SPRING FEVER

The first wave of spring fever finds the body unprepared for the change, and as a consequence a tired feeling, overwheeled, brain and muscles. The spirit seems as willing as ever, but the flesh is faint and weak. Last fall the blood was thickened for winter use, and it takes time for it to spring to thin it down so it will speed up and inspire energy. When the winter's cold and sun-drenched introduced, people become sluggish, and they have a powerful disinclination either to think or to work. Eyes are heavy and feet are heavier, and one year for the fifteen-meadow and shady brook. This vernal languor passes as the first autumnal changes in the human organism, and one becomes adjusted to the warm elements. Then the summer sun, with its burning rays, and sweet-scented buds burst into bloom, gives buoyancy and causes joyous thrills.

"The Wanderer" Comes To Crystal Theatre

Way back in the days when caravans were popular instead of automobiles and caravansaries were the centers of road travel, the prodigal son left home to find a wife, a man with the aid of his father's confidant and adviser, the man who had been his friend and as he mounted his mule and set out for the city under the villainous influence of a wicked merchant. Then, even as now, there were sirens and sounders, gamblers and pawnbrokers to make the road to the city as attractive and easy going for the country boy.

With the siren's help he saw the town—so thoroughly that he was looking for it for some time, cherishing his father's advice and cussing the confederates.

Fifty-Eighth Anniversary.

Tones, Neb., March 18.—The fifty-eighth anniversary of their marriage was celebrated here by Mr. and Mrs. John Armstrong on March 14. The former is 82 and the latter 77.

The couple came by covered stage from Iowa to Nebraska in 1871 and have lived in the state 55 years and have lived in their residence in Tones since they came here.

During the civil war, Mr. Armstrong was in the Union army and served 18 months in the campaigns of the Forty-eighth Illinois infantry.

He was wounded at the battle of Atlanta. He is one of the two surviving members of a band of 200. None of which G. A. B. had in the early days had a membership of more than 25.

"The Wanderer" Comes To Crystal Theatre

Way back in the days when caravans were popular instead of automobiles and caravansaries were the centers of road travel, the prodigal son left home to find a wife, a man with the aid of his father's confidant and adviser, the man who had been his friend and as he mounted his mule and set out for the city under the villainous influence of a wicked merchant. Then, even as now, there were sirens and sounders, gamblers and pawnbrokers to make the road to the city as attractive and easy going for the country boy.

With the siren's help he saw the town—so thoroughly that he was looking for it for some time, cherishing his father's advice and cussing the confederates.

William Collier, Jr., plays the part of the country boy, Ernest Torrence is the professed protector, and Greta Nissen entices as the bewitching girl.

Whether you are a willing or unwilling twentieth century wanderer, or even no wanderer at all, you will not be fascinated by this Paramount picture opening at the Crystal theatre today. You will be convinced, more than ever, that the old song is right—"there's no place like home."

Wallace Beery, Tyrone Power and Kathryn Williams complete the featured cast of the production, which was written for the screen by J. T. Donohoe from the stage spectacle of the same name by Maurice Samuels. Raoul Walsh directed.

A Comfortable Cottage

Simplicity is the keynote of this attractive home with its full-length, latticed porch and broad eaves. It is very good looking now, but of course when the crimson ramblers have covered the lattice, it will be much prettier and more homey looking.

Inside, this home is conveniently arranged. There is no wasted space. There are two good bed rooms, large living room with fireplace and dining alcove with built-in seats, as well as a properly arranged kitchen and bath room.

Plans and blue prints of this dandy home can be seen at our office. Erect this home for you at a total cost, including full basement, oak floors, complete for $4,338.00. No extras unless plans are changed.

If fireplace and fireplace chimney are omitted, the cost will be correspondingly reduced.

A lady writer in a current magazine regrets the spirit of independence which developed early in her life...

The small of burning rubbish has been in the air, and many gardeners are likely to be dismayed by the April frosts, have been planted. In this connection, we may add that the average housewife contends that her husband can derive as much benefit from exercise from working in the garden as he can get out of playing golf...

HOME RESPONSIBILITY
Whenever faulte young people are made to feel largely due to laxity on the part of parents. Each parent is mainly responsible for the conduct of his children and should be made responsible for the conduct of their children. Adults are often keenly averted to the imperfection of their own children and forgetful of bad influences and unwelcome habits on the part of their own offspring...

In regard to building state-highways and other roads in this county, Wayne is sometimes unjustly blamed for selfish motives that do not exist for the purposes that are but the creations of lively and willing imaginations. Wayne and its business organization have on the whole done a very good thing in the surrounding territory who would have better highways leading to their homes and other business enterprises...

The One Who Forgot

By RUBY M. AYRES

Begin Here Today.

