Talk Appropriate to Education Week Given in Wayne High School—Other School News.

Thank You Just two little words, but how much they mean! Do you always remember to thank a person?

Do you say "thank you" with your lips only or does your heart speak in the gratitude for the favor?

It is the cheerful, sincere and glad hearted person who thanks one in a way which makes him feel happy and content.

Wayne Business Men Address Pender Club

The Pender Times gives this report of speeches made by J. H. Kemp and J. C. Nuss before the Chamber of Commerce at Pender Monday night.

"J. C. Nuss and J. H. Kemp of Wayne were present and gave two fine, helpful addresses which were very much appreciated. Mrs. Beckenbauer, solo; Mrs. Anna Gamble Johnson; talk on welfare work; Mrs. Will Fox; duet; Mrs. Earl Lewis and Mrs. Leif Glaser; talk on the purpose and scope of the W. C. T. U.; Mrs. G. W. Fortner; and piano selection, Miss Florence Beckenbauer.

"Mr. J. H. Kemp of Wayne who is district agent for a life insurance company; a member of the Wayne school board and one of the town's best; boosters; made a telling address on co-operation and made many good illustrations of results attained. One of his best was that of Red Grange and his foot ball team—likening it to the players along well defined lines in which every player did his biggest that was—and predicted Grange could not win alone. Neither could it be any matter what one or two—it called for united action. He made a strong plea for a christian co-operation in shaping the future of the young folks of the town. This called for a good example of every citizen. He said 50 per cent of the crime committed by the young people under 21 years of age. He told the club that it was a mistake to measure success in dollars and cents. Character building should be the first goal. He thought too many aspired to be practical and gave no consideration to the ideal. Mr. Kemp's talk was not only logical and wholesome but it was the best (and only one) of some of the fellows) sermon some of the crowd had heard for a long time."

NERVES ALL UNSTRUNG?

Wayne Folks Should Find the Cause and Correct it.

Are you all worn out? Feel tired, nervous, half-sick? Do you have a constant headache; sharp twinges of pain, too, with dizzy spells and annoying urinary disorders? Then there's a cause for worry and more cause to give your weakened kidneys prompt help. Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys.

Wayne folks recommend Doan's for just such troubles.

Mrs. I. E. Ellis, 118 Douglas St., Wayne, says: "I had pain through my kidneys also sharp twinges across the small of my back, too. I felt tired and nervous all the time. Attacks of dizziness bothered me and I couldn't see plainly. My kidneys were in a sluggish condition, too. Doan's Pills from the Wayne Drug Co., ended the headache and kidney disorder."

Business

Sioux City Journal: Months ago The Journal felt impelled to suggest that the process of business recovery could be carried forward much more surely if all efforts to create a boom were avoided. It also warned against the danger of inflation, feared that the country's misadventure of 1920 and the field of legitimate trade and industry is like anything else when there is too much of it. One should remember that the spirit of all things floating credit been available in excess of the requirements of commerce, agriculture and industry. No doubt that has resulted from the fact that enormous amounts of money have been kept inactive for years without employment and the subsequent desire to put that money to work. The situation thus viewed by Mr. Miller threatens the development of difficulties, and he believes federal reserve banks now ought to address vigorously to the courses chosen for them and "refuse to stand as life preservers for speculators."

It is well to have such a warning as this. Note that Mr. Miller refers to the "field of legitimate trade and industry." He has no desire to discourage the promotion of legitimate activities of which he admits there are many. Yet he has sensed that the returning prosperity easily can impress the speculative mind with the idea of rich profits to be made, and this is the thing he hopes the country may avoid.

All parents are proud of their children, and a lot of them without reason. Over three hundred thousand fish have been put into Lake Quinnebaug, near Decatur, this fall.

Thanksgiving should not be merely a time to enumerate things for which people are grateful, nor merely a time to fasten our eyes on advanced means for improved ends and higher standards of thinking and living.

Begin Here Today.

Sir Dudley Glenister, believed to be the murderer of James Glavier, to obtain his title and estate, is rendered innocuous in a fire while Doctor Wheatley, sister of the dead man, continues to believe him guilty, but James Wrangle, Scotland Yard detective, assigned to the murder case, has fastened the guilt upon Stephen Colne, former cabinet minister. Wrangle explains,

"Now Go On With the Story.

"Mr. Colne gave it to me," replied Wrangle. He has throughout the conduct of the inquiry been extremely anxious to have Sir Dudley convicted of the murder of Mr. George Glavier."

"And he has probably lost his life from loyalty to that belief?" Kathleen inquired.

Doctor Wheatley came into the room to give an account of his patient. The baronet was in a bad way. The ribs were broken and he had sustained terrible injuries from the fire. So far there was no reason why he should not eventually recover, what Doctor Wheatley most feared was the shock to his nervous system. When he came back to consciousness he would probably be out of his mind. The doctor was of the opinion that a specialist in mental disease should be sent for.

