Give Report On Student Meeting

Two From Wayne Attend Interdenominational Conference at Evanston, Illinois.

The first interdenominational student conference was held in Evanston, during the holidays and two students of the Wayne State Teachers College, Miss Lenore Evans of Norfolk and Fred Luore of South Sioux City, attended the conference. They were accompanied by a number of other students from all parts of the country. The conference was held at the Evanston Hotel and the group included students of all races and most nationalities. The abolition of denominationalism, the relation of the church and peace, the church and labor, practical application of religion to everyday life, and the program of the church, were among the questions discussed. Though some radicalism and revolt at denominational restrictions was expressed, all students expressed themselves in favor of the fundamental principles of religion which have lived through the centuries. Though no formal plans for further conferences were made, it is hoped this first meeting will lead to others and that denominations may thus be brought together for benefit of all, as suggested by Wayne students in their report to the meeting of the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A. last evening.

January 7th marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of his induction into a Wayne county office, and that he may hold office without interruption since then. After an experience of a quarter of a century, his advice to young people is not to yearn for public office. unprofitable field of office politics.

Business.

Sioux City Journal. Predictions of prosperity are frequent and more emphatic than at any time since the economic situation began to improve. There are no dissenting opinions. Bankers, merchants, manufacturers, exporters, exporters and government officials all agree that the year ahead promises an era of business improvement and expansion never before witnessed.

Government officials are prone to be more conservative than any others who engage in discussing the general situation. Yet they are but human, and it is seen that they have great difficulty in restraining the natural feeling of optimism and enthusiasm.

Indeed, some of them impose such restraint. Secretary Hoover, for example, who predicts a year of increased activity in all lines. Meanwhile another conservative group, the bankers and financiers, join in acknowledging that indications are at hand for a good business year.

The Journal, observing the economic situation from week to week, does not hesitate to say that 1926 promises everything claimed for it, with no halfway ground chosen between the extremes of conservatism and optimism. It looks as though it will be a good year in fact, rather than a single trick that is used to discourage that hope and belief, not the agricultural problem's necessity of solution. Indeed, the necessity of its solution is now offered as assurance that the problem will be removed. There is no reason to grow and expand. There is nothing that can stop it now.

Because of this. The Journal feels safe in predicting that something will be done, that the inequalities between agriculture and industry will be removed. There is no reason to grow and expand. There is nothing that can stop it now.

At this moment, the Journal insists that the essentials of progress are potentially fit and satisfactory. It does not forget the farm situation, which is not yet what it ought to be, but it reaches the conclusion that the groundwork for agricultural recovery has been made almost ideal. Therefore there is less worry over the farmers' problems, which, because they have got to be solved, are going to be understood without further great delay.

Washington has now heard from the hinterland. The message received by the government is both economic and political. The middle west, leading the movement for positive, absolute adjustments in agriculture, knows that the time has come for definite action. Not in years have farmers viewed as much power as is theirs today. True, they have not been able in the last few weeks to effect increases in prices for their products, but they have accomplished the crystallization of sentiment, which is, by all odds, the most important part of their program in demanding relief. Of course, that relief is going to be provided. That is affirmed because of the absolute conviction that the agricultural interests are no longer willing to go on as they have gone before. The situation at this time may be described as one in which an ultimatum has been issued to the administration and congress. The farmers are solidly behind that ultimatum. It means just one thing. That is the Washington must do something for agricultural relief and must do it now.

Because of this. The Journal feels safe in predicting that something will be done, that the inequalities between agriculture and industry will be removed. There is no reason to grow and expand. There is nothing that can stop it now.

The Hartington Herald reports the best year in its history, and since its editor has no operations left to be performed in Hartington he will be on the job all the time, the coming year promises to be the biggest one yet.

Speaking of the music furnished at the modern dance, Rev. C. Copeland Smith of Chicago, says it sounds like the "synoptoped hiccup" of a "tearful celestial." We are sure that Mr. Smith does not like it.

Initiative of California, Florida children are first taught, for convenience, to say "mama," and then to sing praises of the southern climate. They learn to sing "mama" and "Florida swamps and insect-infested sandbars," and by the time they grow up they make powerfully effective boosters.

An authority on child discipline admonishes parents not to yield to the tendency of wrath over youthful misdeeds, emphasizing the fact that permanent injury is thereby done to an otherwise hopeful disposition. Parents are advised to remain calm, to curb the outburst of ugly temper, but correct children by denying them privileges that will help them remember to behave.

A Massachusetts scientist reports that the tendency of the climate from year to year is towards equalization. Winter weather in the north is getting warmer and in the south is gradually cooling. Thus, we stay long enough to have the same kind of weather here that Grant Mears and others will have in Florida. Then, the winter climate was a sufficient cause, what's the use in going south?

Dr. A. L. Bixby, esteemed poet-philosopher of the Lincoln Journal, will have lived 70 years on April 21, next, and he feels and looks and acts as much younger than the record indicates that he has to turn to the family bible to verify the fact. But in celebration of attaining this score years and ten, on the part of the genial poet, the Journal has commenced publication of his memoirs in semi-weekly installments. Everybody will read them with liveliest interest.

Manufacturers of galoshes should understand that they should build them higher than necessary or desired as witness the many who protest by wearing them rolled down and flapping. Manufacturers may thus reduce the quantity of material used and accordingly shave down the price. Besides unnecessary extravagance is not pleasant to wear, to hear the limp walls of galoshes swishing and flapping, the buckles squeaking striking at each other as though mad about something. We hope manufacturers will cease putting more into a thing than is really needed or wanted.

