Ability To Attract Attention Of Pigs

Omaha Bee: If, says an Omaha philosopher, a man has associated with pigs-in a way intimate to the extent of learning their peculiar ways, that man understands humanity. This being true, will explain the gentle art of "hog calling." A pig, like a man, will have his attention fixed by any sort of sound, strange or familiar. To a hungry pig the noise means food, for his impulse is to eat. If it does not mean food, it means some thing else.

Therefore, the success of hog calling is not that of seduction, but of getting the ear of his porcine majesty from which the hog is almost certain to deduce that fact that he is in no danger of being killed.

As the ordinary pig is ready to act without notice, a few hours or minutes of the most interesting of the suspected magic drops away from the art of hog calling.

In the contests now being held among the pig raisers, the charm, musical quality and originality, with facial expression last. Just what this has to do with the feat is but puzzling. Even imagination must halt somewhere. Of course, one may picture an expectant porcupine, gazing with ill-suppressed anxiety, into the benign face of the man who has summoned him to partake of food.

Wondering just what and how much it will be. Perhaps in the pig's face may be noted the joy and gratitude he feels, while that of the man should register not only benignity but probably something akin to the paternal.

Yet, what will the pig do when he discovers, as eventually he must, that all that aspect of interest is in vain, to the ultimate transmutation of an animal hunger for its own pork chops, bacon and sausage into food for the man who seems so generously providing food for the hog. Is not the call of the swine the genuine song of the siren?

You Spell It, Too. World Herald: It seems that a hog call is literature as well as music. A 100 per cent hog call contains both words and music. You have to spit your own spit. You see, you only sing it but you spell it as well.

And so the debate has veered around for the moment from the melody of hog calling to its orthography. Importance of the ability to reach high C has been shelved in favor of a discussion of the relative merits of spelling it with a "P," an "S" or a "Wh."

To the uninformed it may seem of slight moment whether you hiss a hog with an "S," wheehee him with a "Wh" or paralyze him with a "P." Still we suppose it makes a lot of difference to the hog and that is the main point. The existence of the hog schools is due to the fact that the matter has not been sufficiently investigated to arrive at a perfect understanding of the hog's point of view. Although amateur hog calling has been practiced for many years, professional hog calling may be said to be set in its infancy. With the development of the latter we may hope to see a scientific study of the subject which will determine beyond peradventure whether a hog is more attracted by a sibilant, a labial or plain wh-oh. We suspect it will be found that different calls affect different breeds of hogs differently. A call that works perfectly on a Hampshire will secure but indifferent results from a Duroc Jersey and vice versa.

America it appears needs a national hog call quite as much as it needs a national anthem.

Just five years ago the foremost scientific industrial research-institute of its kind in the world a new pro-

Your Uncle in Trouble.
(William Allen White in the Emporia Gazette.)

He was a little better than middle-aged man with a lot of the strength of youth in his step. He wore an iron gray suit, a white tie and graying hair. He came into the Gazette office this morning puzzled and worried. He said:

"I am in trouble. I am puzzled. I don't know what's the matter with folks. I can't seem to get on with people."

He asked him what was the matter and he, hemmed and hawed a little and then said:

"You see, I have a lot of frigh-bored people, I had bunch around the ravine got to fighting with them; some of my nearest neighbors; and part of them were my blood kin. They were about to get licked. They were jamming and fighting around and their crops were being run over and their stock driven off and I lost them some money. But they kept on fighting and then my boys and I went over and got the fight and cleared up the fellows across the ravine and tried to get back some of the stock, but couldn't get much. Anyway, I lost them some money and they put in a crop and repaired the damage the best they could and I brought my boys home and went to work. The neighbors came over and asked how much they owed me and I said, 'Well, you don't owe me anything for what I lent you while the fighting was on nor for what my boys and I did to clean up the outfit across the creek. That won't cost you anything. But I suppose you ought to pay back the money I lent you to put in a crop and fix up the place after the racks.'"

"And I said, 'You can have all the horse and cow notes and I won't push you nor I'll just charge a nominal rate of interest.'"

He looked sadly out of the window and then said:

"And now what do you think? The whole darn neighborhood—the fellows across the creek and the fellows on my side of the creek and my blood kin and everybody has turned on me. If some of my children go over in the neighbor's yard they throw rocks at them and spit in their faces and chase them home and the old folks yell at me that I am a damned Shylock every time I go to town and pass their eyes and see the fellows on the other side of the creek are laughing at me; heaven knows I don't know what to do now. I don't know what to do. I'm a fool one way or another, and yet I suppose I would have to do it, again. — Any man would—under the circumstances."

