

Are Here Early In School Work

Judge and Mrs. A. A. Welch Taught in Wayne in Eighties—Kinds of Entertainment.

Among the earliest instructors in the Wayne school were Judge and Mrs. A. A. Welch, the former having come here early in the latter part of the year in December of the same year.

The first teacher in the local school was "Mrs. R. M. Schuener, who lived on the Miner farm and who was pastor of the Lutheran church." Mr. Schuener taught in a one-room building on Logan street. As more grades were added in the school other rooms were secured. Judge Welch taught in one room of the Presbyterian church, a structure which stood on the present site of the school. The primary department of the school was in a store building on the site now occupied by the Wayne Variety store. Studies had a clothing store in the building. At one time some of the grades were housed in the court house when there was a frame building on the present site of the Beckenhauer funeral parlors.

Judge Welch was placed in charge of the school in 1870. Mrs. W. W. Wetherbee and Miss Susan Davies were instructors that fall also. Mrs. Welch, then Mrs. Anna Davies, was a teacher for many years and taught the beginners.

The schools were not carefully graded in the early days. The classes were ranged several years apart. The classifying into grades was soon started and gradually the grades and ages determined. The groups into which the students were placed.

In 1888 bonds amounting to $5000 were issued for construction of a school building in Wayne. Dr. R. B. Crawford and others wanted the new building located in the block east of the court house. A new addition of town lots had just been laid out by Taylor and Wachob west of the present site of the school and this had some influence in locating the block for the building. The new school had two large rooms on the first floor and one on the second floor. Additions were made later. In a few years the structure became too small. Local citizens of the Ward school were built on the lot near the standpipe. The new brick building was erected on the lot in the west part of town in 1908 and the Ward school was torn down a few years afterwards.

Original Town of Wayne.
The original town of Wayne includes eighty acres, forty being on each side of the main street. The south edge was a block beyond the present site of the depot and the north edge was between Third and Fourth streets. Crawford and Brown laid out an addition north of the original town and west of the main street. East addition was located east of the Crawford and Brown lots. Taylor and Wachob laid out an addition on the west edge and later's addition was north of Seventh street and east of Main. James Taylor laid out lots near the present fair grounds. Britton and Breder laid out an addition in the northwest part of town. Other additions have been made. The population of Wayne in 1870 was about 400. The first census was taken in 1875.

Clubs and Entertainments.
New year parties were important occasions in the early days. In these, as in all pastime, the whole community took a part. Women gathered in groups in a few homes in town and the men spent the day calling. Each man drew his friend for four usually went in a group and made the rounds to all the homes. The men might visit all the homes in the group, there being but twenty-five.

Church socials were also important and popular in the early days. To these everyone went and enjoyed programs and games. Local talent was often employed in presenting plays.

Spelling schools were popular in the rural districts in the early eighties and they did not enter the town schools. Judge Welch recalls that in 1876 an attempt was made to introduce them as a means of entertainment and enlightenment but the movement did not reach far.

The earliest clubs in Wayne were the Acme and the Monday groups. They were organized in about 1884.

Early Wayne Churches.
The Baptist was the first church in Wayne and the Monday group. The frame structure, was located on the corner east of the present Hrabak store. Rev. Mr. Filmer was the pastor. The Catholic church was a frame building on north Main street and the Presbyterians had a small structure. The Catholic church was the first located on the corner on which the standpipe now stands. Later the building was moved to its present location. A Russian church was built in Wayne in the early days two blocks west of the depot. This is now a residence.

Wayne Gazette: A large gang of Italians are now engaged in replacing the old rails on the Norfolk branch with new steel rails, in anticipation of the running of U. To Those Who Judge Quality by Price

The quality of Ford cars cannot be judged by the prices at which they are sold—because Ford prices are made possible by conditions that are absolutely unique in the automotive industry.

From mine to market the Ford car is the work of a single organization. The Company owns and operates the mines and forests that furnish the raw materials for its products. This material is carried over Ford transportation routes, fabricated in Ford mills, manufactured in Ford plants—and the finished product is sold to the public through Ford dealers.