The quarter century just ended has been introduction of the motion picture, automobile, airplane and radio and other wonderful inventions, has seen building of permanent highways and has multiplied facilities and conveniences for both city and rural populations. A review of the opinions of noted scientists, authors and educators encourages the belief that civilization, as a whole, is going forward and upward. Women have

OTHER LANDS.
 This week we have had the privilege of reviewing the special editions of the Portland Oregonian and Los Angeles Times. Each gives the usually comprehensive portraiture and attractions in its respective state. We have also received a copy of a magazine published at Fort Myers, Florida, where nature made everything superior. Sunsets are said to be of "awesome beauty," equalled only by the sunrise which is reported "immaculate." Though it is suspected that few people down there see the latter. Friends is doubtful too, so even that neither the sunrise nor the sunset can feel jealous of the other. The magazine invites people to come from everywhere because they are needed, especially if they happen to have any surplus money. "Once you come," declares the magazine, "you will stay, because you will be so happy here." Threatened with the prospect of staying forever, one will hesitate to transfer all his assets there when he sees been enfranchised and they enjoy equal privileges with men of all vocations and professions. While there have been some evidences to arouse uneasiness and alarm, general confidence and optimism.

The story of the struggles and triumphs of Frank Munn, late New York publisher, should be an inspiration to people who figure that money is the only goal and who are fearful lest they will earn more than they will get. When Mr. Munn started into the publishing business in New York, he had no money and no credit, but he had indomitable courage and determination. He worked eighteen hours a day, and he managed to accumulate one dollar at a time. He was not ambitious to become rich, but to earn money with which to grow in his chosen work. He amassed wealth, but not to spend in extravagant living. He had the reputation of being strictly honest in all of his business relations. He made no compromise with the law and accomplished the things he undertook.

Former Governor Samuel McKelvie's situation in his Nebraska Farmer, to wise and unwise methods of helping people who are in need. The mere giving of alms is regarded as the importance of making it necessary and convenient for children to help themselves. He emphasizes the false assumption of those who believe the world owes them a living and that instead of devoting themselves to worth-while endeavor, they are here to collect what is due. Parents should instill in their children and engage in constructive and useful service, eschewing hand-outs and holding aloof from the damaging policy of getting something for nothing.

The plan for farm relief as proposed by leading economists and embodied in a measure before congress, is to organize an export corporation to take care of the surplus from American farms. Thus, the ready prices. If production exceeds local demand, the tariff does not operate to the advantage of the American farmer. A corporation to safeguard any surplus against a flooded and depressed market is proposed. The importance of making it pointed out that the world needs a surplus of farm crops, but that when it has them, producers suffer lowered prices. Manufacturers and industrial workers are protected against price slumps, whereas farmers, subject to weather and growing conditions, are rewarded well or poorly according to immediate supply and demand. This lack of assurance to farming communities is what the proposed export corporation would seek to overcome.

Market Report

Furnished by Steele, Sisk & Co., Sioux City, Stock Yards.

Jan. 6.—The opening of the new year brought a more normal recovery of cattle towards the leading markets of the country, as compared to the contracted holiday liquidation near the end of 1925. At times the incoming supplies ran slightly heavier than the demands, but in the main the inquiry proved sufficiently large to absorb all arrivals without trouble and the consequence the general cattle trade shows very few changes, as compared to the close of last year.

Being included in the heaviest proportion in the expanding runs, the fat steers and yearlings came in for the heaviest opposition. Nevertheless desirable fed kinds at all times sold well and as the present week draws to a close all recent gains are still reflected. Where less attractive kinds figure, however, the market does not carry the full firm tone and weakness shows the trade in direct harmony with the general deterioration in quality. From steady to 25 cents lower will cover the entire outfit from the best fed steers to the poorest dogs.

Not strictly ripe steers put in an appearance over the week. The best were of a class to draw bids to $10.50, while the bulk all arrivals were of an ordinary to fairly good class that sold from $7.50 to $9.50, with only little stuff showing outside of either end of that spread.

Butcher cows and heifers sold steadily over the first half of the week, with the trading business showing the inferior females late. Order buyers delved freely into receipts and a full clearance was easily made. Good fed yearling heifers topped at $9, but something prime would put on a top around $10.—Fair to nearly good kinds sold in increased numbers from $7.50 to $9.50. Big weight heifer cows topped at $7.50, with the bulk of the plain to good butchers from $5 to $7.

Cows and cutters are firm in a $3.25 to $4.25 spread. Bulls active and strong, with bogomas to $5.75 and bulls to $6.75. Veals again topped freely at $10.

Stockers and feeders continue to be included in light proportion at all times, the inquiry being constantly in excess of the supply. Naturally under such conditions the quiet aver-

URIAH HEEP.
 Uriah Heep was a rascally character. He was a "black-and-blue" field. He was born without a conscience, and he pretended to be what he was not. A slick exterior concealed ugly motives and evil designs. He was finally found out and got what was coming to him. It is bad enough to say one thing and do another, but it is worse to beguile one into loss through dark and insidious ways such as were attributed by Dickens to the notorious Uriah Heep. In every respect more is gained by saying what one means and meaning what one says, and by employing methods that are upright and honorable and that will stand exposure to the light of closest scrutiny.

ages firm and clearances are brisk. Fair to good this steers of light weight make up the bulk of the arrivals and sell from $6.75 to $7.50. Some tops reach to $8 and over, while a few warmed up steers are being taken back at the loss from $8 to $10.

Feeding cows and heifers also average strong for the week. Fancy fleshy feeding heifers can safely be figured to $7, but most of the good to choice thin kinds sell from $5.75 to $6.50.

Packer buyers have won no ground in the bulk of the trade for some time. National receipts are showing such a continued alarming shortage that shippers are conveying a feeling of decidedly less confidence in the values are on the up-grade more of ten than otherwise. Any reverses are of decidedly temporary nature and are quickly recovered.

Current tops for light lights are in the vicinity of $11.50 on the river markets with fancy butchers at 25 cents under that level and sows about $1 behind weighty butchers. As the season advances there is every reason to believe that light lights will command a wider premium over heavy butchers and that the gap will be broadened by a reduction in the price of weighty butchers.