Then we looked at the old man and he had a familiar look. Somewhere we have seen that posture before. And as he stood up, a man 5 feet, 11 inches or so, we saw for the first time that his pants were strapped under his boots and we looked again and saw that it was nobody but your Uncle Sam, telling his troubles with the allies.

Wayne People Go To State Conventions

John T. Bressler, Jr., was named one of the three vice commanders of the state American Legion at a convention held in Chadron last week. Earl L. Meyer of Alliance, was chosen state commander. The Wayne Legion was represented at the meeting by C. A. Mrs. E. E. Gately was a member of one of the state committees of the American Legion Auxiliary at the meeting held in Chadron at the same time as the Legion convention. She and Mrs. J. C. Johnson represented the Wayne Auxiliary and they returned home Friday. Mrs. G. S. Lasalle of Chappell, was chosen president of the state auxiliary.

The new commander of the Legion explained at the convention that the organization plans to work for a state hospital for ex-service men, this year. The men will make a request to the federal government for hospital and nursing home Friday. Mrs. G. S. Lasalle is confident that the request will be granted.

Not interested.

Hartington Herald: During the recent chautauqua ticket selling campaign a man who owns half a dozen farms refused to buy even one ticket. We feel no grudge against him for he evidently didn't think the ticket was worth a dollar to him and probably shouldn't be expected to buy what they don't want, but we wonder. We wonder what possible use half a dozen farms could be to a man who had no appreciation of the things which a chautauqua ticket represents. Suppose his farms were yielding him a good income, of what value would this income be to him if he were not interested in the things which are really worth while? Suppose this man had a million dollars and could not enjoy chautauquas or books or music or scenery or travel, how would he be any better off than a man who had nothing but his daily wage and would be not as a matter of fact be infinitely poorer than a man who had some appreciation of these things? If this man's life is circumscribed by three meals a day and a place to sleep, of what value are his farms to him? He has the money which they represent. We have no grudge against a person of means who refuses to buy a chautauqua ticket or contribute to other educational and uplifting influences in the community, but we wonder.

Self-Supporting Students.
York Republican: It was recently announced that self-supporting students of the state last year won forty-five per cent of all the honors bestowed by that institution. This is not so surprising at all to those who have the correct view of education. The student who gets his higher education with hard work and sacrifice is in earnest. And while he is getting his education he is building also his spirit of independence and self-confidence. There are aspiring students who think it belittling to work their way through school and trundle to the sacrifices that course imposes, the recent announcement of Yale will set them right. Two things the world admires—industry and achievement. And there is no loss of dignity in either.

From Ponca Journal, September 22, 1906.

Extracts from address reviewing the history of the settlement of Dixon county, delivered by Judge Edward Arnold at a reunion of old settlers on one day of the county-fair held in September, 1899:

We have arrived at an interesting and important era in the history of our county. It is now thirty-three years—this is said to be the average life of man—since the first white man erected for himself a home on the soil of this county. When he came the Indian stock had not been exterminated, and the original population were the Ponca tribe of Indians, who roamed at large, and some of whose camping grounds may be seen, not many rods distant. They looked upon the white man with suspicion and distrust. His presence was regarded as an intrusion, and it may well be conceived that danger waited upon his footsteps.

To three sturdy and adventurous Germans must be accorded the honor of the hazardous undertaking. They took up their claims and built their houses along the creek east of the Ponca town site, one of them being the original proprietor of the farm now owned by W. Huddleston.

A short time previous to their advent, the banks in the east in the fall of 1857, causing a complete stagnation of business, and raising an effective barrier against pushing immigration to the west. The year following, all of this part of the state bordering on the Missouri river, was surveyed by the general government and thrown open for settlement and pre-emption. Of course such a step could have but one result: It drove away many of the settlers from their homes who despaired of ever being able to pay for them, so that the population of the county seat of this county, their object being to discover the lay of the land and ascertain what advantages it offered for profitable speculation. Their discerning eye soon took in the beauty of the landscape before them, and they immediately returned to Sioux City for a surveyor.

On their return, with the view of obtaining the good will of the Indians, they thought it expedient to bring with them a supply of prime necessities of frontier life. Purchasing an ox team they loaded up with, among other things, five barrels of whiskey, two or three kegs of powder, several pounds of lead and barrels of crackers. Reinforced by such accessories, it may easily be imagined they had but little difficulty in signing a treaty of peace and friendship with their Indian friends, and establishing boundaries of our county seat without hindrance as happened in a case of ancient Rome, if we are to believe the tragic narrative as told by Livy.

The tide of immigration having once commenced to rise, swept on with resistless force. All the choice farms along Arrow creek and its tributaries, were taken up that summer. Many of the settlers, however, were ill prepared to encounter the dreary and inclement winter that followed, and much distress and suffering was the consequence.

