $95.00. We are in a position to make a great saving for you on your coat as we handle so many coats through this store out of town sales that we secure special low prices from dozens of the best manufacturers in New York, Cleveland and Chicago. Out of town sales are now in full swing—hundreds of coats arrive here every week, which are being sent out with our salesman to other towns. If you come now you can select from all these garments before they are sent away. You have a big city stock to choose from and the prices are much lower than if we handled coats in the ordinary way. Come now for the best selection.

Dress Materials
 In materials for making into dresses at home, bordered effects, 54 inches wide are the new note in both silks and wools. They are very popular with the home dress maker because such neck pieces are so easy to cut and fit, and are so bordering. The trimming that is required. Only 1 1/2 to 2 yards are required for a dress which keeps the cost of materials very moderate.
 In silks, crepe-back satins with wide bordered borders are especially handsome. They come in the season's best shades of tan, blues, greys, greens, and occasionally handsome shades in black. In wool there are flannels, serges and poiret twill with both wools and crepe-backed borders and all attractively harmonizing colors. There are some sport weaves designed with plaid or check borders combined with a stripe or contrasting plaid top.
 Our salesladies can suggest easy ways for cutting and trimming these stylish materials and we have McCall patterns on hand which show many styles especially designed for bordered 54 inch materials.
 Plain flannels continue popular and are showing them in 34 inch width and many colors at $3.00 to $3.85 per yard for very nice qualities.
 The new metallic braids, fur trimmings and buttons called for by the new fall styles are also here in fine variety.

Now is the time to select your new coat because there are hundreds of extra coats here now which in a short time will be sent away for our out of town sales that we give in 40 other Nebraska and South Dakota sales. For the Home

Among the draperies Terry cloth is being much used for side drapes, door curtains, window curtains, and coverings requiring a material with good body and rich colorings. The Terry cloth is wonderfully popular with both sides and in some pieces the patterns are copies of the old silk tapestries. The price is splendidly $1.00 and $1.10 per yard, and may be split which permits of very handsome side drapes, etc.
 New crumpees and satens from the Standish Mills, whose draperies you see advertised in the leading magazines, are in great success in many new designs, especially suitable for fall and winter use. Priced at 60c to $1.00 per yard.
 Rayon silk curtain nets are the newest idea in window decoration, and they are very attractive and moderately priced—at $1.40 and $1.20 per yard.
 A special in white figured marquisette suitable for ruffled curtains is offered at 38c per yard for what has been a regular $1.00 material. We secured this special price by taking a case shipment direct from the mill.
 Dainty ruffled net curtains are as low as $4.00 per pair. Some especially attractive ones with colored voile ruffles are $1.60 and $2.00.
 Bed spreads, sheets, pillow cases and bedspreads in well known qualities at below usual prices.

What suffered a few years ago for a population of 100,000,000 is not enough now for 114,000,000. Neither would it be enough for the same 100,000,000 because the times are different. More goods are demanded because progress has been made in the manner of living. At least more things conducive to the comfort and happiness of human beings are demanded of trade.

Incidentally, as this reference is made to the great increase in the volume of railroad business, it is recalled that many of the western lines are asking a 5 per cent rate increase on the ground that they are not yet earning the 5.34 per cent allowed non-guaranteed by the government. Some persons may infer that, if the railroads are doing such a big business, they ought to be making money. Some of them are prospering and are accumulating as much. Others are falling short of the 5.34 per cent when they have the necessary percentage of profit on present valuations. That brings up once more the question of what railroads are worth. If some of them are over valued, then a new Hartington Herald: As far as the speculative season is concerned, you're not sensible and admit that there are a whole lot of things which the speculative reason never can and never will be able to understand? To hear some cocksure individuals talk you'd think they had the keys together to all knowledge in heaven and in earth and in the waters under the earth and reduce it to a simple matter of getting the keys out of the lock. When the reason has done its utmost, it is limited there—a stone wall beyond which it can not go. The cost is right about that; and if the individual is to continue his quest for truth, it must be by some other means. Faith may scale the wall, but it is not the speculative reason. Nor is this as agnostic as it may sound for was it not some Biblical writer who asked the question, "Canst thou by searching find out the way that God goeth?"