The following statement, previously made in an advertising message, is repeated because of its significance to the public:

"If any other manufacturer endeavored to produce a car similar to the Ford, according to the high standards of quality in material and workmanship used by the Ford Motor Company and with the same tried and proved design, it would be impossible to offer it at anything like Ford prices. And it is well to note that even with less costly design they have not met Ford prices."

McCormick-Deering Tractor Design

The universal popularity of McCormick-Deering tractors continues to invite misstatements from competitors concerning various outstanding features of design.

The four cylinder motor is in keeping with our progress of design and manufacture and has resulted in our discarding the two cylinder construction. You may assure anybody desiring such information that we have no intention of discarding our present design of tractors, nor do we propose to add any tractors to the line having a power plant of less than four cylinders.

The same may be said of our two bearing crank shaft. This construction has proven its superior merits and is largely responsible for McCormick-Deering Tractor performance. You may authoritatively state that all McCormick-Deering tractors are supplied with two bearing crank shafts and that we do not contemplate any change in this construction.

The ball bearings used on crank shafts of McCormick-Deering tractors have already served the purpose of making our tractors most popular through their records of performance. Ball bearings are now used and will continue to be used in McCormick-Deering tractors.

We have not withdrawn the original warranty on our McCormick-Deering crank shafts and crank shaft ball bearings. Past performance has proven conclusively the merits of these parts.

You will always find the most clubs under the best apple tree. The more our competitors attack the good points of McCormick-Deering tractor construction, the more we are convinced of the merits of these units.

This paper is representative for general advertising in the Nebraska Press Association.

The older one gets, the less he becomes satisfied with himself and with his accomplishments. Many of the great men in mind for personal fitness and personal achievement cannot be attained in the short time allotted to life here.

The death of Luther Burbank removes a man who contributed many days of practical value to the development of horticulture. His achievements in plant life have immortalized his name. That so finely attuned to nature, is also immortal to his own happy surprise and contrary to his expressed opinion, is our firm belief.

Cows and hens will have their linings in Wayne next Saturday. The special train with exhibit and demonstration agents will be here. These two important items to Nebraska farmers will deserve all the attention they receive and we are sure the effort will be abundantly repaid in increased production and thus in increased wealth.

We suggest to those who have charged with duties that they so that no drinking or selling of bootleg liquor be permitted on the premises. Besides being a violation of the law, bootleg liquor is likely to furnish a diabolical habit in innocent young people and be a menace to their future health and happiness. The bootlegger who is an enemy to law and an enemy to people whom he would serve, should be promptly turned over to the authorities.

The petition by the railroad company to the state railway commission that be granted permission to reduce train service on the Bloomfield branch leads us to wonder how long before further curtailments will be considered necessary on account of increased use of automobiles and busses. Rather than discouraging farmers why not induce increased traffic by decreasing passenger rates? Try putting back the two-cent fare and see if the volume will justify the experiment. Keeping up rates and taking off trains would seem likely to stimulate the business of motor busses.

For a number of years the county commissioners have published as provided by the statutes at the option of the board, the assessed valuations on personal property, but it is reported that they have not as yet decided to do so this year. The publications showed each person's assessed valuation and permitted easy and open comparisons. Grounds for complaint, due to errors, were immediately available. Cost of publication would seem inconsequential in considering the satisfaction to taxpayers. If the publication of assessed valuations is desirable one year, it would appear desirable every year, and if it is worth while in one county, it would seem worth while in every county. Therefore, we believe the legislature would be warranted in removing the optional provision of the law and making publication mandatory in each county every year.

A swimming pool for Wayne seemed certain a few months ago. It appeared only a question as to whether it would be built by the county or by private enterprise.