The spring of 1857 opened cold and cheerless upon the first comers. Snow covered the hill tops from the month of May, and remained in the valleys until the middle of June. But bleak climate nor blizzards could keep many from the land that they sought the course of empire and sought homes in the west. With the opening of navigation came a fresh influx of immigrants, many, if not all of whom, were supplied with the necessities of life, and much of the suffering that prevailed was alleviated or removed.

Scarcely had the new arrivals planted their weed patches with corn and potatoes and erected some kind of a habitation, than they had to encounter new and unlooked-for reverses. First came the suspension of the banks in the east in the fall of 1857, causing a complete stagnation of business, and raising an effective barrier against pushing immigration to the west. The year following, all of this part of the state bordering on the Missouri river, was surveyed by the general government and thrown open for settlement and pre-emption. Of course such a step could have but one result: It drove away many of the settlers from their homes who despaired of ever being able to pay for them, so that the population of the county as shown by the census of 1860 numbered but 247 souls.

Then followed the Civil war and rumors of Indian massacres north of us, which caused a general stampede of the people between here and Nebraska, who fled in terror and dismay from their homes, leaving nearly everything behind them. The total valuation of the county this year was but $29,260. Yet notwithstanding these drawbacks, the fertility of the soil and the salubrity of the climate were powerful inducements to others who speedily took the places of those who had left or had fallen by the way, so that the census of the subsequent decade (1870) gave us a population of 1,345, while our total valuation had risen to $206,720.

Since then our progress has been steady and permanent, with the exception of the year 1874, which was a memorable year to all our people. During the fall and winter of 1873 and 1874 everything passed along in the usual manner without any remarkable events. With the increase of population the town of the county had progressed rapidly, and the spring of 1874 opened with bright prospects for the entire county.

But the grasshoppers had been opened in all parts of the county, and though it had consumed the means of the greater number of them to pay living expenses and bring their farms under cultivation, the farmers and business men were in the best of spirits. Crops had the previous years yielded fairly, and now a much larger acreage than ever before had been planted, and during the early part of the season grew with astonishing rapidity. But their hopes were soon blasted. Early in July came a protracted-dry season, and this was followed in the latter part of the same month by myriads of grasshoppers that devastated the entire state. So thick did they come that the light of the sun was obscured, and it was but a few hours until everything that was not ripe and gathered was destroyed. With the exception of a few late fields the harvest of small grain was nearly completed, but the destruction of corn and vegetables was complete.

The greater number of the settlers had spent their all to get a start, and unable to stand the loss of so great a part of their crops, it now looked as if their ruin was complete. For a time all progress in the county came to a standstill. Many left the country to spend the winter in their old neighborhoods in the east, and some went never to return. But the greater number remained. Many of them had to practice the most rigid economy and endure many privations, but though there was a great deal of suffering, there were no cases of actual starvation.

The summer of 1875 was a dull one, and many saw hard times. Owing to the grasshopper raid of the year before it was difficult for the farmers to obtain seed. Their teams were in a half-starved condition. They secured what seed they could, however, and went to work manfully to put out another crop. In spite of all privations, their courage never failed, and in the fall their labors were rewarded with a fair yield of crops.

In 1876 the grasshoppers appeared again in some parts of the county, but did very little damage.

During these two years, however, there was comparatively little immigration, owing to reports of the great injury done by these redacious insects, and our population had decreased from 3,412 in '74 to 2,886 in 1876. But notwithstanding the discouraging outlook and the difficulties of the situation, the majority of the settlers never lost heart, but clung tenaciously to the soil, reminding us of the truthfulness of Pope's lines: "Hope springs eternal in the human breast, Man never is, but always to be blest."

Hold Election On The County Seat

Petition for Removal to Wayne Signed by More Than Three Fifths of Voters.

A petition was presented to the Wayne county commissioners October 23, 1882, signed by 171 legal voters, asking that a special election be held to determine the location of the county seat at Wayne, under Article 3, Section 1 of the compiled statutes, 1881, entitled, "Relocation of County Seats." As the number signing the petition equaled more than three-fifths of the legal voters cast at the previous election, the commissioners decided to grant the petition and the county clerk was directed to have the following proclamation published in the Wayne County Review:

"The board of county commissioners ordered a special election for December 5, 1882, at the usual voting places for voting on the relocation of the county seat."

Paul English and five others agreed to furnish for five years suitable offices and court room for the county of Wayne, and two brick vaults as large as those in use at LaPorte, for records.

The county seat was moved from LaPorte to Wayne and the first session of the county commissioners in Wayne was March 10, 1883.

On January 9, 1884 the county commissioners accepted title to block 7 in Crawford & Brown's addition to Wayne. On this block was to be built a court house within a definite period of years.

