Books Accessioned At Wayne Library

A few new books have been accessioned at the Wayne-city library. Four of these are the gifts of Miss Marion de Theobald. "Children of the Twilight," by Emma-Lindsay Squier, contains folk-tales of Indian origin. The folk-tales of the Indians is vanishing so the legends which are contained in this volume are a gift to literature. "On Autumn Trails," another by Emma-Lindsay Squier, tells of the life of the wild flocks of the great northern woods. This is a story which makes readers leave their chairs. "The All-Along House," by Ruth Campbell. This tells of Colin who has the mumps. When he gets better he goes to visit his grandmother in the country and he has good times with his cousins. "The Runaway Smalls," another by Ruth Campbell, tells of a picnic which a group of children enjoy with their dogs and pony. They got lost and their grandmother finds them but they have many interesting adventures.

In the plan of the American Library Association to promote reading with a purpose, several courses of study have been received at the library. One of the courses is on biology and the Wayne library now has the books for this course. One of them is "Fruit of the Family Tree," by Albert-Edward Wiggam.

Another in the biology course is "Engineer of the Human Body," by Arthur Keith. This tells of the muscles, breathing, thinking and other functions of the body. It describes the effects of civilization on the body.

"Everyday Biology," by J. Arthur Thomson, describes the motion and feeling functions of the body, how it keeps going, how behavior is regulated, how it is related to the outer world and how people grow old and young.

"Our Fore-runners," by M. C. Burkitt, is one of the home university library of modern knowledge. It is written by an authority on the subject.

"Social Life Among the Insects," by William Morton Wheeler, professor of economic entomology at Harvard university, describes the communal organization of insects. The group life of these creatures has interested scientists and it is thought the study will help solve some of the complicated social problems of human beings.

"Evolution, the Way of Life" is by Vernon Kollgess. This is an untechnical but truthful explanation of a subject concerning which too much that is inaccurate has clouded popular conception.

Plea For Abridgement.

Dr. A. L. Dixby: Can a man be spiritually minded and go about carrying such a burden as Jiddu Krishnamurti? There is something in a name, after all, and this Hindu mahatma won't get very far with his propaganda in this country unless he adopts a cognomen less difficult to spell and pronounce. If he could reduce it to his "D" he would be an improvement. To call himself Joshua Krish or Josiah Namarti would answer a noble purpose, giving us a more sympathetic attitude toward the man and his message. But Jiddu! That will never do. It seems incomplete; as though something had been removed from the latter end. There is a feeling that it ought to be Jidduhan or Jidduberry, or something of that sort. But let that go. Mr. Krishnamurti believes he has the answer to the cry of civilization as to what it must do to be saved. If he has it, all strength to him in his efforts to put it across.

If Krishnamurti can produce A theory of any use.

His coming here has some excuse— We need not fear him— And I'll withhold my abuse Until I hear him.

I've never been impressed a lot With purely oriental thought. From occult sciences, smoking hot, Abstract hilloolooism, Where hermits park until they rot, Starving and moaning.

Actions must tell where thoughts direct; Nothing is gained where men reflect. Their lives away until they're wrecked.

Stupidly blinking— Nothing is the sublime effect of too much thinking.

But here comes Juddu Krish—ah, I well have forgotten how to spell His name—I hope that he can tell.

At his appearing, A story that will ring the bell. A tale worth hearing.

"Poker Faces" Comes To Crystal Theatre

The effect of a motion picture on the minds of the nation is a result not always calculated or even considered by a producer.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corp., is one, however, who first calculates and then makes his pictures. For this reason he has ordered his directors to concentrate on comedy.

"There is little good in emphasizing the unhappy moments of life," he said. "Give them good, clever, clean comedy."

"Poker Faces," the feature at the Crystal theatre on Friday and Saturday of this week bears out this edict and proves that Harry Pollack is an apt soldier. He has directed in this one of the fastest and most amusing comedies of the season.

