Local Happenings

800,000. During the next twelve months it will be more than three million dollars. We submit that three million dollars a year is enough to tax the people of the state through state channels for road development at this time and the amount of the gasoline tax is certain to increase during the next few years. The safe and reasonable thing to do is to leave the gasoline tax law as it is for another two years. That will give opportunity for the state road department to become thoroughly organized and seasoned in road work and time for the people of the state to survey the situation and decide whether gasoline yearly expenditures are necessary.

Wayne Becomes A City In 1889

Population Is Large Enough To Allow The Change From Village Organization.

A report to the village board in March, 1889, showed that Wayne had 1390 residents. This being enough for city organization the town was divided into three wards. The election followed on April 6 and the new city officers were: Mayor, E. A. Chase; clerk, C. L. Neely; treasurer, P. A. Deaborn; police judge, A. O. Myers; engineer, R. L. Wood; aldermen in First ward, W. J. Perry and Wm. Sorenson; aldermen in Second ward, George Shaw and W. H. Linn; and aldermen in Third ward, M. S. Davies and W. O. Gamble.

On May 4, 1889, the board of trustees of the village met and adjourned. The new council of the city was called. Mayor Chase appointed committees as follows: Organizer, Davies; Perry and Sorenson; finance, Gamble, Linn and Shaw; and streets and alleys, Sorenson, Perry and Davies. Dr. E. Bradford, J. A. Lindley and A. P. Linn were named on the board of health. George S. Miner was chosen marshal and George H. Snell was named street commissioner. A. A. Welch was appointed city attorney. The council voted to meet the ensuing year in the A. A. Welch office.

An estimate of the expenses for the city of Wayne in the year beginning May 7, 1889, was estimated at a total of $2,753.46. Salaries were placed as follows: Mayor, $100; clerk, $75; treasurer, $40; attorney, $125; street commissioner, $140; marshal, $600; city council, $230. The amount for streets, alleys and sidewalks was estimated at $250 for printing at $75, for elections at $200, and for contingent expenses, at $200.

In January, 1890, the council resolved to extend the city limits. M. S. Davies, George Shaw and W. O. Gamble were chosen to draw plans of the annexation.

The second city election in Wayne was held April 1, 1890, and resulted as follows: Mayor, Frank Fuller; clerk, W. H. McNeal; treasurer, M. T. Healey; city engineer, J. L. Lewis; councilmen in First ward, John Gaertner; councilman in Second ward to fill vacancy, C. A. Chase; councilman in Second ward, Wm. Greck; and councilman in Third ward, P. L. Miller.

R. Berrin requested the city council to place a tank at the city well in order that he might get water from it for sprinkling the streets in the business district.

The council voted to require a twelve-foot board sidewalk to be placed on Main street from the railroad to Fourth street.

Gasoline street lamps were bought for the business district at a cost of $79.82.

On Aug. 12, 1890, the council decided to call an election for the purpose of voting on the issuance of bonds in the amount of $18,000 for construction of a waterworks system in Wayne. The election was held Sept. 21, 1890, and the bonds issued and for completion of the work carried by a vote of 168 to 27.

Noted Inn Rebuilt To Make Picture

Baldpate Inn, perhaps the best known homestead in the United States, was reconstructed by Douglas MacLean for his current Paramount picture, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," appearing at the Crystal theatre on Friday and Saturday, May 7 and 8.

Because of the tremendous popularity of the original George M. Cohan farce, it was possible to have more people have seen the interior of Baldpate Inn than have ever inspected the interior of any real hotel in the country.

In planning the motion picture construction of this mythical Inn, MacLean decided to follow the general floor plan and style of architecture which was used for the original stage setting.

Because of the greater possibilities of the camera, however, it was possible to enlarge the main lobby considerably and add bedrooms, dining room, corridors and bathroom, all of which served as background for the augmented action of the picture version of the Cohan comedy.

Fred Newmeyer, who made all the recent Harold Lloyd comedies, directed "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

The One Who Forgot

By RUBY M. AYRES

Begin Here Today.