Peter Lyster has lost his memory from such shock as the wedding. From South London he has returned to London, he fails to recognize Miss Marbury, the girl to whom he became engaged before going to France. Nan has returned to her home, due to the death of her step-mother, to take care of her three young nephews. She is still in touch with

John Endicott, in London, who is now based on a writer's office. John Arnott, were spending their time at the home of Arnott's widowed sister not far from the Marbury estate. Nan is jealous of Arnott's sister, and very much disgusted with the attentions of Harley Sefton, a money-lender, who claims to have been a friend of Peter's before he went away. Peter is now living in a small flat with his mother. Sefton has told Nan that both her father and Peter owe him great sums of money.

Nan is walking through the woods near her home, crying over her fate when she meets Peter. She tries to explain her tears and soon becomes quite flippant with "The Man Who Forgot." They have walked back to the house, and Peter is day gone already. Nan-Tim says that he thinks the war will be over this year, but I can't help feeling that he only says it to comfort me. I think you a great deal, and wonder how you are getting on, and if you have seen anything of Peter Lyster or Mr. Arnott. You know Nan, I think Mr. Arnott was just a little taken with you! He looked at you such a lot, and the day he came here after you had gone to London, he was most absurdly disappointed. I should like to see you settled down and happy. Nan after all, Peter isn't the only man in the world. I told Tim about what had happened, and he was very sympathetic, but he says that life is too short to spend it in grieving, and that of anything happened to him he would rather know that I had found some man to look after me and be kind to me than to think of me being unhappy all my life. Isn't it sweet and unselfish of him?

Nan tossed the letter aside—it was so like Joan—full of little aimless trivialities. She wondered apprehensively if the day would ever come when she would have to go back and live with her again.

She re-read the letter very obviously, and about John Arnott.

"As if I could ever care for an Englishman!" she told herself passionately.

Nan was changing her frock upstairs in the afternoon when she heard a car drive up the road and stop at the gate. She looked out of her window curiously, then the blood flew to her cheeks in a rush of crimson.

Now Go On With The Story—
"It's such a long time since I lived in the country, that I've forgotten how to climb a gate."

Nan looked at him, and suddenly the moonlight seemed blotted out and she stood before him—she could see his eyes plainly in the faint moonlight, with her half-laughing, half-embarrassed expression.

"His face was raised to her as she stood above him—she could see his eyes plainly in the faint moonlight, with her half-laughing, half-embarrassed expression.

"My brother has spoken about you so often."

son, John Arnott was getting out of the car, but he turned to give his hand to a woman in black.

"His sister," Nan told herself. She rushed to the head of the stairs and called to the little maid.

"Are you dressed? Mary—are you dressed?"

It was an enormous relief to get the affirmative; she whispered instructions over the balusters.

"Some people are calling—ask them in the drawing room, and say I will be down in a minute—oh, and, Mary—keep the boys out of the way and, for heaven's sake, mind that the cake doesn't burn—it's in the oven."

She twisted her hair up anyhow—her hands shook as she fastened her frock.

"I don't know why on earth I'm so excited," she thought. Her heart was pounding traitorously as she went down the stairs.

The drawing room door was closed, and Nan stood for a moment outside.

WHAT at last she went into the room there was a little dusk in her cheeks, but she smiled composedly enough as she went forward.

She was standing staring at a picture. He wheeled round as the door opened. He began a clumsy introduction, but his sister cut him short.

"I have heard so much of Miss Marraby that there isn't any need for us to be formally introduced. John," she said. She gave Nan her hand.

"My brother has spoken of you so often, I feel as if I knew you all ready," she said.

"You are very kind," Nan said, but her cheeks felt hot.

"Peter was always fond of children," she said, unthinkingly.

Arnott's sister looked up quickly.

"You know Mr. Lyster well?" she asked in faint surprise.

"Oh, no—at least..." Nan stammered and hesitated; she looked appealingly at John.

"He's always been a friend of mine," Miss Marbury has met him when we've been together once or twice, he says "this is all..." He followed Nan to the table. "I say let me help," he urged. "I'm a dabster at pouring out tea and passing cups and things."

Doris Mears watched them silently across the room; she was a slightly built woman, rather below average height, with extremely neat hands and feet, of which she was inordinately proud.

"Will Mr. Lyster be coming along?" Mrs. Mears asked presently; she tried hard to make her question appear casual, but to the other woman there was a sort of suppressed eagerness in her voice.

"He didn't say," she answered exactly. "They all turned off into the woods, I should be troubled to keep any tea for them."

"It's no trouble," Nan said. "The boys will be hungry, anyway."

"I'm not going to like her," was the disavowal thought in her heart.