Laura La Plante and Edward Everett Horton co-star in this and the combination of the Pollard-La Plante-Horton touches (each a master in comedy)—gives a delightful comedy on the joys (?) of married life.

The business angle enters in and Horton's wife leaves him and works under an assumed name for his employer, who has Horton pose as his partner to help induce the prospective customer to sign a contract through the entertainment offered by Horton and his wife.

For this purpose Horton finds himself forced to hire an actress for the evening to pose as his wife. Her pugilistic husband is a green-eyed monster and things happen with an amazing rapidity. With all the characters gathered under the roof of the genial employer's home, Laura La Plante does admirably work as Horton's wife. George Siegmann makes an ideal prospective customer. Tom Ricketts is the innocent employee, Dorothy Revier the stressed and Tom O'Brien the prize-fighter.

Kansas History

Newton Kansas: A Harvey county "old-timer" was—re-reading incidents, and the matter of court trials came up. He told a certain liquor trial when the county officers and court room were in the Bretch building. At this particular trial another certain old-timer was on the jury. It was a cold day and the jurymen as well as others wore their overcoats. This certain juror carried his overcoat into the jury box with him, holding it on his lap during the trial. After the judge had given his instructions to the jurymen, and started to consider the evidence against the alleged liquor violator. The juror on who had been nursing his overcoat made a misgrab and caught up his coat inside down. There was a crash, and the odor of strong drink immediately floated out from that jury box and filled the room. Without change of expression the old-timer on the jury righted his overcoat and it across his arm and marching out of the court room with the other jurymen. The judge looked intently at his docket. The lawyers busied themselves with important documents. The bailiff and court-stenographer had business in the clerk's office. The spectators sniffed and giggled. One jurymen was heard to mutter, "You damn fool that was all we had." The accused man was acquitted.

Conscience Troubled Man.

Harrington, Neb., Sept. 1.—That one's conscience will trouble him for 35 years and cause him to make restitution, is the experience of Charles Dendinger, who left an armful of sweet corn and a pup dog on the doorstep of Mr. K. Pollock recently. On the box which contained the puppy, was written, "In payment of a debt of 15 years ago."

About 35 years ago a small boy appeared at the Pollock home one morning with a half grown pup which he offered to sell to Mr. Pollock for five cents. Knowing the boy needed the money Mr. Pollock bought the dog and tied it up until the boy could get out of sight, but desiring to follow his young master, the dog gnawed the rope in two and overtook the boy. In a short time the boy returned with the pup and tied him again. This was repeated until the third time when the boy told Mr. Pollock that he was going on home this time and if the dog followed him again he would neither return him nor the 25 cents. By this time the boy had become suspicious that Mr. Pollock was not trying very hard to keep the dog, so when the dog followed the boy the fourth time they did not return and apparently the incident was forgotten.

After finding the "roasting ears" and the carefully labelled box addressed to him, Mr. Pollock recalled the early incident, for Charles Dendinger, now a prosperous business man, was the boy who could never forget that he kept the 25 cents and his puppy too.

Contemplating the cost of powder, paint and cosmetics to improve countenance, the World-Herald bases its suggestion that the industry is in its infancy on the assumption that there are yet vast numbers who could be improved by becoming steady users.

E. W. Howe says short hours for which organized labor clamors, do not signify one, and that bread lines are usually filled by people who are being battled for more pay and less work instead of for establishment of machinery which to base increased compensation.

The Norfolk Press complained that the Omaha Star devotes the bulk of its editorial page to critical consideration of the Press and its editor, and then the Press reciprocated by denigrating its editorial page in the Star and its editor. Feeling expressed in yards of brevity type is thus about equal.

Omaha schools will have 125 fewer teachers than formerly. Half of the manual training instructors have been cut. The other half will be expected to furnish all the manual training that will be needed. The purpose is to enforce economy without impairing efficiency. Time will reveal whether the schools were carrying an unnecessary load of teachers or not.