What is true of a store is also true, in most cases, of the individual. However much we may desire the man who always declares himself for a principle and sticks to it, we must concede that there are many instances in dealing with our friends and associates where the best

Process Patents Issued on Neuroclometer Report Chiropractors

Word was received this week by Drs. Lewis & Lewis of this city that the long wait for the issuance of a patent on the instrument known as the Neuroclometer, and leased by the Doctors, has been issued by the Patent Office at Washington. This is good news for lessees of this instrument, because of the widespread light they have put up for the past twenty months to protect their interests. When the instrument was first announced as an invaluable aid to chiropractors in their work of examining patients, Drs. Lewis & Lewis immediately purchased a lease entitling them to use this instrument in their office.

Great Aid to Chiropractors The Neuroclometer is a test-reporting instrument that detects pressure interferences on the nerves entering from the spinal column. With this instrument a trained technician knows where pressures exist and as a result all guesswork is done away with. The patient can be adjusted in the exact place where the pressure is located. Some remarkable cases are recorded of relief from very stubborn diseases by the Palmer School. Locally, Dr. Lewis & Lewis have been most successful in their handling of many stubborn cases. The Neuroclometer is leased for a period of ten years to those chiro-

As to Criminals.
Dr. A. L. Bixby in Lincoln Journal: One who has a sound and balanced mentality is never a criminal. This is a physiological fact that cannot be successfully controverted. And when society comes to realize that mental perversion is its own terrible punishment, while it may not excite pity for the unfortunate, it will exercise a modicum of sense in dealing with them.

Begin Here Today

Sir Dudley, believed to be the murderer of his cousin, James Glenister, following the finding of a skeleton fragment of the dead man, asks the band—

Kathleen—Glenister—sister-of-the-dead man, in marriage. He is refused by Kathleen, who believes him a murderer, and who is in love with—

Norman Slater. Kathleen is tricked by Sir Dudley into visiting a lonely place to obtain information about her brother's death. Slater, fearful of her safety, follows Sir Dudley to a motorcycle.

“No, sir! It leads to Beechwood village and Colmbrück beyond. But both places are a long way—a long walk for a young lady.” Norman's anxiety was increasing.

“Did the young lady use the telephone while she was here?”

“No, Norman gave the waiter five shillings and retreated into the hall.”

He had reached the machine and was making for his cycle, which he had left at the curb, when the throxy voice of the writer stopped him.

“As a man, sir, you know Kathleen has to do with you. I found her when I was sweeping up after the luncheon party were gone.”

“This” was a scrap of paper, the crossing in it suggesting that it had originally been twisted into that homely form of communication, a sheet of noted note. It bore a few words in pencil:

“Prevented at last moment from joining you. Come to keeper's office. You will find me there without fail.”

Putting the note in his pocket, Norman added a pound to his first ten. Then he went out and started his motorcycle, the drone of it drowning the chuckle with which the wheezy waiter retreated into the hotel.

CHAPTER XVIII

The Train Crosses.

The ancient who named Caspid “the blind-goat” wore a nose in their generation. No one not out of the line of that tribe, however, had behaved quite so rashly as did Norman Slater after “picking up his clues” at “The Bull.” It never occurred to him as a card is planted by three card tricksters.

Ah! Grinister's action of a motorcycle roaring through a seven-mile road vanished like a lurid dream. With a blast from his horn he tore through the village gates of Beechwood Grange and so into the network of lanes that led to the side beyond which “rolling” the cottage was hidden.

The cycle had earned its rest. Norman bestowed it among the bracken in a ditch close to the stile and of necessity set out to finish his journey on foot. Eventually he came out into the clearing. The diamond-paned windows of the cottage were lit with light from within, but there was no moon to show the old mill across the stream.

He walked up to the door and rapped with his knuckles. The scrape of a chair sounded within and a surprised woman opened the door.

“Who is it and save at 11 thought,” she said, looking at the man with the poultry feed,” she exclaimed. “What might you please want, sir?”

“I came to inquire about Miss Glenister,” replied Norman. “I have reason to believe that she was here this afternoon.”

Mrs. Grimes moved away from the doorway in an implied invitation to enter which Norman instantly accepted.

“I know nothing about Miss Glenister,” she said. “I've been out all day—You'd best ask a husband. This is his house.”

At the other end of the low-ceiled living room John Grimes sat on a stool warming his bags at a wood fire. Great shadows were thrown on it in an attitude of dejection. Norman, who was quicker in action than at arm-chair theory, noticed this, and he noticed two other things. On the wall was a telephone. And Mrs. Grimes was struck with sudden solicitude for an oil lamp which stood on a table in the window. She went over to it and moved the lamp three times before she got it to her satisfaction.