After some slumps around New Years, that buyers claimed to be necessary for a profitable carryover, the market for fat lambs has been expected to work upwards to the former levels. All conditions surrounding the trade are favorable. For several weeks auctions have been going off well, pelts are high and the demand for lamb in the east is good. In addition supplies are not so heavy as none too heavy for the late season.

J. H. Kate Tells How To Avoid Accidents

J. H. Kate, former Wayne resident, contributes the following to the Omaha Bee of Jan. 4, explaining how to avoid automobile tragedies at military crossings.

Lincoln.—To the Editor of the Omaha Bee: Reading that the Von Seeger family was killed near Ft. Snelling, I am quite certain that such accidents can be avoided, and I believe that if you will use your influence through your publication, you can bring this matter to the attention of our next legislature and have arrangements made so that such accidents will not happen. I will endeavor to give you a description of what I believe can be done to make it almost impossible for any to be killed on a railroad crossing.

Place across the road within 50 feet of each side of a railroad crossing a two-inch plank 12 inches wide, set on edge across the road. Have it weighted so it will turn down flat when the automobile strikes it, and will straighten up when the car is over it. This will compel every driver to stop and go in "low" when approaching the crossing. It will avoid killing the engine on the crossing and will do away with the idea of stepping on the gas to beat the train at the crossing.

It is not possible to drive over such a plank at high speed without being thrown off your seat; therefore no one will ever try it more than once.

When I was a boy I used to whip up the horses at a railroad crossing to beat the cars. Now they step on the gas. An old engineer told me a short time ago that thousands of automobile drivers stop on the gas when he blows the whistle to beat him at the crossing.

This looks like a simple thing to do, and so it is, but it will work and save hundreds of lives every year. I drive a car every day and I know how everyone will feel about driving over such an obstruction. When I was mayor of Wayne I had some trouble with speeders and I threatened to place a "2 by 0" on each crossing if they did not quit speeding, and the result was that no one drove fast down Main street. It will cost but little to try my way, and I believe if the Omaha Bee will publish this plan and keep it before the people until they understand it, they will try out this plan. J. H. Kate.

Presbyterian Church. (Rev. Stephen E. Yonn, Pastor). The following quotation from the life of John G. Paton is worthwhile: "From his home to church in Dumfries which John Paton attended, was a walk of four miles, but such was his sense of religious duty that only three times in forty years was he absent from public worship. Once he was compelled by a snowstorm to return. Once he was baffled by roads so slippery with ice that after many grievous falls he was forced to turn back and crawl home on his hands and knees and once during a terrible outbreak of cholera in Dumfries he yielded to the contagion, but he would remain at home lest he should bring back the dreaded scourge with him."

This is of real value to everyone who believes in prayer. Services next Sunday as usual. Church school promptly at 10 a. m.

Our attendance has fallen down considerably due to disagreeable weather and road conditions. We suggest that all who are really interested in the church plan to come despite the weather. Sunday the subject of morning worship shall be, "God's Call to Methodism and the Churches' Answer". No society has a right to exist and be supported unless it has a worthy cause and is a vital factor in the promotion of that cause. Has Methodism a right to a place in the sun? I would like to urge a good attendance for this service.

Church notes: As you know a newspaper likes to publish the kind of news that its patrons like to read and news of interest which is being read, we have been given an extra space in this paper for the purpose of publishing our church news. We of course are anxious to know just how you think of our news and whether or not the church notes are of interest to the patrons of the paper. Now, we are going to ask a favor of you, kind reader, in response to this contribution by the editor and that is that you drop him a card, saying that you are a regular reader of the church notes published in the paper and express appreciation for their appearance.

This may seem to be a strange procedure to you. On the other hand radio has introduced this procedure in the presentation of its program to the public, and I am going to me that this is only a small courtesy that you can extend.

Do it now, while it is fresh on your mind.

elers or by some careless handling of matches. Strong winds, which in the early days were not especially bad, became a general menace. The flames over the country, especially in the fall when the prairie grass was dry, and fires gained force as they swept along and burned the crops and destroyed homes and crops. Purrows were plowed up on either side of the road, and the flames were seen to go there for safety when persons saw the fire come. Often they started backfire to save themselves.

Winters in the early days were severe. The blizzards of 1870 were the worst for a short period but the winter of 1880 and 1881 was an indelible one. The snow was deep on the ground in 1880 until April, 1881. There was a fuel famine. When a car of coal was delivered in Wayne it was portioned out in small amounts and sent so far. Snow was so deep that it was impossible to get down to the barn stalls to get them for fuel. The Bastians and other families burned hay and cobs much of the time. The wash boiler was turned upside down on the stove and had put beneath it and burned. The boiler gave more heating space and kept the room warmer. It finally became necessary to burn corn. The barns of corn were saved and fed to the chickens. Chickens, cows, horses and hogs tried to keep warm in the straw barns. It was common for the animals to walk on top of the snow and dig down to get ears of corn from the stocks in the field. Mr. Bastian had to carry hay in a sack from the stacks to the house for fuel. The snow was tightly enough packed to hold him but it usually leaked into the doghouse which covered him to the shoulders. To travel with the hay he threw the sack ahead of him and climbed on the snow banks as he followed. The family had plenty to eat during that winter because it was always the custom of all settlers to store enough for six months in the house in the fall. Drouths also hindered the early settlers. This section had a small amount of rain because there were no trees to draw the moisture. Rain here drew more moisture also after it was broken. The Bastians recall one time when the water, after a heavy rain, was six inches deep in the dug-out. There were not many such storms but when rain did come it usually leaked into the doghouse. Mr. and Mrs. Bastian enjoyed their life. Days were filled with hard work that kept them busy from 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning until 10 or 11 at night, but they enjoyed it all and are happy today with the memory of those early experiences.

There were not many such storms but when rain did come it usually leaked into the doghouse. Mr. and Mrs. Bastian enjoyed their life. Days were filled with hard work that kept them busy from 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning until 10 or 11 at night, but they enjoyed it all and are happy today with the memory of those early experiences.