Kathleen agreed cordially. "You cannot be a lunatic," she said. "We must have a specialist as soon as we can. Willoughby Melville is the man. How does he get on?"

"I'll get him on the phone," said Norman, rising and leaving the room. He was back again in five minutes with the announcement that Doctor Melville would be at the Grange by ten o'clock next morning. He had had a busy day and could not start out that night. He said that he could be of little use till Dudley recovered consciousness.

"He was wanted to be informed if you were here, Mr. Wrangle," Norman added. "He expressed pleasure on my telling him that you were."

"There is no more to my profession. I would rather meet in consultation," said Doctor Wheatley with the genuine warmth of a hero-worshipper. "Melville is not only a great physician. He is a psychologist of the very first order. Had his job been that of a lover rather than a doctor, he would probably have made a fortune as a thought reader or a spook medium."

Wrangle laughed grimly. "And if," he said, "Doctor Melville had lived on a still lower plane he might have been drawing six pounds a week as a detective inspector at Scotland Yard and earning every penny of it. If my hat was on my head I would take it off for Doctor Willoughby Melville. He has been the real detective in this case. Without his wise direction I should never have solved it, but should in due course have gone to my grave believing that Sir Dudley Glenister killed his cousin."

CHAPTER XXVIII
The Blind Trail.

The silence in the stately dining room of Beechwood was pregnant with the elements of storm after Inspector Wrangle had paid his glowing tribute to Willoughby Melville.

"You are speaking as if even now you were determined to turn a blind eye to Dudley Glenister's guilt," said Kathleen with ominous calm.

"Sometimes a blind eye is a useful adjunct on a blind trail," replied Wrangle. "If my eye had not been blind I might have stumbled into greater mistakes than those I was making till Doctor Melville set me right. How he gained the knowledge that excused him to go is beyond me. It is his secret and I must leave it to be divulged by him if he so chooses. But, with your permission, Miss Glavier, I should like to give you here and now the true history of your brother's death as it can be proved by a chain of irrefutable evidence."

"You are never likely to have a better opportunity," said Kathleen coldly. "Let us have it, anyway."

"First I should like to tell you what I had better begin at the end," Wrangle smiled at the indignant girl. "The blind trail led to your wicked kinsman lying motionless on the stairs. The true trail, which I found for me by Doctor Melville's genius, led to Stephen Colne, the brilliant statesman who deliberately killed himself tonight in a halo of mock heroism in order to escape the hangman's noose and the state's wrath."

"Go on," said Kathleen hoarsely.

"True," proceeded Wrangle, "demands a confession on my part. At the outset of my career I committed a breach of the police regulations, and I committed it for money under domestic circumstances which might come to your mind but which are too intricate to be narrated here. Mr. Colne at that time held an official position very much lower than that which he rose later, but it gave him a knowledge of my lapses, and he took advantage of it to make me practically his slave. There are able against Sir Dudley this man Trickey held the key to it. Stronger than ever grew that belief when I discovered that his wife was a Beechwood girl, the daughter of John Grimes, the Grange gamekeeper. I raked about among the ashes of Mr. Trickey's past and that of his sister, Mrs. Conningham."

"Mrs. Conningham?" repeated Kathleen. "Why she was the widow of Sir Dudley's former partner on the stock exchange."

lodge gates, and in spite of my clerical disguise, he recognized me as a former patient. Of course he guessed what I was after. He said that a disreputable-looking man was with Sir Dudley and that it might be to my advantage to have a look at him. We walked up to the house together, I to apply for admission at the front door and Doctor Melville going round to the library window.

"We entered the room at practically the same moment, and sure enough Sir Dudley's visitor came up to the doctor's description. A disreputable, loose-living blackguard of a type we at the Yard are only too familiar with. Melville was rather too demonstrative in the way he fixed him with his eyes. Either that, or it is possible that he may have recognized me. And not that I was looking through the French window, and till today was seen no more at the Grange."

Wrangle paused and glanced quizzically at Kathleen. "If you could have seen into my mind at that moment, Miss Glenister," he said, "you would not have been so hard on me next day for I instantly arresting Sir Dudley. For I formed the too obvious opinion that the disreputable blackguard had knowledge of your cousin's guilt and was there to blackmail him. In that I was partly right, but not to the full extent. He was the Mr. Simon Trickey who, in revenge for being rebuffed, took as much of his tale as he dared to you and would have probably sold you some half-truths later if he had not been otherwise engaged."

"Engaged in dying," said Kathleen, who had lost not much of her tranquility. "I was in his house at the time. I told you about it."

"Since then he has been engaged in coming to life again, but that is another story," said Wrangle with a snap of his jaws. "I too believed that he was dead, but I was convinced that if evidence was procurable against Sir Dudley this man Trickey held the key to it. Stronger than ever grew that belief when I discovered that his wife was a Beechwood girl, the daughter of John Grimes, the Grange gamekeeper. I raked about among the ashes of Mr. Trickey's past and that of his sister, Mrs. Conningham."