COUNTER FORCE

We understand that the Nebraska Women's Educational club, which held its annual banquet here Saturday night, was organized to counterbalance the force of the schoolmasters' club. The women who constitute a large majority of the school workers, think the schoolmasters have had a political machine which they took with them to conventions, and which worked so perfectly that the numerically stronger sex had no chance to say anything. They felt they were being steamrollered. They were losing their right of free talking and presenting opinions. When they found their large representation at meetings was silent and merely acquiescent, they decided to rebel and organize, which they did. Now they have a machine of their own with roller rollers, and when the schoolmasters get their motive power into operation, the women meet it without any feeling. They express opinions, break plates and don't wait until after adjournment to talk.

YOUTH AND AGE

The mingling of youth and age is mutually beneficial. Age imparts the wisdom and the fruits of experience and ripened judgment; youth imparts vivacity and energy. Age modifies reckless daring and dangerous flippancy; youth fires ambition and postpones the mere and yellow leaf. Age acts as ballast; youth as dynamic force. Either without the other yields to lethargy on the one hand and to rudderless energy on the other. Age alone acts like a waterlogged craft waiting to sink; youth alone runs like the drive wheel of an engine with the governing belt off. Either may well cultivate the association of the other.

Congress
No. 1

I went to Washington the other day. I visited "The House of Representatives," they were in session. What I mean by being in session, the tax bill was up for debate and they were arguing on "Better Golf courses for the medium salaried man." I suppose if the World Court bill had been up, they would have been talking on "Shall America park oblong or parallel?"

Well, then I went over to the Senate. They had adjourned, so I felt that America was not having such a bad day at that. We were only 50 percent inefficient—THAT DAY.

You know we all joke and kid about Congress, but we can't improve on them. No matter who we elect, he is just as bad as the one he replaced. So with all their faults we love 'em. They are as good as the people who vote to put them there, and they are 10 times better than the ones who don't vote at all. They are like "Bull" Durham, they are not perfect, but they are the best in their line.

"Goodbye" Ends Your Conversation Pleasantly

A cheerful "Goodbye" at the end of your telephone conversation lets folks know you are through talking.

If this is not done they may remain on the line after you have hung up. Or they may feel that they have been cut off abruptly.

The One Who Forgot

By RUBY M. AYRES

Begin Here Today.

Peter Lyster has suffered the loss of his memory due to shell shock on the Western Front. He had failed upon returning to London to recognize —Nan Martley, to whom he became engaged prior to his departure for France. Nan has gone home to care for her three motherless stepbrothers, but it still is touch with John Endicott, a friend in London, who suggests that she forget Peter and encourage the budding of Peter's friend and fellow officer, John Arnot, with whom Peter is spending his leave at the home of Arnot's widowed sister situated near the Martley estate. Nan is jealous of Arnot's sister while being thoroughly disgusted with the attentions of Harley Sefton, money lender, who has told Nan that it is up to her to say whether he shall press payment of large sums of money which he claims Peter and Nan's father owe to him. Nan first met Sefton through Peter prior to his departure. Since his return he has failed to identify Sefton.

Nan is in a wood near her home when she meets Sefton who again presses his suit with threats and pleas. He has succeeded in forcing her to his arms, and kissing her when Peter appears on the scene.

Now Go On With the Story.

Peter looked from one to the other in blank astonishment—then his face changed; he took a step forward.

"Can I—can I be of any assistance, Miss Martley?" he asked, hesitatingly. "If—if this man has been annoying you—I thought I heard somebody call."

Nobody answered; Nan could only shake her head up.

Harley Sefton laughed.

"Your appearance is a little inopportune, my dear Lyster," he said smoothly. "And I can assure you that you can be of no assistance whatever—to either of us."

Peter looked at him steadily, "My sister—Miss Martley," he said curtly.

"No—no; it's all right; there is nothing new—nothing—thank you. She could not look at him. She wished that the earth would open and swallow her up. She could gladly have killed then she heard Peter's retreating steps down the narrow footpath. She raised her eyes in sudden astonishment and almost for a moment she had the curve in the wood would have hidden his khaki-clad figure from sight.

And even as she looked he stopped and glanced back over his shoulder, but Nan gave no sign, and he went on again and disappeared through the bushes.

"And now to resume our conversation," Sefton said.