Winters were severe. The blizzards of 1870 were the worst for a short period but the winter of 1880 and 1881 was an indelible one. The snow was deep on the ground in 1880 until April, 1881. There was a fuel famine. When a car of coal was delivered in Wayne it was portioned out in small amounts and sent so far. Snow was so deep that it was impossible to get down to the barn stalls to get them for fuel. The Bastians and other families burned hay and cobs much of the time. The wash boiler was turned upside down on the stove and had put beneath it and burned. The boiler gave more heating space and kept the room warmer. It finally became necessary to burn corn. The barns of corn were saved and fed to the chickens. Chickens, cows, horses and hogs tried to keep warm in the straw barns. It was common for the animals to walk on top of the snow and dig down to get ears of corn from the stocks in the field. Mr. Bastian had to carry hay in a sack from the stacks to the house for fuel. The snow was tightly enough packed to hold him but it usually leaked into the doghouse which covered him to the shoulders. To travel with the hay he threw the sack ahead of him and climbed on the snow banks as he followed. The family had plenty to eat during that winter because it was always the custom of all settlers to store enough for six months in the house in the fall. Drouths also hindered the early settlers. This section had a small amount of rain because there were no trees to draw the moisture. Rain here drew more moisture also after it was broken. The Bastians recall one time when the water, after a heavy rain, was six inches deep in the dug-out. Historic Coin Found. Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 1.—A worn bronze coin now reposing in the archives of the Nebraska State Historical society, has been given additional light on the Spanish expedition under Villaur in Nebraska in 1720.

The coin, which was found several years ago by W. J. Jensen on his farm near Monroe, Neb., has been identified by E. E. Blackman, curator of the historical society, as a Swedish coin probably lost by a trader with the Spanish caravan which penetrated to the Loup valley in 1720.

The coin, which was unearthed during the digging of a post hole, was minted in Sweden in 1716 during the reign of Charles XII and possibly was lost by a member of the expedition which was massacred by the Pawnees.

The Spanish band, which numbered about 60 soldiers and traders and a party of Indian allies, was sent in the region of Nebraska as it is similar to those used in the Spanish explorations of ancient village sites on the Pawnees.

Curator Blackman, who began explorations of ancient village sites on the Pawnees 25 years ago, supports the theory that the massacre occurred near the present town of Monroe. A number of brass plates, similar to those used in the Spanish armor in the eighteenth century and parts of a helmet and a stirrup of the period have been dug up in the region at different times. A number of old Spanish coins also have been found in the region.

He called attention to carrying out of the slogan, "Seek Ye first the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness." This closed a pleasant evening.

Popular Screen Play Coming To Crystal

Harold Bell Wright, the most popular living author, as proven by the statement of his publishers that his books during the past ten years have been read by over 56,000,000 people throughout the world, began life as a poor lad. He inherited his unusual practicality from his father, who was a carpenter. From his mother he was endowed with an artistic bent. He himself, alone, however, does he owe his triumph in reaching the pinnacle of fame in the literary world. He was first a home painter and afterwards a preacher before he was moved by purely public welfare desires to become a writer. One of the most noted of his works is "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent." It deals with a man made great by love. This book was recently translated to the screen. The film version, personally supervised by Wright, is of the same title and contains all of the wonderful human interest and thrilling suspense of the novel. "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent" is a Principal Pictures Maxter Attraction will be the powerful super-feature at the Crystal theater on January 8 and 9.

Garage is Destroyed.
Chambers, Neb., Dec. 31.—The G. E. Tibbets Ford garage was destroyed by fire last midnight, eight cars and one Fordson tractor being lost in the flames, together with about $4,000 worth of repair parts. Eighteen cars were saved. The contents were partially insured. The fire is believed to have started in the light plant in the rear of the garage which furnished electricity to the town. The plant was also destroyed and the townpeople are without electric lights.

Why is it that children always get up to bed when they aren't sleepy, and go to bed when they aren't?

Wayne Couple In State Paper Group

The Nebraska Farmer recently asked for life histories of Nebraska couples who had been married long, and they received over a hundred pictures of Nebraskans who had been married from fifty to seventy-two years. Mrs. and Mrs. James J. Henry of Mitchell, who were married seventy-two years ago, Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Foster of Franklin sixty-eight years ago and Mr. and Mrs. James Giles of Denton sixty-seven years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Sommers Fox of Wayne, were in the group. They have been married sixty-three years. The Nebraska Farmer is publishing the pictures and histories of all the couples whose names were sent and the following was in the Jan. 2 issue regarding Mr. and Mrs. Fox: "Mr. and Mrs. Sommers Fox were married sixty-three years ago, on May 1, 1862, in Springfield, Ill., and two days later Mr. Fox was sworn into the army by the same man who had performed his marriage ceremony. He saw much hard fighting in the Civil war, taking part in the siege of Vicksburg and other great battles. He was mustered out of the army in April, 1865, and that fall he started with his family for Kansas in a covered wagon drawn by a team of milk cows. They arrived there two months later and lived on their homestead for thirteen years. Forty years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Fox moved to Wayne county, Nebraska, where they have since made their home. They have five children living, twenty-one grandchildren, and twenty-four great grandchildren.

An Appeal.
We call on Congressman Howard to make good. He was first elected to congress on his solemn pledge to collect from foreign debtors the only claims he held against them for the material furnished when they were bleeding white in our days of recovery. He saw much hard fighting in the Civil war, taking part in the siege of Vicksburg and other great battles. He was mustered out of the army in April, 1865, and that fall he started with his family for Kansas in a covered wagon drawn by a team of milk cows. They arrived there two months later and lived on their homestead for thirteen years. Forty years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Fox moved to Wayne county, Nebraska, where they have since made their home. They have five children living, twenty-one grandchildren, and twenty-four great grandchildren.