"And she isn't going to like me, either."

She was ashamed of the instinct; she liked Arnott well enough to wish to like his sister also.

She took her cup and went over to sit down beside Doris. "I hear you have a little boy," she said. "I wish you had brought him with you."

Mrs. Mears laughed, and raised one small hand deprecatingly.

"He's a darling, but I'm a perfect wreck after 10 minutes with him—so I always leave him at home. He loves Peter, too, Miss Marbury—I'm afraid he gives him an awful time."

Peter likes it, said Arnott, he's bright, rather—his mother was—his mouth was full of cake, "Peter—hullo! here they come."

The morning brought Nan a letter from John Endicott. The wonderful Tim had arrived, and apparently all was sunshine.

"I haven't really time to write at all," he began her letter, "but I'm in a flitting round, begging me to go out with him, but I thought I ought just to write you a note and say how happy I am. Rain Water

Every spring after the first rain we are swamped with requests to come here and go there to do new spouting and to repair the old. It seems that it is necessary for every one to lose the first good rain before they realize the necessity of having their spouting looked after. Then comes a flood of hurry-up calls with the remark, "I want it fixed before the next rain because I lost all that last one." With all of these requests coming in the next day, naturally someone has to wait and another rain or two is probably lost before we can get there. Why not call us up today and have your rain spouts looked after. Get the FIRST RAIN into your cistern rather than on the ground. Our Phone is 108.

From Ponca Journal, March 25, 1926.

Two railroad transfer boats commenced running between Sioux City and Lovington on Tuesday.

Wild ducks and geese are plentiful, traveling for the north as fast as possible.

Judge Crawford opened his first term of district court in this county this place Tuesday morning.

At last after assurances of tedious litigation a decision has been rendered in the supreme court of the United States in the Dixon county case in the favor of the attorneys who had the case in charge.

It is indeed a victory for the attorneys who had the case in charge, as well as the few citizens who maintained that the county would triumph, and there were but few who actually believed that the bonds would be paid in the end.

The Journal was among those who thought the case would eventually go against the county, which belief was vindicated upon the adverse decision of the United States circuit court at Omaha, and upon the opinion of some of the best lawyers in the state, and when the bondholders proposed to settle a year ago by taking reduced bonds at a reduced rate of interest, the trial was sincere in advocating the measure because it looked to us that it would be a saving of money in the end. Even since the decision against our former belief, we do not feel disposed to be in any of the ground we took, even though as we simply made the same mistake as did the United States circuit court, and many prominent attorneys whom we might name.

The Aeromotor Windmill

Is in popular demand everywhere. Because it is completely and perfectly self-acting—because it gives more service with less attention than any other piece of machinery on the farm. Because—after nine years of use in every part of the world—cold, temperate, torrid—it has proven its ability to run one year, two years, three years and even longer with the one original oiling and with-out its ever being necessary for anyone to climb the tower. Because—its design was well designed, well made and backed by a company with a reputation for doing things right.

Rock Island No. 8 Gang Plow

The Rock Island No. 8 is the plow in which all owners take particular pride. It is most satisfactory all-around gang plow. Strength, ease of operation, lightness of draft, and the work accomplished—all of these features are worked out in this plow to an unusual degree of perfection. The No. 8 has already "made farm life easier" and more profitable for thousands of farmers, and it can do the same for you. Our Ramon Foot Lift. Rock Island foot lift has a double compound lever. Mark a straight line from the rear treadle when the plow is in the ground and you will notice when you break and lock that the rear foot goes backward. This gets it closer to you. It is almost a straight down pressure when raising the plow. It floats back closer to the seat as you press farther down.

Hanson Store Is Robbed Of Goods

The G. D. Hanson & Co. clothing store in Wakefield, operated by R. C. Hanson, was entered Friday night and goods valued at about $2000 were stolen.

No clue to identity of the intruders has yet been found but it is thought the store was burglarized about 4 o'clock Saturday morning after the night watchman had gone off duty.

The intruders first attempted to gain entrance through the basement, breaking a window and trying to force their way through the door in the floor.

Because the door was securely bolted they gave up and tried the back window to the main part of the store. The intruders broke in the inside.

They managed to get the window open and sawed one bar. Pulling this away they got through an opening about four inches square and unlocked the back door. Goods were removed through the back door, and the intruders were taken away in an automobile.

About seventy men's and young men's suits and about twenty pairs of shoes were taken. The suits were removed from the two back show cases in the store. No suits were left in the two back show cases.

The shoes from the back show cases of the room. They removed the shoes from the boxes. From the fact that the shoes were taken in this way it is thought they were untouched.

It is thought the intruders were satisfied in their work and were notified when the store was opened the following morning.