Commissioners were called together July 5, 1884, on account of the building used for the court house having become unfit for the purpose. The meeting met at the Lincoln Hotel, of which the county clerk had charge. The county superintendent's office, Breese & Patterson's rooms housed the county clerk's records, the county treasurer's books and office were in the R. B. Taylor room; and F. M. Skenen's office took care of the county judge's records.

tain you with a recital of the events that have happened since that time as they are remembered in the memory of all. Before closing however, we cannot be unmindful of the fact that we have just cause to be thankful for the many blessings that we enjoy. Favored as we are by a fruitful soil and genial climate and surrounded by the necessities and comforts of life, we can look up with no small degree of patriotic pride to the government and laws that make these things possible. Dixie county is no longer the wilderness of 30 years ago when society was in a rude and disorganized state, an intelligent and progressive community where judges and juries of law dispense even handed justice to all, where the learned professions of law, medicine and divinity are well and ably represented, where the mechanical arts in their various branches are pursued by trained and skillful workmen, where stores of general merchandise may be found well stocked with everything that contributes to the ease, the comfort and the luxury of man. And just but not least, where the press, the archimedean lever that influences and shapes the destiny of men and nations, goes hence weekly on its civilizing mission to every part of the county, shedding rays of knowledge and wisdom on a rich and poor alike.

Smart leather gloves in both slip on and short gauntlet styles, have cuffs trimmed in tooled or appliqued, colored floral designs. The fabric gloves have similarly decorated cuffs. They are Adler gloves, nationally known for their smart style and good wearing qualities.

Handbags are of soft, colored leather—many of them in the gleated pouch styles. They will lend a gay touch of color to the fall costume.

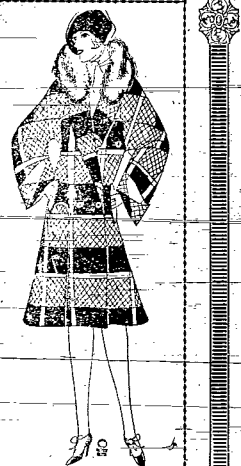

Handkerchiefs are more novel than ever. Besides being cut in circular, and in Greek Key and scalloped designs, they are further "peppered" up with little pockets containing a powder puff or a tiny bottle of perfume. Some are linen, some Georgette and others silk.

Silk hosiery colors show a slight darkening in the tan shades, which are still the favorites. The $1.50 full fashioned, thread silk

We have always offered to replace any pair that did not give perfect satisfaction and during the past season we were called on to replace just 5 pair out of the thousands we sold. They are really remarkable silk hose and you will like them and continue to buy them when once you have tried them.

Many new designs in stamped needlework pieces are just here in time for Fair work and for Christmas Gifts.

Heats the Whole House TO look at Buck's new Radio Heater you might think it was merely a heating stove encased in a handsome, brown-grained, mahogany-finished cabinet. But it's greatly more than that. It's a hot-air furnace that may be placed in any room in the house. Like a basement furnace, it draws cold air in at the bottom, heats it and forces it out at the top of the beautiful cabinet, then sends it through every room in the house—upstairs and down. It's no larger than an ordinary heating stove, but it has a circulating capacity 4 times greater than the largest base burner. Yet it is moved or connected exactly the same as a stove. Let us explain its many advantages. W. A. HISCOX Not the Oldest - Not the Largest - Just the Best HARDWARE PHONE 237 Wayne - Nebr.

The E-B Newton Wagon Proved by 70 Years of Performance

All new wagons look alike with their fresh coats of paint, but it is what is under the paint that counts.

Newton Wheels track accurately on plumb spokes which makes light draft; the disk is correct; the rims are centered on the hubs; and the tension is even all around, that is, the load is carried on all spokes.

THE GEARS One of the noticeable features of Newton Wagon construction is the thorough ironing and clipping of the gears.

THE AXLES The axles, turned from the finest grade of selected hickory, are materially strengthened and prevented from springing, by a truss rod.

THE SKEINS Newton skeins are seamless, perfectly round, and take more wood stock in the ball than most other makes, thus obtaining greater strength and longer service.

THE BOX The box has reinforced bottom over the bolsters; heavy side braces; strap irons which extend full length of top of box and turn down at the ends; forged collar rods; and steel angle grain cleats, making it grain tight.

Dear Friends:

We are here to serve you.

We are here to solve your Health Problems.

We are here to get you well as quickly as possible.

As you know the majority of sickness is caused by nerve pressure and the new instrument, the Neurocalometer, has proved a wonder in accurately locating this nerve pressure.

We know just where to adjust; if we do so according to the Neurocalometer reading the nerve pressure is relieved, and you get well. Be convinced. Come and see us and make an appointment for a Neurocalometer reading.

Yours for Health,