Peter Lyster has lost his memory from shell shock in France. Upon his return to London he fails to recognize Nan Marraby, to whom he became engaged before going to the front. Nan has since gone home to care for her three motherless step brothers. She is still in touch, however, with her friend

Joan Endicott in London, whose husband has just returned to the sea. Peter, who had met Nan that he sought to forget Peter and encourage the love of his friend and foster father.

John Arnott, with whom Peter is residing at the home of Arnott's sister, not far from the home of the Arnotts. Nan is just as of Arnott's sister and disgusted with the advances of money matters. A money lender, who first met Nan through Peter prior to his departure for France. Peter does not remember Setton, who means that Nan must marry him or face the consequences of having both Peter and her father brought to account for large sums of money which he says they owe him. Nan has been encouraged, by her father, to marry Setton.

In her father's absence Peter came to see her. He has previously surprised Setton in the act of forcing his kisses upon Nan, and now, when she had said that she was not worthy of Nan, Peter is about to leave when he turns to ask Nan whether she is one of the people he knew best before he lost his memory.

New Go On With the Story. There was something so pathetic in the question that in an instant Nan's heart melted. The motherhood which is the best part of the love all women bear to a man rose uppermost in her heart. She forgot everything but her pity for him. "You imagine these things," she said gently. "It's because you know these are some things you have forgotten that you are always dreaming to come across them." She tried to smile.

"It must be ages since I started to clear away the tea," she said briskly. "Are you going to help me?"

It was a daring challenge to her—a mighty effort to get back to the normal.

Peter agreed at once; he picked up a pile of plates and followed her to the kitchen. He looked with the surprised little maid there; when the last cup had been carried out he looked at Nan laughingly.

"I shall apply for the job of batman if I'm no good for anything else," he said.

"No eyes grew startled. "But—but you won't ever have to go back," she said quickly.

His face sobered. "I'm tired of being on the shelf already. At the present moment I am going about looking for some kind of friend who will take me in a motherly way."

She spoke purposely, hoping he would say that he did not care, but Peter only laughed.

"Oh, she'll forgive me," he said lightly.

"They went down to the gate together. It was when Nan had shut it between them that Peter said suddenly:

"So there is no truth in—in what Setton says?"

Nan's face flamed. "What do you mean? What has he been saying?" she asked quickly.

He looked away from her. "Only that—that you are engaged to him. Mrs. Mears heard it in the village last night. It was she who told me."

"She told you—then... then—was that why you came here today—just to ask me?"

His eyes met hers steadily through the dusk. "But as you say it isn't true..."

and the soft voice of the breeze in the trees overhead.

There the stamp of feet sounded down the pathway behind her, and Claudie's shrill voice called her name.

"Nan—Nan—Nan!" She turned at once. "Excuse me, won't you—and goodby."

She did not look at Lyster; she fled back to the house; there was a curious singing noise in her head; she passed Claudie in the doorway and went straight on to the kitchen; she drew some water from the tap—and drank it off thirstily.

Nan went up to her room and locked the door.

It was useless to deceive herself with the hope that anything more than ordinary friendly interest had prompted Peter's visit; she went carefully over every word he had said, every look he had given her, and she knew that there had been nothing—noting to justify the hope that had taken so long to die in her heart.

It was nothing to him—nothing. "I can go on eating my heart out for ever," she thought; "I can go on beating against iron bars all my life, and it won't do any good; why

Why not take what I can? Money is something, if it's all one can hope for."

After all, one man was very much the same as another if she could not have Peter—and marriage with Harley Setton would mean so many things.

It would save her father from ruin, and it would assure the boys' future.

Setton would come, she knew, and she no longer seemed to matter much. She only longed to get it over.

"Heaps of women marry men they don't love and manage to live quite happily," she thought.

"And, after all, being in love isn't all happiness. Look what I have had to suffer."

And she tried smiling. It was her nature as he had bright and happy. The afternoon slipped away, but Setton did not show up. She went down to the village. The rain had cleared off and there was a faint tinge of sunset in the sky. Nan passed the road along which one went to Little Gadsden. She stood for a moment looking at the white sign-board with a half smile. The road led away out of her life. She had no business there at all. Everything seemed just the same as it had done years ago when she was a child and lying in the distance under her stepmother's sharp tongue.