On such occasions as the moving of the funeral cortege of the late famous movie actor and the arrival from abroad of the American ship which swam the English channel, New Yorkers gathered in a huge mass to gratify curiosity. Moving pictures of the two events mentioned showed a jostling mob of people extending for many blocks. We wonder how so many New Yorkers find the time to attend in vast numbers whenever their curiosity is tickled and aroused. We wonder if they don't have any regular employment. We wonder how they manage to earn enough to live with so much time devoted to milling around without any worthy purpose.

Charley Bryan, democratic candidate for governor, addressing the state convention at Crete, was complimented with pride, to his gubernatorial administration of a few years ago, explaining that it was more economical than either the one it succeeded it or the one that succeeded it. Governor McMillen at Lincoln, said that after paying the address claims handed over by Charley's regime, the tax levy had been reduced and the saving to taxpayers had been effected. The governor said strict economy had resulted in reducing past indebtedness and current liability $5,000,000. As to road building, the governor explained that previous administrations, extending back as far as 1919, had gravelled a total of 642 miles of route in the state, whereas the present administration, with the aid of the gasoline tax, had completed the gravelling of 2,495 miles with additional roads under construction to make a total of 3,447 miles. The governor explained that all funds from the gasoline tax SIMPLICITY.

How wonderful is simplicity! How we admire the person who is unadorned in speech and manner! Simplicity is evidence of real culture. The man who struts around like an over-fed turkey, and who is quick to acknowledge that he knows about everything that is worth knowing, being so chesty that he can't keep his vest buttons from displacing to people who are not convinced that any one's accomplishments are great enough to justify a feeling of superiority. Bombast is not a mark of greatness. It suggests emptiness and superficiality. The one who thinks himself the finest of self-giving service, and who does the most for society, is one least given to self-seeking and self-praise. He is the best opinionated and the least haughty. Doubtless the president of the United States is easier to approach and talk to than the janitor of the white house. The higher up in the scale of human endeavor one has reached, the freer he is from artificial show and colors of grandiloquence.

had been used for road construction. Reducing tax burdens and making necessary improvements will be brushed over and considered during the campaign.

We notice Omaha newspapers have been dropping sentences into their editorial columns stripped of verbs. We don't know how the public regards the appearance of sentences with important connecting links omitted, nor do we know how verbs, long in service, feel to be intentionally cut out and flung aside, and while we are strong for the terseness made possible by such surgery, we hesitate to extend an opinion on the subject until we hear from Dr. J. T. House, Wayne's former language critic.

In broadcasting pig calling from Omaha or elsewhere, there must be an audience of pigs to be influenced and to give proof of the most effective message or method. A voice with just the wording and intonation to appeal to a human being might seem unimportant and unattractive to a pig. One or more pigs would have to listen in to make pig calling over the radio worth while. Then if a pig, hearing the call from a sending station, drops the receiver and runs, with illuminated countenance, in the direction of the voice, he would be impressed. But if he flings down the receiver, frowns and shrinks, fleeing in the opposite direction, he is affronted and mad. Pig calling without pigs is like trying to play Hamlet without Hamlet. It cannot be the success over the radio that it is in the open field where pigs hear and avoid the dulcet, fetching voice that promises more victuals and drink.

The so called Hindoo messiah who has just arrived in this country, is said to be a theosophist. Our objection to theosophy lies in its belief that people pass on and then come back, and worse yet, they don't know they had been here before. One does not have any illuminating notes on his previous doings for comparison. No evidence of former rating is handed over to show what will have to be done to do better the next time. When we come back, recollection of the past is blotted out.—We don't know how the good and bad in us compare. We don't remember whether we pounded rocks in durance vile or played a flute in the village choir. Even if recollection did not always please us, we ought to know the past if we are expected to improve and show that the scheme of creation is successful. If the Hindoo expects us to follow him he will have to cut out the idea of rushing us back for a repeat performance.

Damage Around Neligh.