Norman had got to know the silent head-keeper rather well during the short period when he had been a shooting guest at “The Grange” and he noticed two other things. On the wall was a telephone. And Mrs. Grimes was struck with sudden solicitude for an oil lamp which stood on a table in the window. She went over to it and moved the lamp three times before she got it to her satisfaction.

“The keeper raised his giant bulk from the stool and confronted his visitor. But he ignored his visitor's outstretched hand and avoided his eyes as if they were snakes, or it,” he said in a surly fashion. “Come to stay with the master again?”

“No, I just wanted to ask you a few questions,” rejoined Norman. He did not like the look of things. The man's manner was furtive. The woman's action with the lamp might have been a signal.

“We've got a rare pack of pheasants left,” Grimes remarked with half-forgotten interest. He lifted his gaze now, but it was directed over Norman's shoulder—toward the door.

The keeper's hard, gray eyes seemed to put a question and to receive an answer.

Norman took the warning of that interchange a fraction of a second too late. His hand flew to the pistol in his pocket, but the L-ar's hug of John Grimes pinioned his arms and a just-kick in the small of his back did the rest. He was thrown to the floor and a moment later he was vainly fighting the flames of a chloroformed sponge pressed to his mouth and nostrils.

CHAPTER XIX

The Art of Finesse.

In the train, going down to Beechwood next day, Inspector Wragge was not in the guise of a subscription-hunting clergyman. On this occasion he was in his own natural semblance, since he wished Sir Dudley to recognize him at sight as the police officer who had pulled Norman Slater off him in the fracas at Cadogan Gardens.

He alighted at the little wayside station, went to the lodge gates of the Grange, walked up the avenue and rang the bell at the great-odious front door. His lady rather jibbed at admitting him, but yielded at once on being informed of the visitor's official position.

There was no one in the library and Wragge had to wait a long half-hour before Sir Dudley joined him.

“Come to arrest me for murdering my brother?” His lady inquired.

Wragge assumed a servility he was far from feeling.

“You will have your little joke, Sir Dudley,” the inspector laughed, “but I am after Mr. George Glenister's murderer all right, but it is your help I want—just you.”

“The object of my call, Sir Dudley,” said Wragge, “is to beg you to tell me if you have heard the names of any local gentlemen mentioned in

Market Report

Sept. 23.—As was generally expected, receipts over the country increased materially this week and the bulk was just about sufficient to check the advancing tendency of the market, although not large enough to retard it in other words—the deal just about remained stationary on the crest of recent advances.

gain resulted from an increased delivery of the western ranges, a reasonable occurrence for this time of the year.
Finding very few steers in the run, although the search conducted for eight days' longer indicated a serious release and $15 tops for fancy hinds the buyers were forced to content themselves to a large extent with grass heaves. For the best range killing steers tops of $9.50 were handed out, while the bulk of the fair to good kinds sold for $7 to $8, with common kinds around $5. Even warmed-up heaves conspicuous by their absence, there being a decided scarcity of these grades.

Why Chinese Is Hard to Read

"Two women under one roof" is Chinese for "treacherous."
"Phoenix bird" means "rare bliss."
"From mansion and cloth petticoat" means a poor, but virtuous girl.
These are some of the hoary bits of wisdom which are in good use, and have really different meanings.

Once it was necessary to issue a proclamation from Canton regarding locusts. The word "locust" was pronounced "nan," but there was no written character for "nan."

At plethora of grass butcher cows and heifers encountered fairly active demands, but the weight of number, caused mild price variations. Mid-week above the deal on a steady to 2c net lower basis. Bulk of the fair to good grass butchers again sold from $5.50 to $6.50, with fancy heavy cows to $7 and over and yearling heifers up towards $8, although no offerings to equal the $8, 1,000-pound heifers of the previous week were uncovered.
Broad demands for stockers and feeders prevented even a semblance of loss on that class. Heavy daily assortments were moved without loss of time and the middle of the week saw all recent advances still fully in evidence. Fair to good thin steers sold from $7 to $8, with tops to $8.50. Ordinary kinds were worth around $6, with common kinds down to $5 and trash under.

These symbols, carved at first on bamboo tablets with iron ropes, were gradually modified with the use of pencil, ink and paper.
Then, as the need arose, other characters were formed by combining two or more symbols so as to indicate different meanings.
Thus, the Chinese character for "morning" (something in the mouth, "aves"; union of sun and moon, "shen") means "morning."
Some of the combined characters became rather complicated. For instance the character which now