A woman came out of a cottage as Nan passed and called to her. Nan knew the shrill, rather dominating voice long before she turned, and a little shiver of distaste passed through her as she met the cold, beady eyes of the vicar's sister.

"I was just thinking about you, Miss Marraby," she declared; her beady eyes seemed to take in every detail of Nan's attire at a glance; she held out to Nan her thin, cotton-gloved hand.

"I was wondering if perhaps you would come and help me decorate for Easter. I know you don't take much interest in parish affairs, but..."

"Some people are coming over from Gadsden to help. I don't know if you know any of the Gadsden people—but I always find them so exceptionally nice."

"Well, this is a Mrs. Mears I am thinking of particularly," Miss Dudeney said. "She is a very charming person, and so rich. She attends the Gadsden church, of course, but she is coming over to help us, and has promised to bring all the white flowers for the font. She has wonderful greenhouses, I believe, and is very good to charity; they say there are always quite a number of wounded soldiers staying in her house."

"Really?" said Nan.

"Yes—there are of course, people who say that it is not quite proper—seeing that Mrs. Mears is so young and a widow—but one must stick to conventionalities like that, don't you think, Miss Marraby?"

"I haven't thought about it," said Nan. "But it's very kind of Mrs. Mears to be good to the soldiers—they deserve the best anyone can offer them."

"Quite so—quite so—I entirely agree; but though I love dear Mrs. Mears and think she is simply too charming, I really think that it is perhaps—just a little—soon, don't you think?"

"Soon?" Nan's steps slackened. "What do you mean?" she asked.

"Miss Dudeney shrugged her shoulders. "Please don't think I am criticizing her at all—she is a friend of mine, and I wish her every happiness. But I knew poor dear Captain Mears, and after all, it is barely two years since he was killed, and one would have thought she might have grieved for him just a little longer, don't you think?"

"I don't understand you in the least," Nan said bluntly. "What has Mrs. Mears done?"

Miss Dudeney smiled, rather a frozen smile. "Oh, I don't say that she has done it yet," she said hastily. "But it's only a matter of time—I refer, of course, to her second marriage."

"Second marriage?" Nan's voice sounded stiff. "It is she going to be married again?" she asked.

"She is, indeed—and quite soon, I believe—to that good-looking young officer who was in the army, isn't it?" Mr. Lyster, I believe his name is."

A new rectory for St. Peter and St. Paul parishes at Bow Valley near Hartington, was started last week. The new house will cost about $15,000.

Plan to Build New Garage In Carroll

Howard Porter has bought the lot on which the picture show building now stands and he will start soon the erection of a new garage fifty by ninety feet. M. S. Linn and the A. O. U. W. lodge owned the theatre building and the Carroll bank owned the vacant lot. The new structure will be about a $5,000 improvement. It will be made of hollow brick with a brick front. The building will be ready for occupancy about one month after it is started.

The Textley Motor Co. recently bought from Thomas Sylvanus the building in which the Porter garage is now located. Dr. A. Tenley also bought the theatre and lodge room building. He will move this structure and will use it and the other one purchased for storage rooms.

The theatre building is one of Carroll's first business houses. It was built about forty years ago by the firm of Wolf, Woods and Forry Brothers. The company had a store in the building now occupied by the printing office. The men built the new structure on the corner where it now stands. Mr. Bashford was the last to have a store in it. In recent years the lower floor has been owned by M. S. Linn and rented to H. H. Honey for a picture show and the upper part has been owned by the lodge. Mr. Honey has his pictures booked for thirty days and these cannot be cancelled. If he finds a place to move the structure will be moved inside, dismantled and the new building will start. If he can find no other place the building operations will start at the close of the thirty days.

Better feeding methods save corn and money

MANY state experiment stations have proved that the farmer who "gets along" without a permanent concrete feeding floor loses the price of one about every two years.