Wake up the coffers of our land, and demand the pound of flesh and its delivery? On no date has his voice been raised above a whisper, and then merely to say that he would "stay in" or something to that effect.

I've watched your course with some alarm, I've hoped you'd do and dare, Then give the farmer and the farm What thoughts you had to spare. But have you done a thing? I'll say, You have, else how that raise of pay?

Ah, Edger, since you pledged us true, Three years ago, about, I have depended much on you To drag our nation out, For since we've struggled to be free, In quagmires of dependency.

It might help some if you would try, But mind I fear you lag; You hear my wild, despairing cry, And let me chew the rag. Will you not break the silent spell Before the country goes to—Europe?

Enterprise.
(By Dr. A. L. Bixby.)
I have an ambition some day to rump In a Florida alligator swamp, Where life is too sluggish for fume and fuss, And the climate is mild and salubrious.

Where the tides are shallow—for I will stake out a town of enormous size. I will plat it, and name it, then-sally forth with my friends in the frozen north.

Good people contented with some small gain, Will purchase, their purpose to speculate; And will grow rich on the sales I make Of lots at the bottom of that dam lake.

And when the future will justify The buying and selling (and so will I). For this is the system by which kind Has dignified Florida real estate.

New Year Resolutions.
York Bayshore is the age-long custom to make new resolutions on New Year's Day. The custom is not without its benefits, even if the resolves only last until the sunset of the day of making. Decisions are always valuable. They add to one's moral equipment. They show one will to be a man of his word. The resolution which each of us ought to make, not only on New Year's Day, but on every day, is to resolve to do one thing better than yesterday and tomorrow is the base of our existence. Yesterday holds so many failures and heart aches. Tomorrow holds so many chances to defer what we should be doing today. The world would be instantly transformed if every person should adopt the practice of living just one day. The shadows of gone yesterdays would never darken the sunshine of today and cast their gloom on the hearts of today's workers. The alluring mirages of the coming tomorrows would not be beguiling them to let some of the pressing duties of today wait a more convenient and auspicious time.

Yesterday is a dead weight on happiness. Tomorrow is a cheat and robber. Today is the only day truly and it is filled with opportunities and capabilities for character-building, happiness-creating service. Between today's sunrise and sunset is time enough to do everything that duty devotes upon one. The dreamer dwells on yesterday, the saggard thinks of tomorrow, but he who achieves happiness and success makes the most of today.

There is no greater resolution, none fuller of real satisfaction and content, than to resolve to have one day, today, and make it a time and occasion for the doing of every duty of unselfish service that falls to one's lot to do. It is the supreme New Year's resolution. It is the secret of a happy, useful life.

Woman is Born, With the Artistic Ability to Make Wonders of Wood

BACK to the days of her grandfather in Bohemia, there was a couple with a most and a drawbridge in the Arban family possessions. Royal blood of the Arbanos carried on the name of Mrs. A. Saltzvoier, Omaha, Neb.

The romance of traditions re-built for her in day dreams that date ed a century ago. Her grandfather, Danzig, Kulshtin, a storm his castle of dreams, and within his walls she presides the lady Arbanos. And she has become the vision of the castle, that it has taken form on the castle top in her Omaha home. Decades ago she carved from old wood, and usually made to contain, preside of the lady Arbanos, pins, yards, bits of wicker and wood, and wooden articles and boxes, and wood together have become her castle.

Her Work Shop
Working with only her sewing machine and a knot of cord, and she has fashioned pieces of furniture, toy homes and doll houses. In oil she has painted many of the pieces that grace the walls of her friends, and bits of tapestry woven by her in her old moments are cherished gifts of others.

"I call this my work shop," laughed Mrs. Saltzvoier, as she entered her visitors to her tiny room from her home.

Most prominent in the room full of various articles under construction was the "castle" three feet from the top of the table to the tip of its highest spire.

"I like to do all sorts of odd things," she blushed as though to explain her activity. "I paint and embroider and make tapestry, and usually I become a wood carver, and build furniture and boxes for the kiddies."

The Danger Sign—The first sign of motor overheating is a danger signal of trouble ahead. It indicates that something is wrong with your cooling system.

Neglect—Disregard the danger signal and you're in for no end of grief. Overheating wrecks, wears out and sends more motors to the repair shop than any other cause.

The Big Repair Bill—The damage caused by overheating, such as warped and scored cylinders, burned out bearings and excessive wear can only be rectified by extensive repairs, replacements and a big repair bill.

Heed the Warning—Don't wait until your motor is virtually wrecked. At the first hint of overheating bring your car to us and let us examine your radiator. An examination won't cost you a cent—neglect will cost you many dollars.

Fixed in a Jiffy—Nine times out of ten overheating is caused by a defective radiator that can be fixed in a couple of hours or less—at insignificant cost—sometimes the radiator only needs cleaning.

Don't Wait—Moral, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Play safe, if your motor overheats now, or starts to, bring your car to us. We will be glad to examine your radiator without charge.

School Resumes After Vacation

Class in Public Speaking Plans to Present a Program Friday of Next Week.

Editorials.

Christmas has come and gone and the new year of 1926 has suddenly opened its portals and called to us to enter. Joyfully we accept the invitation amid the ringing of many bells and gaily we start upon a new journey around every corner of which we shall find surprises, happy and sad. We begin it in hope, courage and confidence, determined to do the best we can. And in this confidence so fresh and new with each year we make our resolutions.

So this year let every senior, every junior, every sophomore and every freshman resolve that he will attend and support with interest and pep every activity of his school and in this way boost Wayne high and push her to honor and glory for the year of 1926.

Assembly News.
The student assembly of Wednesday, Dec. 23, was of a musical nature. The club of the first grade under the instruction of Miss Doudna, sang a group of Christmas songs. The girls' glee club of the high school sang a few selections. The last number on the program was a reading by Esther Mae Ingraham.

These programs, so far have proved successful and are appreciated by all the students.