Nan turned on him like a tigeress. "If you speak to me again—I will kill you," she panted.

She broke away from him before he could stop her and fled home.

How much had Peter seen? She asked herself in torment. What was he thinking of her? What sort of a woman did he imagine that she was? The doubt and uncertainty in his eyes cut her to the heart.

She paced up and down the room, wringing her hands.

She forgot how the time was flying—forgot that the boys must be wanting their tea—it was only when Claude threw a loudish head round the door and looked at her with large, apprehensive eyes that she realized how long she had stayed up in her room.

"Aren't we aren't we going to have any tea today, Nan?" he asked plaintively.

She turned away from him and straightened her ruffled hair.

"Of course we are, old man—I am just coming down."

Her voice shook.

Claude came across the room and leaned on the edge of the dressing table, staring at Nan in surprise.

"You've left your face," he said, after a moment.

"Have I?" Nan put up her hands to the hot, crimson patches which her man's hateful kisses had left on her cheeks.

She knelt down on the floor and drew Claude's arms round her neck.

"Kiss them and make them well," she said, in a sobbing whisper; perhaps the touch of the child's soft, innocent lips might drive her back some of her lost self-respect. Claude touched the red angry patches with a small and not over-clean forefinger.

"There's one—two—free—oh, open!" he said sorrowfully.

He put his lips to each in turn—drawing back between each kiss to ask, "Better?"

"Much better," said Nan. She clasped his fat little figure to her convulsively. "Do you love me, Claude?"

"There was a terrible ache in her heart; she was longing for someone to love her. She was like a creature who had been mortally hurt and cannot escape from the pain of the wounds."

Claude hung his head; his elder brother had taught him that it was not good "nearly to love" anybody; how one's feelings.

"I do love you," he said at last, "but you won't tell Jim, will you?"

She laughed. She kissed him with a pathetic haste and gratitude, with "We won't tell anyone," she said.

It was just an instant—she gave the boys their tea, but she could take none herself. She could only think of Peter; and wonder what he was thinking of her.

"Nan," said Claude, "you look like the picture of the wicked fairy in the story book."

Nan roused herself with an effort. Presently she rose—she knew that the little maid would be wondering why she had been late for tea, and she sat so long now alone at the deserted table.

She began mechanically to tidy the table—and push the chairs back.

"I suppose I'll do this every day of my life till I die," she thought hopelessly. "I shall never be able to escape any more—I've got to be here all my life."

The garden gate creaked, as if beneath the push of a hand; Nan raised her eyes to the window, then the blood in her body seemed to rush to her heart, for Peter Lyster was walking up the path to the house.

Peter—here! when only such a little while ago he had turned away from her in the wood!

She would not see him—she was afraid to see him; she rushed out into the hall to tell the little maid that she was not at home—as she passed the door, she could see the dark outline of his tall figure through the glass panels.

She flew on to the kitchen; at that moment she dreaded Peter Lyster more than anyone on earth; she started the little maid with her breathless exclamation:

"There is a gentleman at the door

—I am not at home, be—sure—and tell him I am not at home—go and answer the door at once, I will wait for you."

The little maid passed from her chair slowly.

"What shall I say, Miss?" she asked with provoking stupidity.

Nan stamped her foot.

"Say I am not at home—say I am dead, if you like—anything, except that I am in."

She closed the door as the girl departed; she stood listening in a trembling suspense.

Now it was too late; she wished that she had seen him; a wild impulse came to her to go out into the hall and say that it was a mistake—that she was in all the time; her fingers tightened on the door handle—almost she had drawn it open—then she heard the shutting of the front door, and after a moment the maid came back.

"I told Miss, and he's gone," she hedged, and a half smile crossed her face. "He didn't seem to believe me," she added deprecatingly.

Nan flushed.

"I don't care if he didn't," she said sharply.

She flew up the stairs two at a time to her own room—she peered out, screened by the curtain.

She could just see Peter's tall figure walking away down the road—he was walking rather slowly.

The tears rushed to Nan's eyes.