When corn for hogs is thrown on the ground, much of it is trampled into the earth. With a wooden floor there is some loss of grain through the cracks. Now is the time to build a concrete floor.

Now is the time to build a concrete floor. It will save you money by preventing waste of grain and insuring wholesome feeding. A concrete floor is permanent; it cannot decay; it serves and saves for years. Come in and let us show you how to build it.

Seniors of the Wayne High School Make "Sneak Day" An Educational Excursion

Visit Lincoln and Inspect New Capitol and State University at Other Schools Near

Senior "Sneak Day" Thirty-three seniors left for Lincoln Friday, April 30, at 5:19 a. m. They arrived at Fremont at 10:30 and one-half hour later after seeing the views they had breakfast at the Pathfinder hotel. After breakfast, the journey to Lincoln resumed.

After inspecting the agricultural college in Lincoln, the seniors visited the state capitol which is being built on Mt. Matzen. State school superintendent, invited the seniors to his office and made a short talk. He then took the class to visit the court room and the governor's office.

The governor, Mr. McMullen, gave a short talk. He said that the capitol building was the most beautiful building in the world. The reception room will be used to portray the history of the state and the state university is warranted to be the most beautiful room in the world. Mr. McMullen showed the seniors the museum and the state and drivers and other places of interest.

The class assembled at the Nebraska university at 2 o'clock. Visits were made to the museum, the new field house which will seat 7,000 people, the stadium and other places of interest.

About 3 o'clock, most of the seniors attended the Nebraska Wesleyan class meet for the purpose of visiting to the most places of interest in Nebraska. Wesleyan were visited and the class returned to Fremont.

The business men who took their cars were: F. L. Blair, J. H. Kemp, R. L. Larson, Herman Lundberg, W. H. Kambacher, T. S. Hook, C. E. Wright and C. E. Wright.

The article does not attempt to tell of the enjoyment or rating of the times the seniors had for that is measured by each senior himself. However, it can be said that the atmosphere was never gloomy and on the whole the time stores suffered a good deal. Many people have heard that a "Sneak Day" is for good times only, but it may be seen that the trip was one of educational value to everyone who participated.

Office Notes. A letter was received from Supt. J. Fred Nelson of Gering, secretary of the state declaratory association, asking that Wayne High School wish to enter a bid for a section of the state declaratory contest. Those in charge of the declaratory work this year favored entering a bid for a section of the state contest, and a wire was sent to Supt. J. Fred Nelson stating that a bid be entered for one section for Wayne High School.

Universities are generally raising their standards. The University of Nebraska has raised its standards for admission to the university by certificate restricted. Four important changes are made by these new requirements. (1) The unit is the work of a year rather than that of a semester. (2) College entrance is based upon the last three of the course, requiring 12 units, 24 points, rather than 15 units. (3) Subjects carried in grade 12 are not counted against the 12 units, but algebra and foreign languages are used in making majors and minors. (4) Admission is based upon major and minor units.

single grade in all four subjects which will be in order to receive credit on any student activity. This is a new warning to those who are in the habit of letting a few subjects slip and slacking while they are in some activity.

This is a good thing, and when students learn that a school is strict, they are more likely to be rather than an athletic institute, where they may be able to develop both their physical and mental faculties.

Wayne Fourth and Brighton Meet. With a large number of contestants Randolph took the cup for the second consecutive time at the Hartington track meet. A warm-up and a soft track prevented fast time but competition was strong.

In the 220 yard dash Chester placed third in his heat but failed to place in the final recognition for time. In the 220 yard hurdles Dennis placed first in his section, 25 out of 30. Farrow of Randolph ran his heat in 28.4, placing Wayne second.

The shot put Gifford placed second with 97 feet and 11 inches. First place was taken with 28 feet and 8 inches. In the high jump Dennis was qualified at 5 feet, 9 inches. Dennis was disqualified for clearing the bar by 3 feet 3 inches. In the broad jump Dennis jumped 19 feet, but was disqualified for a record of the take-off. Phillips of Randolph won with 19 feet, 11 inches.

Dennis received a silver medal in both the shot put and the high jump in the shot put. Wayne placed fourth in the meet. The team was accompanied to Hartington by Coach Peterson and John Dennis.