The semester examinations will be given starting Thursday, Jan. 7. They will continue through Friday of the next week, Jan. 15. The completion of these examinations will end the first half of the school year of 1925-1926.

Astetic Notes.
With a two-week rest to its credit the Wayne high school basketball squad is ready for hard drill and for the second game of the season on Friday, Jan. 5. Wayne plays Pilger at Wayne on that date. Not much is known of the Pilger team but nevertheless the Wayne boys will have to have plenty of speed. Wayne has one defeat and will be spirited for victory Friday when they trot out on the floor of the college gymnasium. Let's have a crowd to help win the first home game of the season.

Senior Notes.
The senior class ordered pins and rings.

Junior Notes.
The junior class play, "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire", which it is given the last of this month, is nicely started. The first act is well learned. Practice this week will be devoted to act two. The story is unusual to say the least and is brim full of real humor.

The late weather reminds us of Lowell's lines in "Snow Bound" when he says:

"So all night the long storm roared on,
The morning broke without a sun;
In tiny spherule traced with lines,
Of Nature's geometric signs,
In starry flake and pollicle
All day the hoary meteor fell;
And when the second morning above,
We looked upon a world unknown,
Of nothing could we call our own,
Around the glistening wonder bent
The blue walls of the firmament,
No cloud above, no earth below,
A universe of sky and snow."

Sophomores Notes.
As Tuesday was the last day of recitation for the ancient history class they had a spell down. Abigail Davis and Kathryn Lou Davis were the captains. Kathryn Lou Davis won the contest.

The English class will hand in the last of the book reports for the semester. This one will be the fourth book read.

To Have Program.
The public speaking class will present the following program, Jan. 15, 1926: "A Pair of Linatics", one-act comedy by Maurice Wright and Gayle Gildersleeve. They gave this little skit at Winside, Dec. 23, at the Jewel theatre with success. "The Telegram", dialogue in one act with Allan Bradford as messenger boy, Myron Brodway as grand opera singer and Esther Mae Ingraham as pianist. "At the Movies", comedy in one act, with Vern Sylvanus as the man on the "hot seat", Helen Thompson as Mrs. Griggs, Armand Hiacox as Mr. Griggs, Margaret Kruger as Clarice, a movie fan, Florence Ower as Nell, her country cousin, and Esther Mae Ingraham as pianist. Pianologues, fifteen minutes of entertainment by Esther Mae Ingraham. She also appeared on the program at Winside Dec. 23. "Who's a Crazy Now?" comedy in one act, with scenes with Genevieve Craig as Abigail Simpkins, an old maid, Natalie Johnson as Snowdrop, her colored servant, Elmer Owen as Smooth, an escaped convict, Clifford Meyers as the baggage-man, Ray Philbin as the policeman and Wayne Carpenter as Fred Tumbly Dittens. Music will be furnished by the glee club between numbers.

War Veteran May Be Granted A Pension

According to a dispatch in the Omaha World Herald for Jan. 3, Mrs. Kitty R. Miller of Wayne, wife of Harrison Scott, has applied to receive a disability pension from the government pension bureau for her father, Hugh Scott, Civil war veteran who is now in the hospital at Millis, Ill. The article is as follows:

"Fifty-five years ago, Hugh Scott, then a young veteran of the Civil war, was one of a band of 13 men who, with their families, organized and settled Wayne county, was declared insane by an insanity commission at Dakota City, Neb., and ordered committed to a state hospital in Illinois.

"Today Hugh Scott, at the age of 73, is in the Western State hospital at East Moline, Ill., and in a short time, assurances have been given that his daughter and guardian, Mrs. Kitty Miller, will receive a disability pension from the United States pension bureau for her father, representing 30 thousand dollars, representing the uncollected disability pension dating back to 1872.

"Scott enlisted as a private in Company G, Second regiment, Illinois rifle artillery, in a company of 1864, at Rochelle, Ill., at the age of 17. Towards the close of the war the company in which Scott served was ordered to Springfield, Ala., to guard the government provisions taken from the Confederates. On April 11, two days after the close of the war, the company was ordered to drive the company of Union soldiers out of Mobile, a shell from an enemy gun exploded between a cannon and being fired by Scott's company. Scott and the other one hundred soldiers were knocked down by the shock.

"Brain Membrane Ruptured
"The shock of the explosion caused a rupture of the membrane covering Scott's brain which, it is thought, was responsible for his insanity.

"When word was received from the north that the war had ended, Scott's company was sent back to Springfield, Ill., where it was stationed until September 4, 1865, when it was mustered out.

"Scott immediately returned to his home in Viola township, LeFlore county, Ill., where it is said his unbalanced state of mind began to be noticeable. Parents of Miss Maria Miller, to whom he was married in LeFlore county a year after his return from the army, tried to persuade her not to marry him because of his mental condition. Miss Miller, however, thought Scott was only temporarily unbalanced and that he would soon recover from the shock. The couple lived on a LeFlore county farm for a time where a son and daughter were born to them. The son, however, died while young.

"About five years later, Mrs. Scott's parents took her and the children to their home because of Scott's condition, and she went to live with his parents who moved, in 1870, to Wayne county, Neb., locating on a farm four and one-half miles southeast of Wayne near the side of LaPorte, the first county seat.

"First Pension was $12.
"Although in the same year Scott's parents noticed that he was getting weaker mentally, and they took him to Dakota City, Neb., where he was adjudged insane. Scott was removed from the authorities near the Missouri river and made his way back to his former home in Illinois where he was placed in an Illinois state hospital. Not long after, his parents and wife died, and in 1890 a guardian was appointed for him when the government awarded him his first pension for $12 a month.

"Scott's first pension was automatically increased to $72 a month, and when Scott's guardian died about 1900, Mrs. Miller, his daughter, applied for the guardianship. Under the Illinois law, a guardian is required to pay the keep of an inmate in a state hospital.