"You fool!" she told herself as sagely. "Why didn't you see him—you had your chance—and now you've lost it."

She stood there till he had gone, then she went downstairs again—she made some pretext to go into the kitchen, and presently asked the girl what Mr. Lyster had said.

"Did he ask for me? What did he say?"

"He just asked for you, miss—he seemed disappointed when I said you were out—he asked if I knew where you had gone."

"And you—what did you say?"

"I said I didn't know."

"And is that all?"

"Yes, miss."

"He didn't say he would come back later—or tomorrow?"

"No, miss."

"He'll never come back," Nan told herself despairingly.

She was standing looking out into the garden when she heard the door of her father's room open, and presently heard him calling to her.

him as he stood there so unmoved; and yet she knew that if she did utter the truth—that this man had insulted her—Sefton would keep his word and tell him—oh, what would he tell him, but things that would crush her to the earth with shame and break her heart afresh.

"Go away—oh, please go!" she said in a whisper.

But Peter stood his ground. He did not believe what she had said.

"If you are going home, I will walk with you," he said obstinately. "I am going that way." He waited a moment, but she did not answer, and he said again: "If you are going home, I will walk with you."

There was a defiance in his voice. Sefton might not have been there at all for the head Peter paid to crush her to the earth with shame and break her heart afresh.

"You will tell Lyster that you prefer to go with me," he said quickly. "You'll tell Lyster that he is intruding—that we do not desire his company."

Nan traced her eyes—such blazing eyes they were. Hot words rushed to her lips, but something in his glance checked her.

"I am going back with—Mr. Sefton."

She heard the little triumphant breath which SEFTON drew at length.

There was a moment of silence:

Interment was made in Greenwood cemetery in Wayne. Rev. H. A. Teckhaus was in charge of the service and a large number of friends and relatives were present to express esteem of the deceased.

Mr. Tietgen and his 12-year-old son were burning grass in a slough on land which Mr. Tietgen had rented about two miles from his home place. Another son, Albert Tietgen, and an employee, John Hruze, were working on the farm also but were about a half mile from Mr. Tietgen and Lester. When Lester thought the fire was going to get away and catch the George Hays haystack, he called to his father to tell him this. Mr. Tietgen looked up with a start and crumpled to the ground. It is thought he suffered a heart attack. Lester ran to his brother and Mr. Bruce, the latter of whom had taken his coupe to the field. Mr. Bruce took the body to the Tietgen home and a doctor was called but nothing could be done.

Mr. Tietgen was born in Fort Calhoun, Neb., Dec. 11, 1877. When 20 years old he went to Montana to work on a ranch and lived there two years. He then came to a farm near Carroll and had been here since. He married Miss Emma Williams-Startin Feb. 8, 1905. At this union were born six children as follows: Mrs. Edna Schutt of Sholes, Mrs. Ella Boardman of Hartington, Miss Mary, Albert, Miss Alice and Lester Tietgen at home. Besides his wife and children, deceased leaves two sisters, Mrs. Mary Lago of Carroll and Mrs. Lina Kruse of Fort Calhoun, and four brothers, William, Hans and Walter Tietgen of near Sholes, and Walter Tietgen of Fort Calhoun. All of the near-relatives were here for the funeral.

Final Six Weeks' Period of School Year Important in Shaping Results

Students Are Warned Not to Let Down Home Study After School News of Week.

The last six weeks of school have begun. The final period that will decide the number of graduates for Wayne high this year is well under way. There are forty-two students who hope to be graduated this spring and if all of them succeed, Wayne will have a record for the largest number of graduates from the Wayne school.

To the lower classes, the last six weeks' period is regarded as a busy one, but it is a strictly business proposition to the seniors. The students of the lower classes work diligently all year, and many, when they see the end approaching, half quit the job and wait for the finish, but with the seniors that final period is probably the busiest and most important of their high school days.

It is the fate of some unfortunate to be held in a position of inferiority because of lack of duty during the final period. The game is not won until the final whistle blows, so it is better to be sure of going to the seniors' "pep up," a little now and then, than to have a "pep up" at the end of the year.