Cutting Across Lawns. The lower grades have been instructed recently about the requirements for cutting across lawns. Among other things, the students are instructed not to "cut" across lawns. It is no need for such instruction in the upper grades, but it has been noticed that a few students (especially those who talk across lawns) have been seen to do so.

Possibly, one saves a few feet of walking by "cutting" across lawns, but the harm resulting counter-balance by the saving energy expended in using the sidewalk. It would be well if the students took pride in school lawns and the lawns of the town.

Commercial. The Remington Typewriter Company has a system for recognizing high school students interested in typewriting. Awards are based on the student's proficiency. The first award is a primary certificate given for writing twenty-five words a minute for fifteen minutes with not more than ten errors. The second award is a sterling silver pin which will be awarded to a pupil in a school who writes forty words a minute for fifteen minutes with not more than seven errors.

The gold emblem is granted those who type thirty words a minute for fifteen minutes. The only student who has qualified for the gold emblem is Una Schrupf. The silver emblem was granted by teacher, Miss Anderson. All students of the typewriting class are eligible for the awards.

an initiative and referendum election. The elections were carried out efficiently. It was both interesting and educational.

The judge for the contest were chosen from the teachers and civics classes. Mr. Sargeant sponsored the election.

The class is writing health plays in hygiene. The fourth grade had perfect attendance Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. A record of one hundred percent in spelling was held for four days, this week.

Mrs. Benson was a visitor Friday. The pupils spent part of last Friday afternoon making May baskets. The third grade pupils have been making "color" booklets. Pearl Barnes' booklet was chosen as the best one in the class.

The third class had a race in multiplication, Marvin Davis getting first, Peggy and Frank Strahan second, Hazel Brock third and Paul Young fourth.

John Allen Lewis and Marjorie Ellis have been out of school because of pink eye. Dorothy Hook is absent because of the flu. Zaia Mae Gifford had a birthday party for the girls of her class at her home last Thursday.

Maxine Barrett had a birthday party for her class last Friday at her home. Mrs. Frank Gamble visited school last week.

The language classes are studying the life and customs of the Arabs. The A class is learning to tell time by making clocks. A new project is being worked out in the second grade by illustrating food sales. The pupils chose a model that they wish for breakfast, luncheon and dinner. Then they are to make a list of things ordered. In this way they learn how to add and understand the kind of food they should eat.

First Grade. The pupils of the first grade are making individual health posters. The names of some of them are: "After My Bath," and "I Brush My Teeth."

McCormick-Deering Corn Planters

Great accuracy, combined with a wide range of adaptability to the requirements of planting corn under varying conditions time proved principles in a brand new model.

Flat, Edge- and Full-Hill-Drop Plates Interchange

In developing the "100 Series" line of McCormick-Deering planters and drills, the aim has been not to find something radically different and untried, but to give the American corn grower a simpler, more practical combination of the principles which particular farmers have found good. The result is a line of planters and drills which meets admirably the planting requirements in the different sections where corn is grown. As is always the case, greater dependability and increased accuracy follow simplification of design.

Positive. In this type of planter the clutch is extremely important, since upon it depends the proper functioning of the planting mechanism. The McCormick-Deering clutch is of an improved design, positive in its action, and made extremely durable by the use of case hardened rollers running on hard steel pins. The bearings are extremely durable, not only providing more wearing surface, but making the clutch less sensitive to wear.

Automatic McCormick-Deering planters are regularly equipped with Markers. Markers which require absolutely no attention from the operator. This is a marker on each side of the planter and the outer ends of the markers are connected by a rope. As the planter proceeds across the field the draft of the marker in the ground holds the outer marker up to the frame. At the end of the field the team is turned toward the marker in the ground, which allows the rope to slacken, permitting the opposite marker to drop to the ground. When the planter starts back across the field this marker dips in and pulls the opposite marker up. This is a simple, practical, handy arrangement, and one you will approve. Twin disk markers can be furnished on special order for those who prefer that type.

Let us show you the new and improved model.