MATRIMONY.
A comely face and sprightly manners excite the favor of one sex for the other and often lead to marriage covenants. But there must be something more than good looks to make the matrimonial dark sail along smoothly. Beauty fades with years and aversion of youth weakens under the weight of mounting responsibilities. It takes more than outward appearance to make purest love endure and insure the voyage against wreck and disaster. The gold of character must rise above original show. From the personality that first appealed to the eye must evolve an entity that appeals to higher intelligence. Mutual understanding, sympathetic interest, sincerity of devotion and unselfish and helpful regard will, if cultivated, tower high and strong as a force to perpetuate marital content. Consideration of youthful charm yields to consideration of the fine attributes of soul. Thus is reared a powerful fortress against the breakers of petty intolerance. To get also well fortified, as they agree, husband and wife must comprehend and appreciate each other's viewpoint, be fair and square, win and deserve confidence and make reasonable compromises. An ugly temperant or a hateful, tempestuous man makes hard sledding for matrimony.

Heats the Whole House
To look at Buck's new Radio Heater you might think it was merely a heating stove encased in a handsome, brown-grained, mahogany-finished cabinet. But it's greatly more than that. It's a hot-air furnace that may be placed in any room in the house. Like a basement furnace, it draws cold air in at the bottom, heats it and forces it out at the top of the beautiful cabinet, then sends it through every room in the house—upstairs and down. It's no larger than an ordinary heating stove, but it has a circulating capacity 4 times greater than the largest base burner. Yet it is moved or connected exactly the same as a stove. Let us explain its many advantages.

Social Workers To Hold Conference

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 8.—How far is the average Nebraska man from the poor house, and why does he get there, it asks? This is one of the many questions state welfare workers will attempt to answer in roundtable discussions at the twentieth annual conference of Nebraska social workers at Fremont, October 3 to 5.

In part answer the records show that the average man has little to fear. The aged are there in the majority. Children are kept out by law.

The middle-aged are supposed to take care of themselves, but often they do not. Many of them are found on the rolls of county institutions.

Adequate statistics for Nebraska are lacking, but in Iowa one person out of every eight hundred becomes dependent on public aid. In the past few years alone the United States has spent 40 billion dollars in forms of social work. Fifty-six Nebraska counties maintain poor farms at the cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars to support their dependent poor.

To stop at its source this expensive drain on society and the taxpayer in Nebraska, the welfare workers of thousands of unfortunates, is the aim of the social workers of the state.

Nebraska ranks far down the list of states in amount of social work. The Nebraska conference, composed of leaders in civic development in every community of the state, in a number of welfare agencies, is expected at solving such vexing problems as juvenile delinquency, maternal and child welfare, public health, and poor relief.

column or two of obituary in the daily press. The other was given cross-page headings, pictures of himself, his relatives and near-ones. At time passes, the writings of Dr. Elliot will be read, his opinions quoted and his work remain before men. Of the other, Rudolph Valentino, nothing will be remembered and little remain—he gave only passing fancy. Coming generations will know of Dr. Elliot and profit from his having passed this way; the country had but one Dr. Elliot. Valentinos are easily replaced—just the flimsier as film begins and ends their day; nothing remains when the light goes out.

he is perfectly satisfied if he is able to gather up a few of the crumbs that are bound to fall from the table.

To End War.

Dr. A. L. Bixby: "The Minneapolis Journal makes the discouraging statement that 'there is no way to make war impossible.' Perhaps not as long as professional politicians remain un-muzzled. But there is a way under the sun to effectually put an end to the mass-murder, dignified by the term, 'war,' and that is by universal disarmament. Whenever civilization reaches the point that it is ready to end war preparation, the dawn of universal peace will break, and not before."

Mr. Hoover says we have recovered from the war. But we haven't recovered much of our loans—Duller News.

Mr. Baldwin entered his sixtieth year last week, but still hopes to see the end of the coal strike.—Punch.

COMPETITION IN WORDS

One who goes into the market to buy a motor car today is naturally confused. He has read the words best and greatest so often that they have ceased to be convincing. Where all is best, he reflects, there can be no best.