"By an act of May 1, 1920, Scott's pension was increased to $120 a month which will be paid Mrs. Miller until Scott's death. From then on, Mrs. Miller will draw a pension of $44 a month. The act provided a veteran's child who is an invalid. Mrs. Miller has been unable to walk for four years because of rheumatism. She has spent several years traveling through the south for her health, and moved to Wayne about a year ago.

"The bill in December, through Representative Edgar Howard of Columbus, Miss., signed on December 10, 1925, filed evidence with the pension bureau showing that Scott was insane when he was discharged from the army, and that his affliction is the direct result of a brain operation. Mrs. Miller obtained affidavits from Scott's captain and from James Adrian in Lorimer, Ia., only a short distance from Scott's home, that he was of sound mind when he entered the service, and from a Chicago doctor, who examined Scott after the war, showing that he was unbalanced when he was discharged.

has received and what he is entitled to under the disability law. "According to the bill, money from Washington, the Scott pension, if awarded, will be the largest accumulated pension ever paid out by the government.

The band of pilgrims who start for New Orleans these holidays will not find it as cold down there as it is here. They will find, however, some disagreeable things in that country which they do not have here at this time of the year, among which may be mentioned mud. Mud is said to be a foot deep all over New Orleans and vicinity, and the street cars have quit running. Those attending the exhibition have to walk or wade several miles or else hire conveyance at fabulous prices.

The pilgrims starting on Monday will get to New Orleans on Thursday morning. They will look around for a week or two, and then they will embark on one of the grand steamships and make a break for the coast of Cuba. Arriving at Havana after a day's voyage and sea sickness, they will see the wonders and beauties of that tropical region where the world's sugar, coffee, cigars and salt to Florida, resting themselves in shady orange groves or near big strawberry beds, and finally, after visiting the city and the bay, John's river, and visiting the towns along it, they will go through Georgia and northern Alabama to New Orleans. They will expect to get back to New Orleans in time to see the Mardi Gras entertainment, and then they will be home.

Bath Tubs and Immortality.
Omaha Bee: A Chicago poet announces his intention to go into retirement. He wants to get away from bath tubs and all they mean. He wants to lead the simple life, to associate with birds and fishes, and all that sort of thing. "Why should a man sell his freedom for a bath tub and a gilded radiator?" Who, he asks, and pause for reply. None comes. Man has sold his birthright for comfort. That he may be protected from the sharp corners of existence he has given up the precious boon of liberty.

If he were true to himself, to his high aspirations, he would cut out automobiles and radios, telephones, street cars, all things that make life what it is. He would go back to living in the wilderness. Here he would strike his first great snag. No wilderness is left in this part of the world. Man would have to travel far to find enough wilderness in which to be free and happy, dirty and unkempt.

Diogenes was a cynic. Today he would be called a nihilist and a nihilist. One who has studied his case would wonder he was tolerated in a civilized community. Diogenes habitually pretended to live in a bath tub, where all could see him. He would be arrested today for obstructing traffic. He was filthy in his person and his habits. Immortal, not for any service he performed, or any legacy of use he left the world, just because he stands as a cynic, a scouring soul who would not barter his birthright for a bath. St. Simon Stylite is better remembered for his disgusting habits than for his piety.

Any liberty that is restricted by the regular and persistent use of a bath tub is too small an item to be worth worrying about. And a poet who must resort to the wilderness to get attention will not leave a great gap in the literary ranks when he takes his ultimate departure to that realm beyond, where bathing is not required, for all are pure.

Budgeting Time.
York Republican: The editorial eye caught a newspaper note in an exchange to the effect that a minister in a Nebraska town had budgeted his time. He rises at a certain hour, has a limited time for household duties, five hours for study, one hour for relaxation, etc. Every minute of the day is budgeted and the pastor asks his flock to be governed thereby. We venture the opinion the minister will discard the budget after a brief trial. Newspaper men glare have tried budgeting their time, but it can't be successfully done. It looks easy and efficient, but there are greater considerations than time, and will go far, accomplish much and sacrifice greatly; but hate will go far, also, achieve largely and suffer the pangs of death and of hell in order to reach its objective. In all the history of the world, these two great emotions have wrought side by side in the working out of human destiny, and civilization today is a composite effect of their powerful and antagonistic primal impulses.

Observe the Cat.
Hartington Herald: Talking about weather prophets, if you have a good, old fashioned house cat in your home, you have one of the most reliable prognosticators available. It is better than the weather bureau, better than an almanac and better than all the various signs by which some people set so much store. A cat can always forecast an approaching storm and, when you see tarry curling herself up by the fire, although the weather may be still mild, you can rest assured that there is something brewing.

Love and Hate.
Hartington Herald: Which is the stronger emotion—love or hate? That is another interesting psychological problem. Love has been declared to be "the greatest thing in the world," and is generally considered the most powerful emotion of the human heart, but hate is so intense and so unquenchable at times that one is led to wonder which one is the stronger of the two. The One who Forgot

By RUBY M. AYRES

CH. 233

Begin Here Today.

Peter Lyster, seriously injured in battle on the front, is brought back to London by Lieut. John Arnott, in an attempt to revive the former's memory, sufficed out with a shell torn through his coat, mangled, killing twenty men and injuring many more, among them Peter. Before going to France Peter had become engaged to Nan Marraby, who refused to believe her lover capable of forgetting his promise of marriage, until brought to face the unrecognizing eyes of the man that had once worshipped her.

Nan has returned to the small apartment shared with her by Joan Endicott, whose husband also joined the colors. She is telling her friend about the unhappy visit with her former lover. Joan expresses the wish that she might do something to help.

Now Go On With the Story.

"Nobody can help," Nan said harshly. "Oh, I'm not going to whine and make a fool of myself for ever. Don't think that, but just at first—just now—I don't think I can bear it all. To have seen him, and heard his voice, and his laugh..." She caught her breath hard.