However, the seniors are not the only ones concerned. The average student in high school work to the average student is as follows: The freshmen, just beginning, shows of course, a decided interest and generally make good. The sophomore student is in the turning point of interest. Unless he is constantly prompted, he will soon be about ready to give up. He doesn't yet see an ending and still the freshmen year seems far off. The sophomore is then in a doubtful position and should be encouraged greatly. The junior makes the beginning of a new interest. He sees the future year with great joy and while he is interested in the class play and banquet he is also interested in making good, so he will be called a senior the following year.

Year grades may be low and doubtful. Don't give up the work and don't give up the study. Try to slide the last six weeks, you usually get stuck. It's not too late to make good, so begin the home stretch right now.

Student Council.
A regular meeting of the Student Council was held April 6. The purpose of this meeting was to appoint a committee of five to gather material for the awarding of letters. The committee consists of Bernard Pollard, Edward Johnson, Edna Townsend, Mary Alice Ley, and Ruth Gamble.

The next meeting will be held April 20 for the report from the committee.

The Student Council was urged by the president to support "open-air" plays, etc., as much as possible.

Indebtedness.
The Wayne high school student body can now stand forth "and look the whole world in the face, for it owes not any man." To be sure, the majority was not actually indebted, but it has been replenished by the proceeds of a play "Miss Cherry Blossom." There is a certain feeling of honor about the play, and being free from debt that goes well with the spirit of school and education. It is well to practice thrift and economy in school as well as in the home after graduation.

Alexander Hamilton during the infancy of the nation established the surety of all obligations and proved conclusively the best method to obtain credit is to recognize and meet all just indebtedness.

The Wayne high school body keenly appreciates the Student Council's aid and determination in liquidating the old debt by the assembly of new refrains from contracting new obligations without visible means of payment.

Assembly Notes.
The high school has received "The Little Nature Library" which stands midway between the "Nature Library" and the "Pocket Nature Guides." It is not so detailed as the former nor so compressed as the latter.

A general introduction to each subject is followed by a description of each family, their habits, and the most important members of the family.

Each of the four volumes tells the most interesting things about the most interesting American varieties of the subject.

Individual material was received last week for the essay contest which is sponsored by Mr. Firestone of the University of Chicago. The subject is "The Relation of Good Roads to Education."

Kathryn Kemp is playing the assembly march this week. Mildred Wright will play next week.

The second six weeks' examinations were finished last week. A charter was granted to the dramatic club Thursday. There are thirty-five members. Each member will sign his name on the back of the charter before it is framed.

The French classes were given intelligence tests in French at the close of the second six weeks of this semester.

The French classes were given intelligence tests in French at the close of the second six weeks of this semester.

Office Notes.
The monthly board meeting was held Monday night, April 5. Preliminary plans for the close of the year were discussed. Professor Johnson presented a report about the Washington educational meeting which he recently attended. The administration problems were discussed. Plans for arrangements for the commencement exercises and personal cards have arrived.

Laboratory Notes.
As scores come out the botany class will start to classify flowers. The class has been comparing the different kinds of flowers at the same time. They are compound leaf, simple branching leaves, and compound branching leaves.

Track Notes.
The numerical honor roll recently introduced in W. H. S. has stimulated interest. New men have shown up at track practice.

Cyrus Jones is developing a good wish in the javelin which is netting over 100 yards.

The high jump Gerald Dennis is working into a form which will get him back to his former height.

Spurters in Wayne high are in the minority.

Wayne high looks forward to a successful track season.

A meeting of the junior class was held last week for the purpose of appointing committees to handle the senior class dinner.

The date for the social event has been set for May 15, the night before the commencement exercises.

The following committees were appointed: Menu committee, Jane Jeffrey, Vera Kopp, Amelia Kugler, Crystal Draper, and Junior Mendenhall.

The class announcements and cards were distributed this week.

The English IV classes are continuing their work on "Julius Caesar" and "The Song of Three Friends."