Thousand-dollar cars have been described to him in ten-thousand dollar language. And vice versa. He finds himself the target in a war of adjectives; the helpless victim in a gigantic competition of words.

And so he is forced to rely on chance—the advice of friends—or his own limited experience.

Dodge Brothers, Inc., have never participated in this verbal competition. They are content with the position they have long maintained in the far more vital competition of honest value.

They have continued steadily to improve their product, not only in comfort and beauty, but basically—beneath the body and hood where fundamental values lie.

Yet they have not unduly stressed each betterment that has marked the steady progress of their motor car toward a higher performance. And when economic conditions or greater sales have permitted them to reduce prices without reducing quality, they have announced the fact without excessive emphasis.

Unexaggerated truth is not spectacular. But in the long run, implicit public confidence has been Dodge Brothers reward, and this they propose to preserve forever by continuing to build just a little better than they tell.

The Non-Advertiser.
Albion News: The non-advertiser more or less of a parasite on the aggressive, wide-awake, advertising business firms of town. Naturally a certain amount of trade drops into his store but such trade as he gets beyond the confines of his own vicinity, comes from the people who are brought to town by the more aggressive visitors. He does nothing to extend his town's trade territory. Most non-advertisers are good enough fellows—but they have neither vision nor ambition. When it comes to making an effort to draw trade to town, well they are perfectly willing to "let George Do It," and

Business

Sioux City Journal: Attention has been called to the business phenomenon during the summer which is best described as a slump in activity that was conspicuous for its absence. It was remarkable and was so considerably everywhere, mainly because of the fact that a precedent was broken and that the development made a profound impression in influencing the outlook for the fall and winter. Instead of being followed by any kind of decline to make up for the lack of a downturn in hot weather, the promise now is for even greater acceleration as the fall season begins. The Franklin National bank, of Philadelphia, considering the situation generally, issued the following statement this encouraging situation.

"The summer of 1926 has been noteworthy for the absence of the usual pronounced midyear slump of business. This shall be more striking because of the high scale of industrial activity during the first half of the year. Notwithstanding the lack of marked relaxation, the approach of autumn already is stimulating numerous lines. The pace of trade at the beginning of September shows some acceleration.

"The present prosperity period has not developed symptoms of weakness. Over-production for business is good. The accumulation of the accumulation of business inventories, stringent credit, commodity speculation with soaring prices, rigid industrial costs and dwindling profits—all these developments frequently induced by property have been avoided.

"The result is a well balanced and fundamentally sound situation, supported by good purchasing power, strength of key industries and improved agricultural conditions. One of the most important phases of the year's course of trade has been the persistence of prosperous business in the face of falling commodity prices."

The Journal has been impressed with the car loadings that weekly, on several occasions, have gone over the million mark. In this connection it is now possible to say that the net July indicated the possibilities of an annual profit of 6.61 per cent. The cars earned 23.3 per cent more this year than for the same period in 1925. The increase, nearly one-fourth of last year's total, was due, of course, to the heavy shipping that brought weekly car loadings above the million mark time after time as reports were made. Car loadings may be taken as an index to business activity, so the relationship between the figures shown and the maintenance of business momentum through the summer season is really seen.

The indicated profit of 6.61 per cent is based on a tentative valuation of the roads in the sum of $21,150,000,000. If, indeed, the tentative figure is too high, then the profit of the railroads is greater than the figure suggested, and immediately politicians would be interested in having something done about it. Meanwhile there is another industrial view seen as interesting in connection with the general business outlook for this country. It is that the fear of European competition, so often expressed by both capital and labor, practically has disappeared. Due to improved methods on the part of both employer and employee that have increased production. Even at high wages and with overhead costs continuing heavy, commodities can be produced and offered for sale at prices that discourage old world competition. Higher standards of labor obtain here than in the old world, consequently volume of production is so much greater that it offsets cheaper European wage scales and makes it possible to maintain the equilibrium. There will be no dumping of foreign made goods in consequence, and America, in all likelihood, will continue to enjoy for some time to come a good trade balance in her favor.