"But he will get better," Joan urged gently. "Of course he will get better. Mr. Arnott himself said that Peter was bound to get well in the end."

"He didn't. He only said that the doctors thought there was a hope, and even if there is, anything may have happened by that time. He never used to like the flapper kind of girl he was with this evening. He always said they bored him, but he didn't look bored when I walked into the room," she added, broken-heartedly.

"—I hate to say it, but—but do you think that perhaps—he hasn't really forgotten? That's just like so many other men who care for a girl for a time, then they forget them?—I—I hate even to suggest it to my happiness as much as you do, and I'm going to fight for it, and I'll be pluck gone out all at once and she broke down into bitter sobbing.

"Nan," said Joan tearfully; but Nan brushed away and locked herself in her own room.

John Arnott called in the morning as he had promised. He had been so sure that he would have to meet a broken woman this morning; but she smiled at him, though there was a look of tragedy in her eyes that hurt him.

"It's kind of you to come," she said. She avoided looking at the little parcel he had laid on the table. She knew well enough what it contained—her letters—the letters she had written to Peter after he went to France, the pages of foolish words and dreams which had been written for Peter's eyes alone.

She wondered how much this man had read of them.

"I've brought your letters," Arnott said simply.

Nan thanked him quietly. "And—and Mr. Lyster?" she asked. "Is he—is he well this morning?"

"Oh, he's A. 1.," Arnott answered unconcernedly. "His lazy beggar and was only just getting up when I came out."

Nan laughed.

"Are you—are you both going to stay in town?" she asked presently. "I mean, for any length of time?"

"I dare say we shall for a few days, but—but I want Lyster to come home with me for a bit to my people. He hasn't any friends of his own, you know—nobody he cares to go to, at least."

"That is kind of you," she said constrainedly. "He will be pleased to go, I am sure."

"Why didn't you go to write and ask him," Arnott said. "I've told her all about him..." He paused, the color deepened a little in his face. "Miss Marraby," he said hesitatingly, "I—should so like to do something for you, and—I wonder if—if you'll think it presumption if—I make a suggestion?"

Nan smiled.

"I am sure I shall not—I am very grateful to you for all your kindness to me. What is it?"

He twisted his cap nervously.

"Well, it's—just this: my sister's one of the best—I'm sure you'd like her—she's a dear—but her husband the first year of the war, you know—and she's got a ripping little boy—I make my home with her—always—did you know her before the war—and she—she'd be so jolly sympathetic if she knew about you, don't you know? So I wonder if you'd care to come and stay with her—with us—while—while Lyster is here. I'd get her to write and ask you, if you'd care to about it?" he added in eager concern.

"Oh, I couldn't," she said, breathlessly. "It's so good of you to think of me—I—I've wanted to do it so long—but—but..." She laughed ruefully. "It would be so dreadful—so... oh, no, I couldn't!"

Arnott looked sorry.

"I thought it was such a ripping idea," he said boyishly. "You—you don't know what a decent sort my sister is."

"I am sure she is," Nan said. In her heart she added: "She must be a dear."—any other like you."

"But I couldn't," she said again.

"—It's—oh, it would be such an impossible situation! Besides—she'd laugh at rather better—supposing Mr. Lyster took a dislike to me, it would be a heart-breaking thought, but it seemed to Nan as if she had suffered so much already that whatever happened in the future nothing could be much worse.

"And yet—on the other hand," Arnott said gently, "the might get better—the fact of your being here—might make him remember you," but Nan shook her head.

"I've got you very long leave," she asked.

Arnott colored.

"I don't know—several weeks, I expect. I had a bit of a knock myself, you see," he explained awkwardly.

Nan's eyes flashed into sudden interest.

"Were you wounded, too? I didn't know—you never told me."

"Oh, it wasn't anything," he said. "Only a flesh wound in the shoulder, but it's a bit tiresome, and won't heal," he indicated his left shoulder, and now Nan could see that it looked bulky under his coat as if it were much bandaged.

"Why didn't you tell me?" she asked. She felt ashamed of herself for being so wrapped up in her own concerns.

"Why should I tell you?" he said, lightly. "It's nothing anyway—" he looked round. "I think I ought to be going. I promised to get back in half an hour. He wants to look round the shops."

The Laureate.
(By D. L. Eixley.)

It seems to be decreed by fate
That I must pose, if I pose I may,
As Saul Creedy's poet laureate.
(The honor not suggesting pay.)
Altho nobody yet has stated
That I've been post-laureated.

Of local poets I'm the worst
That ever tampered with a pen,
And only that I got here first
Gives me the clink on other men
Who are in some respects my masters
As poets or poetasters.

Nan started to her feet. There was a burning spot of color in her pale cheeks. "And you dare to compare me with her?" she said fiercely. "You dare to compare Peter with that—that miserable man who she thought she cared for? Oh, how dare you! How dare you!"

Joan looked horribly distressed.

"I didn't mean to be unkind; but—but you told me yourself you hardly knew anything about Mr. Lyster."

There was a little silence. Joan looked up timidly.

"And what—what are you going to do?" she asked. "Are you going to see him again? Oh, Nan, what if it had been the best thing to have told him who you were? To ask him if he didn't remember you? To behave just as if nothing had happened since you saw him last?"

Young Von Seggern Told Of Accident

Norfolk Daily News, Jan. 4.—Fred Von Seggern, Jr., the lone survivor of the grade crossing tragedy of Christmas day, has been told of the details of the accident that cost the lives of his father, mother, two sisters and brother. The 19-year-old youth listened to the story, as it was related to him by his attending physician, in a quiet manner.

Shortly after he had learned of the tragedy, he became a little hysterical and his brother and brother-in-law stayed with him during the night. He was taken to his home Saturday by his relatives. He was practically recovered from his head and face injuries which he received when he was hurled from the car to the guards near the grade crossing.

When he left the hospital the boy hid his special nurse and other attendants farewell. His mother was composed in spite of the shock he had just received.
